Sooners and Tubbs leave Bramlage with technicals.

COACH DANA ALTMAN HAS COMPLAINED RECENTLY ABOUT INCONSISTENT PLAY AND THAT THE WILDCATS HAVE YET TO HAVE ALL THE CYLINDERS HIT TOGETHER.

He must have taken the team for a tune-up.

K-State defeated Oklahoma 89-76 Saturday in a surprise blowout in which everything finally clicked for the Cats.

"It was a ballgame where we needed to click on all cylinders," Altman said. "I just wish we would have done it sooner in the year."

The Cats shot 85 percent in the second half and 57 percent overall. They hit 84 percent from the free-throw line.

While Altman's team seemed to possess abilities they have been lacking all season, Billy Tubbs' team disappeared during much of the second half.

"I don't know what I can say, guys — we just got whipped today," Tubbs said outside his locker room. "We got whipped on the boards. Kansas State played an excellent game. They really shot the ball good, and we couldn't stop it."

As Tubbs talked, his players filed out quietly, refusing to talk about the loss.

The loss was the second straight for the Sooners in Bramlage Coliseum. Last year, they lost to the Cats 62-61 in the final seconds.

"No, I don't think the place is frustrating," Tubbs said. "It is a nice place to play. The fans are great. I don't think it is a frustrating place to play."

What was frustrating for Tubbs was the 12 points the Cats scored in just 53 seconds of play during the second half.

"The game ended just there — it was over," Tubbs said. "It took the wind out of our sails, and it was hard to recover from that play."

With 13:46 remaining in the game, OU's Ken Conley fouled Deryl Cunningham while DC drove toward the basket. Conley then said something the referee did not particularly agree with and was given a technical. Tubbs was then issued a technical for his response to the play.

Askia Jones then stepped up to the line and sank six straight free throws.

As K-State inbounded the ball, Anthony Beane was intentionally fouled by James Mayden. Beane sank his two.

Total time elapsed: 2 seconds.

Ron Lucas and Beane then added four points with a jumper and drive to the basket, and an 11-point lead had ballooned to 23.

"It was by far the wildest play I've been involved in with college basketball," Cunningham said.

Two of the foul shots that Jones took should have been attempted by Cunningham, who was originally fouled by Conley.

"I saw Ski shooting what seemed like 100 free throws," Cunningham said. "The ref didn't realize he had called the foul on Conley and I was shooting. Ski is shooting 90 percent from the line, so I wasn't going to say anything."

That one play aside, the Cats controlled the tempo of the game from the outset. Even without those 12 points, K-State was having a solid game.

"Whatever the reason, we shot the ball better," Altman said. "I don't know what it is. Sometimes a team that lacks a little confidence in their shooting, things start falling for them."

"Or, you get a young man who hadn't been shooting the ball well like Ron Lucas, and he hit a couple of jumpers there and a couple free throws to fall. Heck, he looked like he could have stroked that baseline jumper all day," he said.

Lucas contributed 10 points during the win, including a four-for-four performance from the field, bringing back images of his play last season.

After ending a four-game conference slide, K-State steps out of the Big Eight for the last time, taking on UMKC at home Tuesday night.

"It was good for the players to walk out and feel good about their performance and feel good about themselves," Altman said.

"They are guys who have worked hard. It was nice to have a ballgame like this where things went right for us and we hit free throws and we hit open jump shots."

Excellence election voted down

KIMBERLY HEPLING
Collegian

Student Senate voted late Thursday night against having a student election to determine student support for the Partnership for Excellence.

The election would have taken place March 2. Some senators expressed concern that there would not be enough time to educate students about the Partnership for Excellence and set up the election.

"In two weeks time, I didn't think it would be possible to educate 20,000 students," DeLoss Jahnke, Student Senate Chair, said.

Jeff Peterson, proponent of the bill, said that if Student Senate was concerned about the timing involved, they could have amended the bill.

Steffany Carrel, Student Senate representative to Faculty Senate, said she voted against it because of technicalities involved.

"It was not because I didn't feel students shouldn't have a say," she said.

Jahnke and Carrel both said that not supporting the Partnership for Excellence itself would be a mistake.

Peterson, who is opposed to the Partnership for Excellence, gathered 1,350 signatures in a petition calling for a student election to determine student opinion about the Partnership for Excellence.

"I would think that students who signed the petition would be outraged," he said.

Peterson said he did not understand why a roll-call vote was not taken so that constituents could see how the senators voted.

Carrel said regardless of whether or not the Partnership for Excellence is passed by the legislature, tuition will increase. If it is passed, the money will be earmarked especially for the University. If not, the money could be spent elsewhere.

"We have everything to lose, really, if we don't support it," Carrel said.

Jahnke agreed.

"The fact remains that tuition will go up," he said. "With the Partnership for Excellence, we will have a chance of getting money back. Without it, we have no chance of getting it."

Finney says bill not answer

JULIE LONG

Gov. Joan Finney urged the Senate Judiciary Committee Friday to reject or delay action on the death penalty bill.

Finney and about a dozen other people testified before the committee in opposition to the death penalty bill.

"The problem I see today, one of the major problems, is that we do not lead the people," Finney said. "We do not give them examples of trust and honor and honesty."

"Please let us not send a message of violence and retaliation to our children, but rather work to connect the causes of resentment that are festering within their hearts."

This is the most serious social question to address this session, Finney said. She urged the senators to search their hearts. The governor told the committee that she too had been affected by tragic murders, but she did not see the death penalty as an answer.

Finney said her first response to the violence was to kill the criminal.

"But I believe that a civilized society should

Police surprised: 911 service may be used on campus

SACHA HANES
Collegian

Not many people realize that in case of an emergency on campus, the number to call is 911.

John McAuliffe, director of the K-State Police Department, said he was not even aware there was a campus 911 until three weeks ago.

An administrator sent an article from the Wichita Eagle about the emergency number being implemented at Wichita State University and a suggestion of K-State doing it.

McAuliffe said he looked into it and was surprised to find that the campus already has the emergency number in service.

The number has not been publicized since it was first implemented in October.

Flyers providing emergency numbers for on and off campus give 911 as the emergency number for off campus, but has other numbers for on-campus emergencies.

"It is going to be awhile getting printed information into circulation," McAuliffe said.

During a recent staff meeting, suggestions were taken on how to inform the campus of the emergency number.

"It is important to let people know," Laurie Harrison, communications specialist for campus police.

"They are used to relying on Riley County."

► PNEUMONIA BACTERIA MAY BECOME INCURABLE

SAN FRANCISCO — Common bacteria that cause pneumonia, children's ear infections and many other diseases are evolving into forms untreatable by all known medicines.

These new forms threaten a chilling post-antibiotic era that would be "nothing short of a medical disaster," a researcher said Saturday.

In the post-antibiotic world, the simplest infections could quickly escalate into fatal illnesses, said Alexander Tomasz of Rockefeller University in New York City.

"Most people think it will happen," he said. "It's unpredictable when." And the consequences? "No one knows. The mortality is quite high."

The first antibiotic, penicillin, became widely available in 1940. For 50 years, most bacterial infections have been treatable.

Tomasz sounded the alarm at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He is a leading authority on bacteria that are resistant to treatment by antibiotics.

► DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION FAVORITE KILLED IN CRASH

LEAWOOD — Services for Thomas E. Sullivan, who was considered the front-runner in a three-way race for the Democratic nomination for attorney general, will be at 10 a.m. Tuesday at St. Agnes Catholic Church in Roeland Park.

Sullivan, 45, of Leawood, was killed Friday in a traffic accident in Scottsdale, Ariz.

The accident also killed another Johnson County attorney, Phil Cartmell Jr., 54, of Mission Hills. His memorial service will be Monday at the Village Presbyterian Church in Prairie Village.

Sullivan earned a degree in secondary education from the University of Kansas before graduating from the University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Law in 1974. He had practiced in the Kansas City area since then, and was a former president of the Kansas Trial Lawyers Association.

Sullivan is survived by his wife, Dr. Janis Steinbrecher, and a son, Bryan J. Sullivan; two brothers, Terry Sullivan, Pittsburg, Kan., and David Sullivan, Palo Alto, Calif.; and three sisters, his twin, Nancy Ross, of Reno, Nev.; Katy Coleman of Knob Noster, Mo.; and Molly Spaulding of Prairie Village.

► DAMAGED BRIDGE WORRIES LOCALS

MANHATTAN — A bridge that has been closed since last July's flooding has some Manhattan residents worried.

The Barnes Road Bridge was closed after the Big Blue River ripped a 10-foot-wide hole in it during flooding last summer.

Residents of Rocky Ford Trailer Park, who live a half-mile from the bridge in Pottawatomie County, are worried about the bridge being closed because trailers are vulnerable to fires and natural disasters.

Last December, about 300 residents of the area signed a petition asking the commissioners of Pottawatomie and Riley counties to expedite the bridge's repair or provide a temporary alternative.

"Many people feel like we don't have the protection from our fire service," said Lois Borg, whose family owns the trailer park.

POLICE REPORTS

These reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the K-State and Riley County Police departments. Because of space constraints, not all crimes are listed.

K-STATE POLICE

SUNDAY, FEB. 20

At 3 p.m., Maria Emura reported the loss of $1800 in $100 bills at the K-State Union.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

SATURDAY, FEB. 19

At 11:55 p.m., a citizen reported a pedestrian was struck by a car at the intersection of 11th and Laramie streets. Eugene J. Ziegler, 105 Goodnow, was hit by a vehicle driven by Connie Butler, 2905 Hickory Court. Ziegler was treated for knee and hand injuries at Memorial Hospital.

CORRECTION

Due to a reporter's error, Friday's debate team story should have stated that K-State's team is ranked No. 2, behind Northwestern State.

Also, K-State took second in squad sweepstakes at UMKC, one win behind Arizona State. David Devereaux and Taleyne Beadles tied for first with another K-State team, Jason Sloan and Courtney Knappe at Central Missouri.

Cowboy poet

Baxter Black performs to sell-out crowd in McCain

JOHN MEIROWSKY
Collegian

Baxter Black is not a typical poet.

Black calls himself a cowboy poet, and he performed some of his work to a sell-out crowd Saturday night at McCain Auditorium.

"It's not a bad job because I get to speak to agricultural people. We're all pretty much the same kind of people," Black said.

Black said there are many people who call themselves cowboy poets, and the material tends to be humorous.

"I try to make mine funny. I think one of the reasons why it is funny is because humor is closely related to tragedy," Black said.

"If you're in the livestock business, you get hurt — a lot. You get stepped on, run over, smashed and humiliated in the most awful ways. And the only way to handle it is by laughing about it. And I write lots of poems that all stem from terrible things," Black said.

His topics included horse-back riding, bull riding, dogs, trucks and cattle. His humor is similar to Will Rogers and the country singer and humorist Ray Stevens.

Black also commented on the quality of K-State's veterinary program.

But he said things have changed since he attended vet school.

"It's much more integrated than it was before. Women are in veterinary medicine now."

Black is a former veterinarian and cow feeder. He publishes a syndicated column, "On the Edge of Common Sense," which is one of the most widely read agricultural columns in the United States.

He has also published several books and tapes containing his poetry.

He has appeared several times on "The Tonight Show" when Johnny Carson hosted.

Black said he also views himself as a representative for the agricultural community.

He said most urban people were not in touch with agriculture, so it was the farmers' and ranchers' jobs to educate them.

"These are people you meet on elevators. And I'm not talking grain elevators."

"If you're on an elevator it means you're not home," Black said. "You can visit with them for a few minutes. From the second floor to the 20th, they realize that you are just ordinary people with family."

Black said that people tell others about their experiences. "You know, I met a farmer today," Black said. "You didn't touch him, did you? You'll get all those chemicals on your body."

Baxter Black, cowboy poet and humorist, performed before a full house at McCain Auditorium Friday night. People throughout north-east Kansas came to hear his tales about ranch life.

Black signs autographs in the lobby after his performance in McCain Auditorium. Many people stayed late into the evening to have Black sign books and cassette tapes.

Student loses $2,428 in Union

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

A Colombian graduate student's dreams were shattered when the money she had saved to pay for her master's degree was stolen at 2:50 p.m. Sunday from the K-State Union.

Maria Stella Emura arrived in Manhattan late Wednesday night to continue her education in landscape architecture.

Emura had attended K-State from spring 1990 to October 1993.

After going home to collect her funds, Emura planned to finish her thesis.

On Thursday afternoon, Emura planned to deposit the money. Because she did not have the proper identification, Emura was denied access to an account at the K-State Credit Union. She had paid her tuition, but still had a large amount of money for living expenses.

Sunday afternoon, Emura entered the Union with $2,428 in $100 bills in a gray nylon purse inside her handbag.

Emura went into the ladies restroom, and hung her handbag on a hook inside the door. While she was washing her hands, she noticed a woman walk behind her and enter one of the stalls. Emura grabbed her handbag from the hook, walked outside the restroom and called her friend on a campus phone.

Emura planned to meet a friend at the Union and decided to put her purse inside a locker to protect the computer disks and her identification while she was away from the University.

When she reached into her purse for a quarter to pay for the locker, she noticed that all her money had been stolen. She went up to the restroom to search for the missing purse.

After seeking assistance from an employee behind the candy counter, Emura was informed that a janitor had found her purse in the newspaper recycling bins near the Union telephones.

"This is very hard to accept. I've dreamed this for a long time. All I ask is that the person responsible return my money so I can finish my dream," Emura said.

TO HELP

Call Crime Stoppers of Manhattan at 539-7777 or return the money to the Union's Lost and Found Counter.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Legislature owes debt to retirees

Legislators used money that did not belong to them, and now it is time to return it.

Military retirees illegally taxed by the state of Kansas are still getting the shaft when it comes to getting their money back.

Estimates of what the retirees are owed stretch to $100 million — a figure Kansas legislators say would break the state's bank.

But, as Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said, "We have a debt to settle."

Oleen was among 20 senators who introduced a bill that would refund $60 million to retirees during the next two years. This has got some legislators worried that it might place the state in financial trouble.

But it's not a case of conveniently returning the money whenever the state has a surplus. Legislators used money that did not belong to them, and now it is time to return it.

The Internal Revenue Service wouldn't go away just because you said you didn't have enough money to pay your taxes. You would be told paying taxes is the law — and if that doesn't fit your "budget," then tough.

That is exactly the message that needs to be sent to our legislators — you have a debt, and now you must find a way to pay it.

The measure that would start returning $60 million of the illegal taxes is a start.

What's the big deal? It's just a kiss

JASON HAMILTON

According to USA Today, there are 16.7 kisses in a week's worth of episodes of the average daytime soap opera. That breaks down to almost three kisses every half hour.

There are far fewer kisses on the TV show "Roseanne," but she sure makes them count.

The ever-vigilant yahoos in charge of ABC wanted to pull an episode of "Roseanne" in which our heroine is kissed by Mariel Hemingway in a gay bar.

When Arnold threatened to quit the show if they did any such thing, the producers reconsidered. The episode will air March 1, but will carry a parental advisory statement.

I mentioned this in one of my classes on Friday, and no one seemed to think it was strange that the ABC suits would slap a parental advisory on the show.

Maybe it's just me, but I don't think one little smooch warrants a parental advisory.

What kind of screwed-up morality is at work here? On network television, we can see men and women kissing 24 hours a day without any regard to the effect on children. But as soon as it is two women kissing, our kids are in danger of being sucked into a gaping abyss of sin.

Children are exposed to after-school cartoons in which people get shot, stabbed and otherwise abused.

They soak up dramas and made-for-TV movies about war and death and high-body-count crime fighting.

But if Mariel kisses Roseanne, whooooooh boy.

Most people believe television is a reflection of culture, but I think a lot of people believe television is also a purveyor of culture.

I am hesitant to believe this. I may be overly optimistic, but I think most people are smart enough to make their own decisions and not be overpowered by televised culture.

I know there is a lot of evidence television does affect everyone's lives. For one thing, advertisers wouldn't pay nearly as much money for national spots if they didn't think television had some sort of power over its viewers.

But if you take it to an extreme, you get people blaming Beavis and Butt-head for their kid's antisocial behavior. Perhaps I just don't understand the parenting process, but I'm going to assume if children are burning down trailers it has more to do with their parents than with Beavis.

If we believe children are going to be affected deeply by what they see on television, then we need to be slapping the warnings on a lot more shows than "Roseanne."

Let's start with any show that has featured a character from "Beverly Hills 90210." After all, we don't want our children growing up thinking life is a cheesy soap opera in which the most important thing is who is dating whom. They'll get enough of that in junior high.

Then let's brand as dangerous any show in which all of life's problems are miraculously solved in the last few minutes. We don't want our kids just waiting for the cavalry to solve any problem they might have.

Let's yank MTV completely off the air. Virtually every show on MTV features something that could influence children to burn trailers, smoke crack, engage in premarital sex and listen to glam-rock.

Let's warn parents about cartoons. Some afternoon cartoons portray humans in romantic relationships with talking members of the animal kingdom (certainly not behavior parents wish to encourage).

We have to have some faith in our children and in our ability to raise them correctly. Showing two women kissing isn't dangerous. It isn't going to turn your daughter into a lesbian.

And, if your daughter happens to be a lesbian already, seeing women kissing on national television may make her a little more comfortable with herself.

Finney buys faculty silence

Everyone has a price. Our faculty is no exception.

They have been starved from pay raises for too long. Compared to their peer schools, Kansas' three largest universities pay poor salaries.

Low starting salaries and step pay raises make it difficult to hire and retain good professors. Amazingly, K-State has managed to get by with underpaid and overextended faculty for a long time now.

When the Partnership for Excellence, a plan to increase tuition to improve faculty salaries, was introduced last fall, Faculty Senate was pleased with it.

The day the Kansas Board of Regents met last December, buoyed by enthusiasm for the partnership plan, Gov. Joan Finney announced her 1994 budget plan, which included the partnership plan and a proposal to make Washburn a state university.

They, according to the governor, were a package deal. If the Kansas Legislature doesn't approve the Washburn proposal, she will veto the pay raises.

With that threat, K-State faculty approval for the Washburn proposal was bought.

What did Finney buy? She bought faculty silence. Because of her unscrupulous linkage of the two proposals, faculty members must stay silent about any of their misgivings concerning Washburn in order to get their needed pay raises. This silence is often called tacit approval.

Nate Halverson, student body president at Fort Hays State University, calls this package deal "a blatant bribe." Amen, Nate.

The governor should be ashamed for putting faculty members in such a bind. Faculty members should be ashamed for not speaking out against both the political tactics being employed by the governor and the plan to bring Washburn into the regents system.

It is asking a lot for professors to forgo their long-overdue pay raises. Ill-gotten pay raises, though, should be recognized as such and dismissed without hesitation.

This is educational blood money. The faculty can receive their pay hike if they agree to betray — or allow others to betray — Kansas' higher educational system.

The faculty know what this plan is really about. Finney, a Washburn alumna, wants to make sure the financially strapped municipal college she attended will be supported in perpetuity by the regents.

Yet, faculty don't protest this outrageous proposal, which will, in the long run, cost the rest of the state more money as did bringing Wichita into the regents' system years ago.

Currently, Washburn receives some state funds but isn't accountable to the regents.

If Washburn doesn't want more state money, why would it become a regents school and lose its autonomy?

Where will that money eventually have to come from? It will come from taxpayers and tuition at other regents' schools.

The argument that making Washburn a state university would improve higher education in Kansas is ridiculous. If education were a true priority in Topeka, the partnership plan would have been proposed and passed long ago, unfettered, and our professors would be paid as they should be paid.

Even State Budget Director Gloria Timmer admits this proposal is at least somewhat politically driven.

What should be done with Washburn instead? Perhaps Washburn should be closed. Perhaps the law school should be included in the regents' system with the rest of the university converted to a junior college.

Perhaps it should be modified into a joint satellite school like Indiana University/Purdue University at Indianapolis.

I am against the current Washburn proposal for five reasons.

■ First, it's open-ended with no clear predictions about long-term costs to the state.

■ Secondly, it would put four state schools within a 60-mile radius of each other in the northeast when the southwest has no regional university at all.

■ Washburn could continue to offer associate degrees (some 27 percent of its total certificates), but other state universities still could not.

■ As I've said before, it makes no sense to bring a troubled school into a system that can't adequately fund the schools it already has.

■ Next, there's no guarantee that making Washburn a state school wouldn't eventually lower enrollment and raise tuition at all-state schools and increase everyone's tax burden.

■ Finally, the motivations behind bringing Washburn into the regents system have more to do with politics, parochialism and nostalgia than education. This upsets me most of all.

I'm upset even more that Faculty Senate doesn't have the courage to nobly denounce this package proposal as an attempt to buy their collective approval.

I'm upset our faculty members can be bought whenever the state wants to buy them.

Politically correct views of columnist have been debunked

Dear Editor,

With sadness and alarm I read the recent column by a junior in American ethnic studies, "White history not good enough," and wondered what we have come to when a student would articulate such widely debunked ideas.

These ideas are undoubtedly "politically correct," but they are not true. No credible historian would argue the doctrines in our constitution come from the American Indians, just as no credible Egyptologist would argue that renowned Greek philosophers studied in Egypt, that Egypt was a black society and that the roots of Western thought and science lie in Africa.

I recommend he and his colleagues read the experts in the field, such as Franco Yurco (probably the leading Egyptologist of our time) and Mary Lefkowitz (a leading classicist), who thoroughly discredit such ideas.

We owe our students something better than the dissemination of myths, however popular. We have an obligation to disseminate the truth, however politically incorrect.

No serious historian would depict the history of Western civilization, our civilization, as the history solely of the white man's accomplishments.

Undoubtedly, women and minorities played an important role, but those who espouse "politically correct" but widely discredited claims of African and Indian achievements gain little when they propagate such obvious untruths.

'Wizard of Oz' provides answer to grading system woes

Dear Editor,

In "The Wizard of Oz," the wizard, being a fraud, is unable to provide the scarecrow with the true wisdom he craves. Instead, he presents him with a diploma attesting to his enormous erudition. I suggest we solve the controversy surrounding plus/minus grading by following the lead of the wizard and adopting only two grades: A and F.

Many participants in the debate have argued we should retain our present grading system for the reason that it enables us to fool the outside world into thinking that 10 or 20 students, who really have 3.7 averages, have straight A's.

My suggestion would raise this 10 or 20 by a factor of a few thousand, thus immeasurably improving the intellectual level of our campus, expanding the pool of students eligible for Rhodes scholarships, removing much unpleasant academic pressure from students and providing them with the time to join extracurricular service organizations and honoraries.

I appeal to those of my fellow faculty members who have the students' real interests at heart to give this plan their most serious consideration. We who truly care about the life of the mind can do no less.

► ATHLETIC SUPPORT

Fans have got to do more than flash the bird at the other team

Dear Editor,

If the enthusiasm of the crowd on Feb. 9 at the game against Nebraska had been like the crowd on Feb. 12 against the University of Kansas, the Wildcats would have won.

The students have to do more than stand on their seats, throw things on the floor and flip off opposing teams' fans.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Get a silencer for that mattress

Dear Cassandra,

My roommate has acquired a new companion whom he can release his sexual energies on. I'm happy he has an outlet, but with everything good comes something bad. You see, the woman whom he has chosen to share himself with has an uncontrollable urge to make loud groaning noises with religious connotations. She's so loud you can hear her outside and in the parking lot.

I understand that with sex comes pleasure, but my other roommates and I have never experienced anything this loud or fake outside of a movie. The reason we know it's fake is because when he's with his girlfriend, there is no noise at all. This is clearly the most obnoxious and annoying experience any of us has gone through. Especially early hours of the morning. The problem is that none of us can figure out how to tactfully approach and suggest that she quit this behavior.

How do you suggest we handle this situation?

Signed, Deaf

Dear Deaf,

Pleasure comes easier for some women. His girlfriend may be affected differently by his stimulation than his new friend.

Choose a time for you and your roommates to sit down. Tell him you prefer not to hear about his sexual adventures — before, during or after the trysts.

Group keeps students in gospel groove

ROBYN NASH
Collegian

For students who experienced the gospel before coming to K-State, United Black Voices helps fill a void.

"Basically, United Black Voices' purpose is to uplift gospel music and to serve as a church or Christian atmosphere for people who don't have a church," said Adorian Lewis, senior in human development family studies and life sciences and president of United Black Voices.

The group helps students maintain their participation in gospel while at school.

"This is a vehicle by which they can still experience that and continue that as well as give to the community, because there's not a lot of gospel in the community," said LaBarbara Wigfall, assistant professor in landscape architecture and adviser to United Black Voices.

United Black Voices, which has been at K-State since 1968, has sung a capella for the past couple of years because the pianist no longer had the time to work with the group.

"The choir had to make a decision whether they were comfortable singing without accompaniment," Wigfall said.

"Since then, they're more comfortable about it and are not really looking for one. They've proven to themselves they don't have to have one to be a choir."

Lewis said the choir has pulled through the challenge.

"Anybody who can sing a capella, I feel like they must have talent," Lewis said.

The group performs for various churches around the community and gives concerts in the Union and for special occasions. Every Wednesday, the group practices in the Little Theatre from 7 to 9 p.m. Before each practice, the members have a devotional period in which they discuss the Bible.

"We do this as a way to recognize who we're really giving glory to," Wigfall said.

Lewis said the group tries to assess what the Bible is saying.

"A lot of times, we do that with our songs. What is the message we're trying to convey?" she said.

Don't be petty; buy Tom's sequel

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Yeah, yeah, yeah, so greatest hits albums are usually just a marketing ploy to drum up some extra money.

But let yourself fall into the greedy hands of the music industry. Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers have just released their greatest hits album. So, make an exception and buy this album.

This album traces Petty back to his beginning in mainstream rock. The first few songs give you a feel of what drives Petty.

He is in love with discovery. He realizes that everyone has dreams and aspirations. Petty pushes the American dream on you. This is the essence of his style.

However, it wasn't really until his single "Don't Do Me Like That" that Petty achieved total pop stardom. This song is a precursor to simple pop music of the 1980s.

It's easy lyrics and style entice young and old alike.

MIZZOU BEATS JAYHAWKS 81-74

No. 12 Missouri beat No. 4 Kansas 81-74 Sunday to keep its dream of an unbeaten Big Eight season alive.

The Tigers (20-2, 11-0) clinched a tie for the regular-season title with a season sweep of the Jayhawks (21-5, 6-4), who lost consecutive games for the first time in five years.

Missouri would be the first Big Eight team to go unbeaten through the conference season since the 1970-71 Jayhawks.

Fouls, free throws dominate in K-State's rout of Oklahoma

BRIEFLY
■ K-State defeated Oklahoma 89-76 Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.
■ The Cats scored a Big Eight record 16-straight field goals.

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The officiating crew of Craig Grismore, Paul Janssen and Stanley Reynolds didn't gain many friends from either the Oklahoma or the K-State basketball teams Saturday afternoon.

The three called 50 personal fouls, including two technical fouls, as the Wildcats beat the Sooners 89-76.

Both teams combined for 69 free-throw attempts. K-State made 27 of 32, while Oklahoma was 24 of 37 from the charity stripe.

How bad was it for each team?

K-State committed its seventh foul at the 14:08 mark of the first half as Oklahoma was able to shoot one-and-one from the free-throw line. The Sooners made eight of 13 free throws for the rest of the half.

Oklahoma got the Cats into the bonus with 13:46 in the second half when Oklahoma center Ken Conley was charged with a technical foul after he was called for a personal foul for interfering with Deryl Cunningham's shot.

"There was a shooting foul, and the player who fouled made a derogatory comment," said Reynolds, who was the crew chief for the officials.

"The coach (the Sooners' Billy Tubbs) also made a derogatory comment, and a technical was called. The calls were made in succession. The foul and the technicals were almost simultaneous."

After Askia Jones hit six free throws — two shots for Conley's technical, two for a technical on Tubbs and two shots on Conley's foul — Sooner guard James Mayden was charged with an intentional foul two seconds later when he hit K-State guard Anthony Beane.

"They called it close tonight, and we didn't adjust to them," said Oklahoma guard John Ontjes, who received his fifth foul with 6:29 left in the game.

Those eight shots helped K-State hit 17 of 21 from the line in the second half, but the first was better for the Cats as they shot 10 of 11 from the stripe.

Sooner forward Calvin Curry, who finished with four fouls, said the referees took Oklahoma out of its game.

"We came ready to play, but the officials called a tight game," Curry said. "Some of their calls were unnecessary. We can't change their calls, but we've got to forget this, and we've got to move on."

K-State committed more fouls than Oklahoma, 26-24, but no one fouled out of the game for the Cats. Demond Davis, Beane and Jones had four fouls, while Belvis Noland and Ron Lucas each had three.

Beane said because of K-State's tough defense, there will be whistles blown on the Cats as they commit fouls.

"I think if a team is going to as play hard as we do, you're going to get some calls," Beane said. "If the refs call it close, they establish themselves in the game because they don't want to have the game get out of control."

The 26 fouls by K-State were the most this season, tied a Bramlage record for a K-State team and were the most by a Cats team since the 28 fouls committed at Wichita State last year.

Walk-ons play in 1st career Big Eight games against OU

TREY JOHNSON
Collegian

Anthony Beane, Askia Jones and Deryl Cunningham each had good games Saturday against Oklahoma. The three seniors combined for 66 points and 15 rebounds.

They were not the only Cats to get the crowd cheering, though.

Three other players took part in the Cats' 89-76 win over Oklahoma.

With K-State in early foul trouble and later, enjoying a comfortable advantage, Judd Mourning, Todd Schmidt and Ben Warta got to play in the first conference game of their careers.

Schmidt was given his opportunity with 1:47 remaining in the first half.

"It was my first conference game to play in," Schmidt said. "That was my goal at the beginning of this year — to get in and play sometime in the Big Eight. I got my chance during the first half, and that was the greatest feeling."

Warta went in with just 1:25 left in the game.

"All that hard work we put in and to go game after game without getting in, this was a little bonus,"

Warta said. "It is not our job to necessarily be out there playing, so what we give to the team is enthusiasm."

As the crowd began chanting "Judd, Judd, Judd," Mourning was put in the game with 1:25 remaining.

"I thought I was going to have a chance this game," Mourning said. "Practice is the chance where we get to shine and show what we can do. It should pay off in the next year or down the road."

Throughout this season, K-State coach Dana Altman has spoken about the important part these three players have had with the Cats.

"I really like our guys — Ben and Judd and Todd are as good as team members and walk-ons as I've ever had," Altman said. "Their loyalty and devotion to the team has been outstanding. They are really fine young men."

"You've seen them on the bench — they are into the games. The officials had to tell me a couple of times today to get those three guys on the bench cooled down."

Although not a walk-on, Hamilton Strickland also made his first conference appearance Saturday against the Sooners.

"It is not our job to necessarily be out there playing, so what we give to the team is enthusiasm."

A taste of Billy-ball gives K-State a boost

Just when it was starting to look like K-State's heart had lost all signs of a beat, the Wildcats got a much-needed house call.

And it was by none other than K-State's own basketball version of Dr. Feelgood, Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs.

And you just knew what was going to happen.

"Settle down, Billy — damn it, settle down," another referee stood about 15 feet away while Tubbs hollered at the first; the second ref's hand slowly sliding toward his whistle like a gunfighter itching to draw.

And the sellout crowd chanted, almost pitifully, "Billy — Billy — Billy."

K-State guard Askia Jones shot free throws like it was an exhibition, and the Wildcats drilled a Big Eight opponent like nobody since ... well, Oklahoma, two years ago.

And when the OU technicals begin to fly, reporters on press row start to double-check the batteries in their hand-held recorders — smiles all around.

This might be a keeper.

Even K-State coach Dana Altman knew who the real star of the show was on this Saturday.

"You might want to stay over there with Billy," he said at the beginning of his own press conference. "It might be more exciting."

As it turned out, the Tubbs volcano wasn't nearly as exciting as last year, but true to form, Billy produced his typical complaint-filled epitaph to the Sooners' loss.

And it was a short one. The total elapsed time of his press conference was 58 seconds, which ended with Billy petulantly stalking back into the locker room.

It ended like this, with a reporter asking if K-State was a frustrating place to play:

"No, I don't think the place is frustrating," Tubbs said. "It's a nice place to play, the fans are great."

Is it a tougher place for you to play?

"Hey, you want to talk about the game, or where's a tough place to play?"

OK, coach. Can we talk about Jeff Webster's game?

"No. Goodbye."

But Billy wasn't done.

He didn't get to chew out his team before meeting with the press, so they were fetched off the team bus already waiting to leave outside of Bramlage Coliseum.

After a 15-minute session, Tubbs distracted the media waiting outside while the players, under orders not to talk, high-tailed it out the back exit.

In the aftermath, some of K-State's seniors gave their own perspective on the Sooners series.

"Since I've been here, I've always enjoyed playing against Oklahoma," said Deryl Cunningham.

"They're probably my favorite team to play, probably because of their style of play. They like to go up and down."

But Deryl's numbers just go up against OU. He averaged 18.5 points and 14.5 rebounds in the teams' two games this season.

Jones, who scored a combined 58 points against the Sooners this year, said Tubbs and the Sooners' peculiar flair always made their games unique.

"It's always been special to play Oklahoma, ever since my freshman year, when they were ranked No. 3 in the country and we were on national TV," he said.

"I guess since last year, we've really built a kind of rivalry. We won at home and then at their place, and Billy had a few comments."

"I knew what kind of coach he was and especially after those comments last year."

Ski never would say what kind of coach he believes Tubbs to be, but said Billy's obscenity-laced blowout prediction last season was probably the most memorable moment.

"They were funny to me," Jones said. "Those comments last year really got us up to play them."

But Oklahoma never gets up to play K-State and its slow-down style.

The Sooners miss a few quick shots, fall behind, and don't have the tenacity to play defense for a full 35 seconds.

When the Wildcats ran out to an 11-point lead, OU began to lose its composure, and the technical-foul episode was the result.

Even after the parade of free throws, Oklahoma was still in the game, but Sooner after Sooner began to phone it in on their defensive assignments, leaving K-State players open on the wings for jumpers.

So maybe a little dose of Billy and the Sooner Schooner is just what the doctor ordered. A big win, a boost of confidence to some struggling players, and just maybe the Wildcats are — finally — beginning to gel.

Thanks for dropping by, Mr. Tubbs.

"Right now we've got Beane clicking and Belvis and Ron going to the boards and contributing offensively," Jones said.

"We've got D.C. playing steady, and people off the bench contributing."

"This is the time."

If it is, it's a good thing. The Cats have very little time left.

STILLWATER, Okla. — The K-State women's basketball team was leading Oklahoma State's women's team 8-4 at the 16:44 mark of the first half.

Then the Cowgirls took over with a 20-6 run as Oklahoma State went on to beat the Wildcats, 55-43, in Gallagher-Iba Arena.

The win for the Cowgirls marked the second time in 11 years that Oklahoma State went undefeated at home.

The win boosted the Cowgirls' record to 17-6, 8-4 in the Big Eight.

With the loss, K-State fell to 11-12, 5-8 in the conference.

The Cats came to Gallagher-Iba after beating Oklahoma in Norman, 71-70, but coach Brian Agler said his team should have been prepared for the game.

"We should have been ready," Agler said.

"Everyone wanted to do their own thing. We just didn't compete."

"I have no idea why. It sounds so simple, but we just didn't compete. We played on a very fine line. Once we get off it, we fall apart."

K-State would never catch up to Oklahoma State after the run.

The Cats got to within five points early in the second half as a Kjersten Larson lay-up and free throw cut the score to 25-30.

The Cowgirls fired back with an 11-2 run to cushion their lead for good. Oklahoma State coach Dick Halterman said his team's height advantage helped in the game.

"The key for us was our inside game," Halterman said.

"For us, being able to get the ball inside was important."

Six-foot-two center Dawn Burnett and 6'1" forward Amy Scales each scored 12 points to lead the Cowgirls in scoring. Scales also had 11 rebounds for Oklahoma State.

Halterman said another key factor for his team was stopping Shanelle Stires and Shawnda DeCamp to just 15 points.

"We did a better job of holding Stires and DeCamp," he said.

"We had hoped to hold them to their averages (Stires and DeCamp entered the game averaging 17.7 and 21.5 points per game, respectively).

"I think the two of them had 51 points against us in Manhattan. Our girls did a great job on them."

Lynn Holzman led K-State in scoring and rebounds with 13 points and eight rebounds.

Holzman said there didn't seem to be any let down after the win at Oklahoma.

"We thought we were ready," Holzman said.

"Maybe there was, but we play our Big Eight games back to back. We beat ourselves."

"We forced too many turnovers from their press that allowed them to score."

K-State committed 24 turnovers and fouled 22 times in the game.

"We didn't control the tempo like we did in Bramlage," Holzman said.

"They controlled the game."

Agler said his team feared Oklahoma State.

"We played scared, we didn't have any emotion and we didn't have the passion to play," Agler said.

Wildcats defeat Bobcats, run season to 4-0

NICOLE POELL
 Collegian

Despite the cold playing conditions, the Wildcat baseball team was hot this weekend, sweeping a two-game series against the Peru State Bobcats and improving its record to 4-0.

Saturday's action at Frank Myers Field saw the K-State pitching combination of Rob Merriman and Kevin Wicker shut down the Bobcat bats as the Cats cruised to an 11-0 victory.

Merriman, who moved his record to 2-0, struck out 10 batters while allowing just two hits in six innings. Peru State couldn't touch Wicker, who didn't allow a hit and struck out three as he closed the game for the Cats.

Offensively, it was a big day for K-State freshman shortstop Todd Fereday, who went 3-5 at the plate and finished with three RBIs.

K-State catcher Chris Bouchard and second baseman Kirk Franz each knocked in a couple runs as the Cats took advantage of four Peru State errors to score 11 runs on nine hits.

It was another good outing for the Cats Sunday as they outlasted the Bobcats, 11-6. K-State newcomer Jon Albrecht picked up his first win as a Wildcat.

Albrecht scattered four Bobcat hits and three unearned runs before freshman closer Jon Oiseth replaced him on the mound.

K-State jumped ahead, scoring eight runs in the first inning off Bobcat starter Chris Michael.

The Bobcats got on the board for the first time in the fifth, scoring three unearned runs.

The Cats' bats were quiet until the sixth inning, when they managed to cross the plate once following two Bobcat errors.

It was K-State's weekend warrior, Fereday, who again sparked the offense, knocking in a run and scoring on his stand-up triple in the seventh inning off Bobcat reliever Shawn Exner.

Peru State's record drops to 4-2 after dropping the series.

K-State coach Mike Clark was pleased with his team's effort.

"I thought we were real focused, and I congratulate the kids, they came ready to play, and that's important," Clark said.

Wildcat shortstop Fereday, who went 5-9 with six RBIs on the weekend, said he's feeling more comfortable with each game.

"I was glad to have a good weekend," Fereday said. "It was fun. Things are really looking good right now."

JANSEN, BLAIR WIN GOLD; U.S. HOCKEY FACES ELIMINATION

► SPEED SKATING

American Dan Jansen broke his 10 year dry spell in Olympic games winning the 1,000-meter race Friday, setting a new world record at the same time. Bonnie Blair won her third consecutive gold medal in the 500-meter speed skating race Saturday.

► ICE HOCKEY

The U.S. faces Italy today and must tie or win the match to enter into the quarter-final medal round. The U.S. team has three ties and a loss so far these games.

► DOWNHILL SKIING

Picabo Street won a silver medal in the women's downhill on Saturday, America's fourth Alpine skiing medal this Olympic games.

► BOBSLED

Switzerland won both the gold and silver medals in the two-man bobsled race, its first medals of these games.

► SKI JUMP

Germany's Jens Weissflog won the gold in the 120-meter ski jumping. Espen Bredesen of Norway was second.

► MEDAL RACE

Norway is now tied for first in the medal race with Russia. Norway has eight gold, five silver and two bronze while Russia has seven gold, five silver and 3 bronze. The U.S. is in fifth-place, also behind Italy and Germany, with four gold, and three silver medals.

INDOOR TRACK

Cats compete on renamed track

WESS HUDELSON
 Collegian

Athletes competed on the Ward Haylett Track inside Ahearn Field House for the first time Saturday.

The track was named in honor of Ward Haylett, K-State's first track coach, at a ceremony Saturday.

"I attribute all my success on the track as well as off to Ward Haylett," said Thaine High, who was responsible for building the batting cage at Frank Myers Field in honor of Haylett in 1984.

The project to dedicate the track was initiated by Jerry Mershon, a local lawyer and former athlete on Haylett's track team.

"Ward always wanted everyone to be involved," Mershon said. "We went to some meets where only a few of the runners would be able to place, but Ward always found a way to let everyone go and see different parts of the country."

Thane Baker, winner of four Olympic medals in 1952 and 1956, said Haylett got the most he possibly could get out of his abilities.

Baker also won 10 Big Eight Conference championships in sprinting events under Haylett and was the NCAA champion in the 220-yard dash in 1953.

Baker said Haylett would have accepted the track being renamed for him, but would not have sought out such an honor.

"If Coach Haylett were here today, he would say, 'I don't think it will do much good, but they are welcome to do it,'" Baker said.

Baker was followed by Deloss Dodds, athletic director at the University of Texas. Dodds was Haylett's successor as track coach and served as athletic director at K-State between 1978-80.

"He put me together piece by piece and shoved me out the door when he knew I was ready," Dodds said.

The ceremony was then moved to Ahearn, where the athletes unveiled four plaques on the east and west balconies and walls, which read "The Ward Haylett Track," at the command of track coach Cliff Rovelto.

While the ceremony was underway at the Union, the Wildcats were competing in the KSU Invitational Pentathlon/Septathlon.

The women competed in the pentathlon, which consists of 60-meter hurdles, high jump, shot put, long jump and 800 meter.

K-State had the only three competitors in the event, but between the three of them, every meet record was broken.

"I was pleased with their effort considering that they haven't really been training for something like this," Rovelto said.

Gwen Wentland, who competed unattached, set records for total points, with 3,870; the long jump, with 18 feet 9 inches; and the high jump, with 6' 1/2".

Jill Montgomery, also unattached, set the shot-put record and the 800-meter record.

Freshman Angela Showalter set the record in the 60-meter hurdles with a time of 9.11 seconds.

The men competed in the same events as the women, except the 800 meter was replaced with the 1,000, and the 60-meter dash and pole vault were added.

K-State's Adam Milner was the top finisher among collegiate athletes and third overall.

"I thought he had some good events," Rovelto said. "It was a good meet for him at this point in the year."

Milner finished behind Steve Fritz, who was representing Visa. Fritz finished second behind Rick Schweiger, who was competing unattached, despite not competing in the 1,000 meter portion.

The rest of the team competed in the KSU Open on Friday against Kansas, UMKC and partial teams from Nebraska and Wichita State.

"I didn't want to run anyone too hard, because of the Big Eight Championships next week," Rovelto said.

Cary Hudson, guitarist, and Laurie Stirrat, bassist, play at the Warehouse on Friday night. They are members of Blue Mountain, from Oxford, Miss.

Country punks hit the stage

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN A COUNTRY BAND IS HONEST AND LETS ITSELF BE INFLUENCED BY A LITTLE PUNK ROCK?

It's a little like one of those old Reese's Peanut Butter Cup™ commercials. "Hey! Your punk rock fell in my country music!"

Both parties seem a little peeved at first, but in the end, they discover they were made for each other.

Blue Mountain, of Oxford, Miss., played at Manhattan's Warehouse Friday night.

Bassist and background vocalist Laurie Stirrat described Blue Mountain's style: "It's basically country-blues influenced with a little punk," she said. "We listen to everything from early '80s punk stuff to old country."

Kansas City's Starkweathers opened the show. The band's sound could best be described as a rockabilly R.E.M., but still true to its Kansas City heritage, with a little blues influence showing through. The Starkweathers were not afraid to give a full set to the medium-sized crowd, often launching into extended jams, reminiscent of Widespread Panic, a band from Athens, Ga.

A few more people found their way into the Warehouse before Blue Mountain took the stage. The crowd was sparse, but still exponentially more were in attendance than the last time Blue Mountain was in town, when the band played for around 20 people.

"The size of the crowd doesn't matter — you can play for 500 people who don't care, or for 12 who are real fans. I'd rather play for the 12," Blue Mountain drummer Matt Brennan said.

On stage, Blue Mountain

members look as if they are completely at peace. Guitarist and singer Cary Hudson and Stirrat rarely open their mouths when not singing, except to say "Thanks y'all," while Brennan just stays behind his simple drum kit.

The music produced is wholly different than the band's seemingly shy stage presence. Blue Mountain refuses to conform to any specific genre of music, exploring country, hard rock and punk, and even makes a few departures into the blues.

This is a band that just doesn't worry about sticking to any slick formats — the band just stands up and plays, and has a tremendous time doing it.

Blue Mountain will return to Manhattan Tuesday night to play an acoustic set at Espresso Royale Caffe with Hard Soul Poets.

"The size of the crowd doesn't matter — you can play for 500 people who don't care or for 12 who are real fans. I'd rather play for the 12."

FAST focuses on students

AMY MATTOCKS
Collegian

The Department of Housing and Dining Services is starting a program that will help new students make a smoother transition into university living.

First Year Student Transition Track is being implemented in Goodnow, Ford and Moore halls.

FAST Track floors are aimed at freshmen and students who have transferred from other colleges.

The program is focused on giving these students a living-learning environment and encourages responsibility.

Todd Rasmussen, director of Goodnow Hall, came up with the idea of FAST Track in October 1992. It will start this fall.

The FAST Track program is based on the theory that an involved student is a better student.

"The more a student is involved in the college, the more likely they are to succeed," Rasmussen said. "From this theory base, we have developed a program that formalizes that involvement."

FAST Track floors will be the fourth floor of Goodnow and the fifth floors of Ford and Moore halls.

Students living on these floors will be either new students or mentors, who are returning students chosen to help guide the new students.

Each floor will comprise of 30 percent mentors and 70 percent new students.

Every student living on the FAST Track floor will be required to fulfill a set of guidelines.

"We also ask our students to start communication with their roommates up front and within the first two weeks," Rasmussen said.

Instead of having a staff assistant and a resident assistant, the FAST Track floors will have only a RA for each wing. The RAs, along with Rasmussen, will help the students set up their floor policy.

"The whole floor develops floor policy," he said. "We take a more active role in helping the students make floor policy, but in the end it is the students who make the decisions."

Students will also start a co-curricular activities transcript. These are files that document the students' involvement at college both with the hall and with the activities. Students involved in FAST Track will fill out information sheets after they have participated in any extracurricular activity.

The program will also have faculty and staff members who may tutor students in their prospective fields.

James Fallin, accounting instructor, and Jana Fallin, associate professor of music, said they plan to participate in the program.

"We're both very student-orientated," he said. "It's a good idea because most of these students are coming in from small towns and small schools."

Suites are part of trend; emphasize resident privacy

AMY MATTOCKS

Starting this fall semester, students living in the residence halls can choose the option of suite living.

The Department of Housing and Dining Services is following the national trend in student housing by constructing suites on the first floor of every residence hall and offering a special floor for incoming students.

"We're trying to look at what housing and dining services will be like in the year 2000," Chuck Werring, director of Housing and Dining Services, said.

Renovation of existing hall wings and construction has already begun, but the Kansas Board of Regents has not given its approval yet.

"We're waiting on the approval of the Board of Regents, but right now that looks like it's just a formality," Werring said.

The suites will come in three styles: one bedroom and bath; an L-shaped bedroom and bath; and a bedroom, living room and bath combination.

"Every wing will have all three lifestyle options on them. It will depend on the configuration of the rooms how many rooms will be on each wing," Werring said.

The suite option will also provide additional housing for handicapped students.

"Every wing in every hall will have a unit that is handicap accessible."

Each of the suite styles will have one handicap accessible room of each style with roll-in showers and lower vanities.

"Privacy seems to be very important to people," Werring said.

The community bathroom will be turned into a student room.

The students living in the suites will determine how they will use the common space. In the future, a laundry room and kitchenette will be added.

K-State maintenance workers have already renovated rooms in West Hall and are now working in Haymaker Hall.

Hillary redefines role

As the White House's first professional first lady, she sets the standard for which other presidential spouses will be measured.

Her style is different. She is not content to be the adoring wife, as Nancy Reagan was, or the grandmother of the nation, as Barbara Bush was. Clinton is one of the few first ladies to take part in national affairs since Eleanor Roosevelt.

Not that the part doesn't take its price, as the nation debates whether the presidential spouse should have any role in the making of national policy.

Clinton was educated at Wellesley College and received her law degree from Yale University, where she met Bill Clinton. She is rated one of the top 100 lawyers in the country, and is a nationally recognized expert on children's issues.

Her first job after graduation was as a staff lawyer for the Senate Watergate committee in 1974. She has worked in several law firms, usually being the main breadwinner for the family as Bill ran for public office.

Early in her husband's campaign for the Democratic nomination for president in 1992, she spoke often about her policy views, but as the campaign wore on, the "Hillary Problem" developed.

She was attacked by Republicans from George Bush to Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., to Marilyn Quayle. They portrayed her as a radical feminist, who would rule the White House if Bill were elected.

Hillary's trademark headbands disappeared, in favor of a more traditional pageboy haircut. She spoke less about national policy and stayed in the background. And she dropped Rodham from her name.

The nation was shocked in early 1993 when it became known that Hillary preferred to use her maiden name, Rodham. The national media covered the story intensively, and pundits wondered why she didn't use the name during the campaign. She was criticized widely by feminists for dropping the name in the campaign, and only using it again when her husband was elected. Her office contended that she has always gone by Hillary Rodham Clinton, but the press corps who covered her during the campaign said press releases always referred to her as Hillary Clinton.

For the first few months of 1993, Hillary laid low in the public eye, although several magazines reported she had more of a say in national policy than the White House would admit. She was put in charge of formulating the White House health-care reform package, and she traveled the country listening to health-care horror stories and looking for solutions. Since the plan came out in October, Hillary has become the national spokesperson for health-care reform.

Her role in Washington is one of paradox. While the jokes about her fly, and the rumors about her marriage are whispered, according to aides, she still commands a certain amount of respect.

"She reduces people to jelly, because there's a contest to see who can suck up the most when she's in the room. It's just weird. I can't imagine it with any other public figure," a White House aide said.

Some of the information used in this article was taken from newspaper articles and articles in "Newsweek," "Time" and "U.S. News and World Report."

Finney asks Senate to vote no

place a higher value on life and should not kill anyone," she said.

"I believe that society must be protected, and rather than kill these criminals, let us put them away so that we can see that the killing is stopped — at least by that individual, but do not kill them."

"Do not react in haste to this matter. Please, I beg you," she said.

Sen. Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, asked Finney if she would permit the death penalty bill to become law without her signature. Finney indicated that she would, and Bond urged her to exercise her conscience and veto a death penalty bill.

"You and me and the legislature all have a constitutional duty. That duty is to vote yes or no on issues," Bond said. "You urged us today to vote no."

"I don't intend to vote 'pass' on this bill. I would hope that you would exercise your constitutional duty to cast your vote yes or no in accordance with your conscience."

Finney responded that she made a commitment to the people of Kansas.

"I have a moral duty, senator, to honor that trust that people place in me," she said. "I respect your position. I respect the constitution, but I live within myself, and I will not let the people of Kansas down."

Alma Weber of Topeka told the committee about her son, Paul, who was murdered. Paul, a Wyandotte County parole officer, was stabbed in 1976 when he tried to settle a fight between one of his parolees and his mother.

If the death penalty is passed, it would show contempt for human life, Weber said. If you become consumed with unresolved anger, hatred and revenge, there will be nothing left in life, she said. People should focus on their children and grandchildren, and their future, Weber said.

"When I found out Paul had been murdered, I told my co-worker 'No one has the right to take the life of my child,'" she said. "I cannot demand the life of another mother's child."

Brenda Keller of Dover, Kansas, would have been 15 years old next month. In 1991, Brenda went for a bicycle ride one day in October and never came back. Less than a mile from her house, in broad daylight, she was pulled from her bike and forced to a secluded area where she was raped and beaten. She was found in a shed, strangled.

Her father, Bob Keller, told the committee that at first he had wanted the man who was convicted of murdering his daughter to be executed.

But he began to think of how Brenda had lived instead of how she had died. Brenda had loved bugs and was always taking care of injured creatures, Keller said.

"I think how she would be horrified at how a man would be killed in her name," he said.

He told the committee he was against the death penalty for Brenda and for the chance an innocent man might be executed.

"After a life is taken, you can't take it back," he said. "Nothing you can do will bring her back to her family. Not even killing a man."

"All you can say to his parents is 'Oops. Sorry, we made a mistake.'"

"To me life is too precious to take that chance."

The Senate Judiciary Committee is scheduled to vote on the death penalty bill Monday, Committee Chairman Jerry Moran, R-Hays, said. The vote is expected to be close.

Fraud alert aimed at students

TAMARA JORDON

The Consumer Protection Division of the Attorney General's office is warning students to steer clear of companies that charge for scholarship information.

Several Kansas families have made inquiries with the Attorney General's office about these scholarship services.

The fraudulent scheme includes a telemarketer contacting a family and informing them that their college student can receive sources for college scholarship money for a fee.

After the fee is paid, no list is provided or the scholarships listed are not legitimate.

The companies may offer a guarantee to students that they will receive a scholarship, but students may have to prove they contacted every source on the list. Refunds aren't often given, according to a bulletin issued by the attorney general's office.

Mary Horsch, press secretary for the Office of the Attorney General, said this type of fraud is not uncommon.

Carole Walton, special agent for the Consumer Protection Division, said there may be a stiff fine for a person or company that tries to pull a scholarship scam.

"If this fraud proves to have violated the Kansas Consumer Protection Act, it is up to the judge to pass a penalty. However, the penalty can be as high as $5,000 per violation," Walton said.

Telemarketing fraud and scholarship fraud are not very difficult to arrange.

"The people who are contacted come from telephone and mailing lists that are easily accessible and are very specific," Walton said.

Because scholarship information is often free through high school counselors and financial aid offices, there is no reason to use services that charge large fees for scholarship sources, she said.

"If something is free, you shouldn't have to pay for it," Walton said.

K-State provides an alternative service called College Aid Sources for Higher Education to students. The service includes a search application that costs $15.

"CASHE is a software database that includes a listing of scholarship possibilities for students. K-State has used this service for about five years," Larry Moeder, director of Student Financial Assistance, said.

With this scholarship service, the information recorded on the application will be entered into a computer. The computer searches for scholarships from clubs nationwide that best suit the

NATO strengthens threat of air strikes

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — It took 22 months and, finally, the slaughter of 68 people before NATO began to act decisively to end the siege of Sarajevo. The question now is whether President Clinton and Western allies will extend their bombing ultimatum to other cities in war-torn Bosnia.

In view of NATO's strong reluctance to take the first step, there's likely to be resistance to doing more, especially since the United States still refuses to join other allies in putting ground troops in harm's way in Bosnia.

Even while hailing the success of threatened air strikes in stopping the shelling of Sarajevo, Defense Secretary William Perry said he was cautious about extending NATO's commitment beyond Sarajevo.

"Our first and most important objective is to secure the gain we've already made and we will not seriously consider taking more options until we are certain that this one is really secure," Perry said Monday.

"So, those options are certainly weeks away; they're not days away," Perry said.

More warplanes and pilots would be required to expand the demilitarization formula and the threat of air strikes. The risk of retaliation against allied forces on the ground would grow. There would be a threat of deeper and deeper involvement.

Clinton said U.S. officials would talk with European leaders this week about extending NATO's ultimatum to other parts of Bosnia.

He said the United States must be sure its allies are prepared to back up any further ultimatums, guaranteeing that "NATO not undertake a mission it is not fully capable of performing."

Secretary of State Warren Christopher said, "Let's wait and see" if a wider commitment is prudent. He said the emphasis should be on the peace table.

"This situation is not going to be resolved on the battlefield," Christopher said.

For all the hesitation, there's a simple allure to extending the Sarajevo model: It worked where nothing else has.

After a 22-month siege that killed 10,000 people, the guns are finally silent in Sarajevo.

Muhamed Sacirbey, Bosnia's ambassador to the United Nations, pleaded with the West to protect other cities, such as Bihac, reported to be under Serb attack. He said weapons removed under threat from Sarajevo are being rushed to other battlefronts.

UN forces control Serb guns

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — With the threat of NATO air strikes averted, peacekeepers Monday moved in to control the remaining Serb guns around Sarajevo while diplomats turned up the heat for a political settlement.

Immediate air strikes against remaining Serb artillery positions were unnecessary, NATO and United Nations officials said.

Although some Serb guns remained in place after the Monday 1 a.m. deadline, the Serbs were credited with trying to comply with an ultimatum that could have put NATO into combat for the first time ever.

Any more shelling in Sarajevo would meet with "immediate military response," warned Gen. Jean Cot, commander of U.N. forces in former Yugoslavia.

Monday's catchword — from Russians, Americans and Europeans — was momentum: Use this halt in the siege of Sarajevo as a model for a wider settlement in Bosnia, where 200,000 people are dead or missing in 22 months of war.

"The challenge," President Clinton said, "is to build on this week's progress and create a lasting and workable peace."

New contraceptives increase options

BRIEFLY

saw a surge of birth control devices for women such as the female condom.

STEPHANIE FUGUA

Collegian

This is the sixth part of a series.

In a time when latex-condom commercials still are not shown on television without inciting controversy, several new methods of birth control for women were approved by the Food and Drug Administration in late 1992 and 1993.

The "female condom," Norplant™ and Depo-Provera™ all were available contraception methods in 1993.

Depo-Provera™, a contraceptive injection and one of the most controversial methods, was approved by the FDA in October 1992 and was available in January 1993.

A shot of Depo-Provera™ contains tiny crystals suspended in a water-based solution, which is injected into muscle in the back of the arm or in the buttock. Over a period of 90 days, the drug converts from the crystal into the blood stream, preventing ovulation and thickening the cervical mucus. A woman must get another 150 milliliter shot every three months.

The manufacturer, Upjohn, applied to the FDA in 1973, 1978 and 1984, and was turned down each time because Depo-Provera™ was possibly linked with sterility, breast cancer, liver cancer and cervical cancer.

YEAR OF THE WOMAN

A number of women's coalitions objected when Depo-Provera™ was approved because of the cancer links and reports of extreme side effects such as severe weight gain, hair loss, abdominal pain, headaches, nervousness, fatigue, dizziness and depression.

However, Melinda Bowen, a registered nurse at Lafene Health Center, said the women who use Depo-Provera™ at Lafene have not had any major problems.

"We haven't had any complaints. Before they get the second shot, they have to do a follow-up questionnaire which asks them those things," Bowen said.

"Weight gain is mostly from an increase in progesterone. It makes a person tend to think they're hungry. We tell people they have to be disciplined enough to say, no I just ate, I'm not hungry," Bowen said.

"We just started Depo-Provera™ shots last semester. We have quite a few people on it," Bowen said. She said women also come to Lafene to get their second shots, after beginning the treatment with their home doctors.

"Depo-Provera™ is being asked about now more than Norplant™," Bowen said. Lafene charges $40 a Blood drive sparks contest

K-State, KU battle with donations to American Red Cross

JODI WOLTERS

Collegian

The American Red Cross is out for blood.

The Bloodmobile will be in the K-State Union from 9 a.m.-4 p.m. February 22-25 to collect blood donations.

The unit was in Derby Dining Center from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. on Monday.

The Wichita Blood bank has brought all three of its mobile units to campus for the blood drive.

The Bloodmobile is being sponsored by the Lafene Health Center, the Association of Residence Halls, Alpha Phi Omega and Delta Tau Delta.

"It is just basically something we like to do on the K-State campus and it is for a good cause," Sean Lehr, junior in turf management who helped coordinate the event for Delta Tau Delta, said.

When the Bloodmobile started at K-State, it was held in the Derby complex. It is now located in the Union, where it has been for the last 20 years.

"The Bloodmobile has been on the K-State campus since 1961. It has been at K-State as far back as community records go," Jeff Sneed, regional coordinator for American Red Cross, said.

Although there are blood drives in Manhattan, the one on campus focuses on students, staff and faculty.

"Their target population is the K-State students and staff," Cindy Burke, Director of Education and Promotion, said.

However, she said the number of students that donate blood has dropped off since the Manhattan BioMedical Center has been in Manhattan.

"There has been a drop-off in numbers after the plasma center came in.

The money students are paid for their plasma comes from companies that turn around and use plasma for research. The plasma doesn't go to save a person's life," Burke said.

This year the need for blood is greater, because the U.S. has experienced a shortage from the recent natural disasters, she said.

"Sixteen out of the 40 regions in the U.S. are short on blood," Burke said.

Part of the blood-collecting event at K-State is the ongoing competition with KU to see which school can collect more units of blood.

For the past three years K-State has collected the most blood, but KU is gaining ground, Burke said.

"In the fall drive, KU had beefed up their drive and they were within 80 units of what we donated."

"Before they had been 100s of units away," she said.

"The competition has kicked up in the last three years and we continue to be on top, but there is a good chance we won't if we don't get out there and donate."

The Kansas American Red Cross relies heavily on the K-State population to supply blood for this region.

"I think it is wonderful, K-State has been so successful, so long. Blood is needed right here in Kansas."

"The K-State blood drive is a key factor to meeting the needs of the region," Beryl Adams, executive director of the Manhattan Red Cross Chapter, said.

BLOODMOBILE

Monday was the first day of the Bloodmobile. Out of 88 people who attempted to donate, nine deferred and 16 were first-time donors.

79 units of blood were collected Monday.

► SIBLINGS TERRORIZED WHILE CAMPING IN FLORIDA

SALT SPRINGS, Fla.—A woman who was raped and tied to a tree by men she and her brother befriended on a camping trip escaped by chewing through the cords that bound her. But when she returned to the scene with authorities, she discovered her 18-year-old brother had been beaten to death.

Police were searching today for two men and believed they were driving the murder victim's car.

The pair had arrived at the campsite in the Ocala National Forest about a week ago. They befriended the siblings, both college students, when they arrived late Friday for a weekend camping trip, Marion County sheriff's Sgt. Joe Cobb, said.

On Friday night, the men invited the siblings to hike to a pond and photograph alligators. During the hike, the men suddenly began beating the brother, Cobb said.

The 21-year-old sister fled but was quickly captured by one man, who handcuffed her and then went back to help subdue the 6-foot-4-inch brother, Cobb said.

► SOUTHWESTERN BELL AWAITS LAWMAKERS' DECISION

TOPEKA — Southwestern Bell has a potential public relations disaster on its hands, in a bill that would put the giant telephone company's "TeleKansas II" plan into law.

Bell could have taken its chances with the Kansas Corporation Commission, which regulates it and has "TeleKansas II" pending. Indeed, negotiations have been ongoing with the KCC's staff since last summer.

Bell had a bill written that declares if regulators do anything to decrease its revenues, they have to increase rates elsewhere to make up the difference.

"To think by any stretch of the imagination of coming to the Legislature and getting it to pass a bill of such magnitude, which actually amounts to deregulation, was totally, for lack of a better word, insane," Sen. Paul Feleciano, D-Wichita, said.

Even Bell might be aware of the potential problems.

"Obviously, our competitors are not going to say kind things about us," Alice Aanstoots, a representative said.

The bill is before a Senate Commerce subcommittee.

Bell now wants the Kansas Corporation Commission to agree to forego all regulation of its profits. In exchange it will make $138 million in improvements in its network and cap basic local service rates.

► JAPAN CONSIDERS ASSESSING IMPORTS

TOKYO — Japan is considering a plan to measure foreign access to its markets. However, officials on Monday emphasized once again that they wouldn't set specific targets sought by U.S. negotiators.

Trade ministry officials said they are willing to keep comparative statistics of factors affecting foreign access. But they said the statistics won't refer to goals, as demanded by the United States.

Japan's rejection of the demands for benchmarks for U.S. products to measure success in opening Japanese markets led to the collapse of trade talks between their leaders in Washington two weeks ago. Japan says the U.S. demand violates the principle of free trade.

► SENATE PROPOSES GANG SENTENCES

TOPEKA — The Senate Judiciary Committee Monday endorsed a bill that would allow judges to enhance penalties for crimes committed by street gang members. The measure now goes to the Senate floor for debate.

Sen. Tim Emert, R-Independence, said under the bill a judge would be able to double a person's sentence for a crime if that person is a member of a street gang.

Before the penalty could be enhanced, an individual must have been convicted of a previous felony against people or serious drug crime. Also, members of the gang must have been convicted of felonies at least twice, and the gang must have an identifiable name or symbol.

Emert said a group of friends would not qualify as a gang.

Former governor makes stop in city

Carlin gives his book to city, K-State libraries; talks politics

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

Former Kansas governor John Carlin was in Manhattan Monday night to present copies of his book to the Manhattan Public Library and to K-State's Farrell Library.

The book, entitled, "Selected Papers of Governor John Carlin: An Index of Social and Political Change," contains many documents of interest from Carlin's two terms as governor of Kansas.

The presentation was at the home of William Draves, Manhattan resident and supporter of Carlin's bid for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. representative (D), 2nd District.

Carlin used the occasion to inform voters about some of the issues around the upcoming election, as well as to listen to concerns from local residents.

At the audiences' request, Carlin stated his positions on subjects ranging from health care to the information superhighway.

Carlin said that no matter what Congress does in regard to health care this term, there will still be plenty of work to be done in his prospective term.

"The health-care issue will be there, no matter who is in the office next year," he said.

"I'm still doing a lot of listening, and I still have a lot to learn about the issue."

One of Carlin's major views on health care is the idea of universal access.

He noted that important decisions have to be made in what procedures are given to whom.

"We're going to have to establish the fact that immunizing every child is more important to us as a society and fairer than guaranteeing every 90-year-old person their third heart by-pass operation," Carlin said.

"We're going to have to make some tough decisions."

Carlin said he believes there is much room to save money within the federal budget.

"It seems it's only when we are in a bind that we find ways to save money," Carlin said.

"Unless there is some pressure, the tendency is to take the easy way out and only add."

Carlin said he believes the construction of the "information superhighway" will be very important to the economic development of Kansas.

"I want the state to be investing in that system," he said, "with this new technology, you could be in Manhattan, Kan., and compete with anyone in the world in a lot of the businesses of the future."

"This is a highway that we need to be on," Carlin said.

DIVERSITY OVERLAY

Overlay might reach Faculty Senate vote

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Faculty Senate may soon get to vote on the diversity overlay proposal.

The Academic Affairs Committee will have a hearing today to consider the diversity overlay proposal. If it votes to accept the plan, the overlay issue will be considered by Faculty Senate on March 8.

The diversity overlay proposal requires all students to take a course that would educate them on another culture.

The course would not add to the number of hours a student must have to graduate. One of the classes students take to fulfill other curriculum requirements could also be used to fit the diversity overlay requirement.

In a letter to the Academic Affairs Committee and the general faculty, Provost James Coffman said the diversity overlay requirement is the best way to prepare students to function in society.

"Several studies have demonstrated that the proposed approach is the most economically efficient and academically rigorous method of educating our students to succeed in a multicultural nation," he said.

Many courses exist that would fulfill the overlay requirements, and new courses are being developed.

A committee will be appointed that will be responsible for evaluating a course to determine whether it fits the established guidelines for the diversity requirement.

"I don't think it will be too complicated. We do it in American Ethnic Studies all the time," Harriet Ottenheimer, director of American Ethnic Studies and co-chair of the overlay committee, said.

Ottenheimer said she has seen a dramatic increase in the number of courses on campus that students can take in American Ethnic Studies in the 24 years she has been at K-State.

When she began, there were only two or three courses. Now, there are 12 to 13 courses listed under American Ethnic Studies.

"If this is phased in over a period of years, we shouldn't have any problem with having enough courses," Ottenheimer said.

Some of the basic courses taught could be adapted to fit the overlay requirements. Cultural anthropology is one course that Ottenheimer said could be considered an overlay course if it was taught to fit the requirements.

Ottenheimer said many new faculty members have an interest in teaching diversity classes. She said she has seen a greater demand for diversity courses from the students.

Sandra Coyner, committee member and associate professor in arts & sciences instructional support, said some humanities and social sciences courses could be modified to fit the diversity overlay requirements.

Coyner said although she thought there would be a shifting of resources to meet the needs of students for diversity courses, it would most likely happen within the individual departments.

"The provost is planning to make substantial funding available for general education courses," Coyner said. "Many multicultural courses will also be general education."

Doug Benson, committee member and professor of modern languages, said unless diversity is taught in an academic setting, you can't be sure the students get all sides of the picture.

"Students who come back after they leave K-State, have told me over and over they want a few tools to help them understand how to function in the real world," Benson said.

"Employers have told me over and over that students who don't have any knowledge of what diversity is and no experience in working with groups with people different from themselves are at a real disadvantage in the job market."

The purpose of the overlay is to educate, not indoctrinate, Benson said.

Ottenheimer agreed with Benson. "It's not designed to divide us," Ottenheimer said. "It's designed to teach us about each other. I don't think we're just learning about our differences."

Since May 1993, there have been a lot of public and open meetings on the diversity overlay issue, Coyner said.

Most of the opposition comes from faculty members who said that the program won't end racism and will expose students to only one viewpoint, Coyner said.

"I hope that the people who vote on the diversity overlay will read it carefully and realize that it has been misrepresented," Coyner said. "We're not far behind the times, so it won't be hard to implement the program."

Ottenheimer said the committee has taken into account all the positive and negative input they have received from faculty and students over the past three years.

"I think it's at a point where it should be a reasonable proposal for K-State," Ottenheimer said. "I think there's an increasingly large number of people who are in support of a program like this."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Donate blood now; you may need it later

Donating blood is an act of charity that can do so much good.

Save a life. Give blood. The KSU Bloodmobile is in the K-State Union this week. What better way to give to charity than to donate your life-saving blood to someone who may otherwise die without it?

Your blood is needed more than ever because the United States is experiencing a blood shortage from the onslaught of recent natural disasters such as floods and earthquakes.

In recent years, local blood donations have dropped off, in part, Bloodmobile organizers say, because many students prefer to be paid to donate their blood plasma to Manhattan BioMedical Center, a business that sells the plasma for research, not for saving lives.

Although many students don't think they have the time to give to charity, donating blood takes less than an hour, and the benefits are immeasurable.

Donating blood is a small act of charity that can do so much good. Someone needs your life-saving blood. It may be someone's girlfriend. Someone's mother. Someone's brother. Someone's spouse. Someone's child.

And some day, it may be you.

Improve Union now, or pay dearly later

I used to think all the K-State Union needed was a lick of paint and some new carpet.

After visiting Colorado State University to see their Union, I've changed my opinion.

Someone who went with me to Colorado said you don't realize how much better your union could be until you've seen what one really can be. After I returned and compared the two unions, I realized how correct that person was.

CSU's Lory Student Union and the K-State Union were both built in the 1950s and were similar in setup, size and building structure. Now, CSU is completing a multi-year remodeling plan, and they are setting the curve for other unions, like ours, to follow.

CSU's Union has a florist, barber, credit union, convenience store, several fast-food stores, an ice cream store, an activities center for campus clubs and a bar.

AARON OTTO

Some improvements that have been talked about during our renovation and expansion include:

■Work on infrastructure. This includes upgrading the building mechanical systems, improving the sewer system, increasing the electrical system to provide energy for new projects, complying with the Americans with Disabilities Act, and improving the sound quality and lighting.

■Addition of new, non-revenue spaces. For example, adding new lounge and meeting space, a branch of the Student Financial Assistance Office and, most importantly, a new student activities center that would provide office space for clubs.

■Other occupants, such as retail and revenue producing include: renting out retail space by bidding it out to a florist, bank or travel agent, renovating the recreation area, building a branch office of the K-State Alumni Association and renovating the bookstore to exist on one floor.

■Expanding food service, both retail and the Union food service. This includes branding by adding national and local chains, expanding north toward Seaton Hall to create a new outdoor food court. Other plans include gutting and renovating the State Room kitchen/serving area and the ballroom, expanding Union Station and relocating vending services to the north end of campus.

■Adding money for programming in the Union. We have the Union Program Council organized; so, all they need is more money for lectures, comedy series, band concerts, etc.

As you all know, the stuff on this list won't come cheap. Prices for the different renovation plans range from $6 million to $17 million. And most of the costs for renovation will be borne by the students through an increase in the Union line-item fee.

Currently, the Union fee is $30. If the fee were raised $10, it would raise $6.3 million. A $15-fee increase would raise $7.1 million. A $25-fee increase would raise $8.9 million, and a $30-fee increase would raise $10.7 million. Part of the money from these projections would probably go to UPC for programming events.

Now, this might seem like a lot of money, but it really isn't if you compare it to the $5 line-item fee students paid in the '40s and '50s to build the Union. During that time, tuition was about $50. So, the Union fee was 10 percent of tuition.

Today, it is $786, and the line-item fee is $30 — so the fee is less than 4 percent of tuition. This is opposed to the $80 students pay for Lafene Health Center, which is more than 10 percent of tuition. I believe more students use the Union than they do Lafene; therefore, the Union should receive more money.

If we were to raise the fee to $55, it would still be less than 7 percent. That is far less than the 10 percent students originally paid to build the Union. Students at CSU pay $54 a semester for their Union.

The working plan for expansion of the Union is projected to cost about $9 million, which would require a $25 increase in the Union fee. However, there is an effort to off-set this increase with decreases in other student fees. Their hope is there will be only a $15 net increase in fees.

The fee increase alone is not the problem, but it becomes part of one when you add in the fact tuition will probably increase 27 percent for in-state students and 39 percent for out-of-state students if Partnership for Excellence is passed.

That would bring in-state tuition up to $1,020 a semester after three years. Out-of-state tuition would be $4,466 after three years of Partnership for Excellence. In addition, there is always the possibility some other student fees might be raised this year.

What it comes down to is whether students want to continue to pay for band-aid, fix-up, status-quo projects for a few more years and then be forced to fix the Union at a greater cost, or be willing to make an investment to save money in the future.

Aaron Otto is a freshman in political science and pre-law.

UNION DESERVES MORE MONEY

The fee for the K-State Union has not risen proportionately to tuition.

Ollie North still a slick insider

Having already won his fame by standing up to Congress, Oliver North now wishes to sit down in the Senate. That's right folks — North is in the Republican Senate primary in Virginia, and this observer thinks he just may make a monumental ass of himself in the process.

So, apparently, do many of his fellow Republicans. In a piece examining the former Reagan aid's seemingly fragile grip on reality, conservative columnist George Will labeled North's political activities as "a recipe for recurring embarrassments on the right."

Last week, 14 high-ranking military retirees joined the attack. Retired Marine Corps Maj. Gen. Ron Beckwith summed up the attitude of the group with typical military efficiency when he said "We think we can do better than Oliver North."

North's campaign has tried to chip — or should we say shred — away at the officers' credibility by labeling them "Washington insiders." This is rather ironic, considering North already possesses the most common traits of the stereotypical slimy politician.

After all, he's already proven his ability to tell bald-faced lies to the American people. In addition, a June 1993 Reader's Digest article alleges that thousands of tax payer dollars went into his pocket during his illegal activities.

The article also mentions the $13.2 million North solicited for legal expenses while he was making speaking appearances for $25,000 a pop and had a book on the best seller list. And then there's his "insider" new estate worth some $1.7 million. Not bad for a man who in pre-Contra days used to roam the halls of the National Security Council bugging gas money.

When one weighs in the fact North used the powerful resources of the White House to arrange an illicit international arms deal, it becomes clear the only thing that separates Ollie from the elite Washington insiders is the title that comes with the office he's seeking (And a great deal of tact.)

Another of North's ploys typical of politics-as-usual is the negative tone his campaign has taken. When the retired brass came out in favor of his opponent Jim Miller (who also was endorsed in Will's column), Ollie's spokesman brought up the fact Miller had not served in Vietnam because of education deferments.

I'd assume this was meant to justify why Miller is more intelligent than his opponent, because North surely wouldn't stoop to questioning his patriotism.

Or maybe he would. Some of his campaign literature contains a slobbering tirade against "an arrogant army of ultra-feminists, opposed to traditional family values, [which] has captured the political process." They must have taken North's dignity, too.

Just seeing such pathetic nonsense vomited onto the American political process tempts me to call Ollie a sniveling, deluded, lying crook who has captured his own head in his sphincter muscle. (OK, I admit I've never actually seen the man snivel.)

Some will claim North is just as qualified as any one to serve in the Senate. After all, what's a few lies to Congress. North is an honorable man. He served bravely in Vietnam. A victory by North would send a strong message to those liberals in Washington, D.C., that the good people of Virginia mean business. Hell: "God, guns, guts and Ollie made this country" (Actual hat slogan!).

Yes, North served bravely in the war, as did many others who don't deserve a seat in the Senate.

As to the other sentiment worth addressing, it's not the lying to Congress that is disturbing about North — it's the lying to everybody. As Will's column and the Reader's Digest article clearly document, Ollie is prone to making up events and placing himself there to embellish the myths he has created around himself. Lying to achieve political goals is an American institution, but lying to spice up your imaginary life is a mental condition.

If the rational leadership of the Republican party continues to back Miller with all its resources and more people learn of North's deluded fantasy world, the nomination may well float out of Ollie's reach.

But for us political junkies, it will still offer an interesting game of "which is more pitiful." Will it be North himself, or the people who will still try to nominate him?

► BIGOTRY

'Bent' asked all the important questions

Dear Editor,

In this day and age, there is often times too much emphasis placed on concepts and ideas of hatred, bigotry and narrow-mindedness.

The people who choose to challenge these actions are often not recognized, while those who endorse it, such as Fred Phelps, are thrust into the spotlight.

The wonderful play "Bent," which was performed here at K-State these past two weeks, deserves not only to be recognized as a forward, giant leap in the direction of equality for all, but also deserves a standing ovation.

I want to thank K-State for supporting a production that forced many of us to take a long, soul-searching look at ourselves and our society. The cast of "Bent" and especially Scott Maclean (Max) had the courage to ask the question, "Why? I only wanted to love ... Where is the wrong in that?"

My greatest wish is someday each of us will have the strength and courage to ask "why?"

We can make this world a better place when the color of our skin, the God we choose (or not) to worship and who we want to love become of no more significance than the color of our eyes.

► PARKING

New committee offers hope for solution

Dear Editor,

While I applaud the action of Student Senate establishing a committee to look at parking and transportation issues on campus, I am concerned about the make-up of the committee.

I hope the committee will include at least one member who regularly commutes to and around campus by bicycle and one member who regularly walks to, from and around campus.

Without adequate representation of bicyclists' and pedestrians' views, it seems likely that the committee will produce recommendations that are unpopular, unenforceable, unsafe and that, in the end, will discourage bicycling and walking on campus, thus compounding our current parking and transportation problems.

► WELFARE

Government help for poor not a bad thing

Dear Editor,

I am writing in regard to William McKeen's column, "Government interference the root of all evil."

I thought a responsible journalist was supposed to research his column before printing it. After reading this column, I can see that I must have been wrong.

Less than 1 percent of federal income taxes go to welfare programs. Not very much, right? Not to mention those covered by these programs also include the elderly — not just those who supposedly "want to sit back and feed off the high-priced, government-run welfare programs."

Secondly, I can't believe McKeen proposes eliminating the minimum-wage law.

Many of the people utilizing the welfare system are the working poor. They have minimum-wage jobs and simply cannot make it on $170 a week.

This may be enough for a struggling college student (who is probably getting help from mommy and daddy), but it will certainly not house, feed and clothe a family of two or more.

Thirdly, the privatization of welfare would just widen the gap between the very rich and the very poor.

It has come to the attention of the media that most CEOs of non-profit organizations make at least six-figure incomes.

Perhaps McKeen wants to be one of those CEOs so that he can be proud to say he is rich.

Bad habit bothers roommates

Dear Cassandra,
I am writing in response to the meaning of "Hotel California." Actually, instead of alcoholism, it refers to cults. I found this out at a state leadership conference two years ago. Listen to the song again, and it should be a little clearer to you.

Signed,
L.S.S.

Dear L.S.S.,
I have listened to the song several times and think there is sufficient evidence to say the song may be referring to cults. The song is open for interpretation. Thanks for your input.

Dear Cassandra,
I have a bad habit of talking and thrashing around in my sleep. I don't ever wake up during these episodes. I only hear my roommates' complaints the next morning. Please help me solve this problem before my roommates kick me out. Thanks for your help.

Sincerely,
Restless in Manhattan

Dear Restless,
If your roommates are bothered by the thrashing and talking in your sleep, have them wake you up when it is happening. Chances are you won't even know they woke you up. But if that doesn't seem to help, you may want to seek professional help.

Concert to offer charity relief for quake victims

JEFFREY BARRETT

Collegian

An earthquake recently shook California. Soon, Manhattan will feel a quake of its own — only these aftershocks will benefit everybody.

"Shake for the Quake," a benefit concert for the California earthquake victims, will begin at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the Wareham Opera House.

All of the proceeds from the concert will go to the American Red Cross Quake Relief in Los Angeles.

Four bands have volunteered to donate their time and energy to helping the quake victims. Area businesses also have donated time and money to help.

The Salty Iguanas will take the stage to get the night rumbling. The Elmo Bliss band will play second, then Squibb Cakes, and finally Turquoise Sol. Each band will play for about an hour.

"We wanted to do something for the earthquake victims," Marty Meyers, promotions and on-air personality for KMKF-FM 101.5, said.

Meyers said he had heard of other folks around the country doing things to help, so K-Rock decided to help, too.

"Obviously this area got a lot of different support from around the country. We wanted to do our part," Jason Wright, program director for K-Rock, said. Wright said he has family in California, which makes this concert special to him.

Many area businesses are involved in the fundraiser. Ken Snook, owner of Snookie's Bar, is providing the sound and light systems free of charge. He is also setting up the bar.

K-Rock is organizing and promoting the event. Domino's Pizza will set up facilities to sell pizza. The Wareham is also donating its facilities without charge.

But, of course, it is the bands that will make this evening special.

"We just called them up, and they were real responsive," Wright said.

K-Rock wanted to do the event earlier, but finding a time when all the bands were available was difficult.

The admission to "Shake for the Quake" is $4 at the door to see all four bands. You must be 18 to enter and 21 to drink.

"The most heart-warming thing is everybody just jumping in to help," Wright said.

'Reality' highlights modern rock music

ANDREW TOMB

Collegian

The soundtrack to the new film "Reality Bites" features some of the best of today's modern rock artists, as well as a few welcome retreats into the 1980s.

The film is billed as a comedy about love in the '90s.

The album opens with "My Sharona," a little gem from early '80s one-hit wonder, the Knack, setting the pace for a fun and even danceable album. Soon, the album returns to the current decade with "Spin the Bottle," from the Julianna Hatfield Three. The song is a playful story about playing spin-the-bottle with a movie star.

The Indians contributes the song "Bed of Roses" to the record. The song starts like a traditional folk number but is slowly expanded into a much heavier rock 'n' roll tune.

Actor Ethan Hawke (who stars in the movie) adds the track "I'm Nuthin'" to the disc, perhaps proving that he should stick to acting.

Big Eight no more? 4 teams offered to join

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — Texas, Texas A&M, Texas Tech and Baylor reportedly have been invited to join the Big Eight beginning with the 1996-97 season.

The Houston Chronicle, The Houston Post and The Dallas Morning News all reported the story on Tuesday. The Post story was copyrighted.

The Chronicle quoted three Southwest Conference school presidents, and the Post and the Morning News cited sources in both leagues. The Post said the schools have until Friday to give the Big Eight a decision.

The remaining four teams in the 79-year-old SWC — Southern Methodist, Texas Christian, Rice and Houston — have been told they were not invited to join the Big Eight, the newspapers said.

"All I can say is we have had an informal invitation," Texas President Robert Berdahl told the Chronicle. "No decision has been reached. That would have to be made by the board."

Texas A&M Regent Bill Clayton said: "There was an ... invitation. I don't know if it was oral or written. And it has been discussed."

Houston President James Pickering confirmed that four SWC schools have been asked to leave the SWC, and said he was "shocked" that Houston was not invited to become a member of the Big Eight.

"I think it is a very shortsighted notion to move unilaterally without considering what the consequences will be for the four remaining programs and for Texas as a whole," Pickering said. "Clearly, the University of Houston wants to be included in any realignment or merger, or whatever they're talking about."

Texas Christian Chancellor William Tucker told the Post he had learned of the merger invitation from what he called "a reliable source" and did not doubt it was true.

The Chronicle reported that the presidents of Texas Tech, Baylor and Texas were contacted last week following a Thursday conference call of Big Eight presidents and chancellors. Texas A&M was contacted Monday. The Post said all four were invited on Monday.

A conference call was made Monday morning to the four schools not extended invitations, the Morning News reported.

Big Eight officials withheld comment Monday night, but K-

State President Jon Wefald told The Associated Press no deal had been finalized.

"It's premature for anybody at the Big Eight to speculate about it now," he said. "We just have to wait and see. The political situation down there is always intriguing. Nobody in the Big Eight should say anything that would create any problems for anybody in the Southwest Conference."

SWC Commissioner Steve Hatchell said the league office has no knowledge of the deal and wouldn't have to know because it would be handled by the individual schools.

Several other athletic directors reached at home Monday night by the AP said they would not comment on the report, deflecting calls to school presidents. Messages left at the homes of several SWC presidents by the AP were not immediately returned.

Texas athletic director DeLoss Dodds said that "a decision may be coming soon."

The Morning News said an announcement could be made within days by Colorado Chancellor James Corbridge, president of the Association of Big Eight Universities. A message was left at his Boulder, Colo., home by the AP.

The Texas A&M Board of Regents is scheduled to meet in a conference call Thursday, the Chronicle reported. Berdahl said he had heard Texas would work to schedule a regents meeting on the issue.

Rice athletic director Bobby May said late Monday he could not confirm the report.

Baylor athletic director Dick

Ellis said he's also heard about the possible movement, but he said any official word also would have to come from his school's president's office.

The SWC and Big Eight are negotiating television contracts beginning after the 1995-96 season, when the current College Football Association deal expires.

Most members of the CFA have struck separate contracts, triggering serious discussions between the SWC and Big Eight about their plans.

One report says the two leagues have been offered a football television contract with ABC worth a reported $60 million over five years, starting in 1996.

There was no immediate word about what kind of television deal the new 12-team league could receive.

Cats face Dumas, Roos in non-conference battle

BRIEFLY

■ K-State faces UMKC at 7 p.m. today at Bramlage Coliseum.
 ■ During the last meeting of the two teams, the Cats defeated the Roos 70-66.
 ■ After facing UMKC, K-State will play Nebraska at 3 p.m. Saturday in Lincoln.

TREY JOHNSON

Collegian

K-State will take on University of Missouri-Kansas City for the second time this season tonight in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats will try to break UMKC's Tony Dumas' scoring streak. Dumas has scored in double figures in 94 consecutive games.

Dumas, a 6-foot-6-inch senior guard, was last held to single digits Jan. 15, 1991, when K-State stopped him at six points.

The Cats defeated the Kangaroos 70-66 on Dec. 22 to move their record at the time to 8-1.

Now, the Cats are sitting in sixth place in the Big Eight with a 16-8 overall, 4-7 conference record. Nebraska is just one-half game ahead of K-State.

With the Big Eight tourney and the Big Dance just more than a month away, each game has taken on new significance for the Cats.

Coach Dana Altman and his team are concentrating on the game just ahead of them, not those a month away.

"We have so much to do," Altman said. "It is tough for us to really talk about that right now."

"We've got our work cut out for us, but we've got to finish strong, and we have to play well down the stretch," he said.

K-State played well Saturday, defeating the Oklahoma Sooners 89-76, and setting a new Big Eight record of 16-straight field goals.

Prior to the Oklahoma game, the Cats had left the conference to play Western Kentucky, defeating the Hilltoppers 71-68 in overtime.

Altman and his team will again leave the conference this evening to take on UMKC.

"The conference gave us the schedule and said, 'here you go,'" Altman said.

"Because of our trip to Hawaii, I didn't really want to jam all those games in December."

"We didn't have the open weeks in January to fill like we usually do. Usually our conference breaks are in January, and we play conference during the week and non-conference on Saturday," he said.

While the Cats have been playing strong the past two games — shooting 85 percent during the second half against Oklahoma — they will still need to come out focused against the Roos.

"To win like we did in Western Kentucky and then to win today really boosted our confidence," senior center Deryl Cunningham said after the Cats' win against the Sooners.

Cunningham had 18 points and eight rebounds, missing his ninth double-double of the season by two boards.

"All of them are big at this point," Cunningham said.

"They've got Dumas, who just came off a 40-point game."

Against Northeastern Illinois on Feb. 16, Dumas had 40 points. While playing Southern Utah on Feb. 19, Dumas sank 23 points.

While the two-game winning streak has helped K-State's morale, the four-game losing streak has not been forgotten.

"I thought it could go two ways," Cunningham said.

"If we had guys who could make a commitment, play tough, strap it on and play hard, then we could get things done still."

"And then I felt if we had decided to throw in the towel and feel a little sorry for ourselves it could be over," he said.

"We have to come out ready."

WOMEN'S SOCCER

Kickers score 4th place at tourney

JEFF SMITH

Collegian

The K-State women's soccer team took fourth place at a tournament in Lincoln, Neb., last weekend.

The women finished the weekend with five wins and two losses, which gave them fourth place out of 12 teams.

"Although we did not win it, we played well considering the odds against us," forward Nichole Scherzer said.

The odds seemed to be stacked against the Wildcats from the beginning.

"We played a lot of games back to back and did not have the opportunity to rest," Heather Hamilton, team president and coach, said.

Several factors added to the difficulties the team faced.

The team played on a smaller, indoor field and had only eight players and 30-minute matches, instead of the normal 11 players and 80-minute matches.

"It was hard because we had never played indoors as a team," Scherzer said.

The team tied Oklahoma State and Missouri.

"The first two matches turned out to just be warm-up matches," Hamilton said. "It did not matter if we won or lost."

The third match against Oklahoma resulted in a tie. The teams went into a shootout, and K-State lost in overtime.

In a shootout, five players from each team get a chance to take a shot at goal, with just the goalie defending.

The team that makes the most goals wins the match.

The fourth match put the Cats up against Missouri for the second time that day. They won that match 2-1, with Erin Thomson and Amy Massaglia scoring for the Cats.

K-State's last match of the day proved to be the most difficult.

The Cats tied Wesleyan University, a Division II team from Nebraska, and the teams were forced into a shootout.

The shootout also ended in a tie, with all five players from both teams making their goals.

This resulted in a sudden-death overtime.

Jen Deluca, K-State forward, made her goal, giving the Cats the win and the chance to play on Sunday.

K-State's next match was against intrastate rival KU.

The Cats won the match against the Jayhawks 1-0, with forward Jen Dean scoring the only goal.

The Cats immediately played the Nebraska Cornhuskers and lost 0-1.

"We did not even leave the field after we beat KU," Hamilton said.

The lack of time between matches, along with four players sustaining injuries, took its toll on the team this weekend.

But expectations remain high for the rest of the season.

"After seeing the way we played this weekend, I think we can dominate the Big Eight if we could just get all of our players at practice at the same time," Hamilton said.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

K-State goes to Motor City to play Titans in repeat of season opener

JEREMY CRABTREE

Collegian

Way back in November, the K-State women's basketball team opened its season against Detroit Mercy.

The Wildcats rolled to the 69-56 victory behind the play of Shawnda DeCamp, who scored 38 points.

Now it's February, and the Cats are going to endure a three-hour plane ride to play the Titans again at 7 tonight.

"We're leaving at 6:30 a.m.," K-State coach Brian Agler said. "This wasn't smart scheduling, but our staff didn't make it up. So, we just have to follow the schedule."

Agler also said the game is at a bad time for the Cats because they played two games this weekend.

"We have no practice before going up there because we have to give them (the Cats) a day off to comply with NCAA rules," Agler said. "There are not a lot of positives about this trip."

With the day off, Agler said the Cats should be rested for the rematch.

K-State is coming off a split this weekend with Big Eight Conference opponents Oklahoma and Oklahoma State.

Last Friday, the Cats won their first Big Eight road game with a 71-70 victory over the Sooners. K-State then traveled to Stillwater, Okla., on Sunday to play the Cowboys.

The Cats came out flat, Agler said, and lost 55-43.

"We played scared against Oklahoma State," Agler said.

In the match-up earlier this season, the Cats forced the Titans into 17 turnovers. K-State also led 33-16 at half-time, behind a 19-percent shooting performance for the Titans.

Then the Titans made a comeback attempt. Detroit went on a 26-9 run to cut the Cats' lead to eight points.

"All I know about them is from the meeting earlier this season," Agler said. "I know that they are 13-8."

Detroit's top returner from last season is Amira Danforth. The 5-foot-8-inch guard averaged 9.2 points and 3.5 rebounds a game last season.

Also back for the Titans is forward Faith Cyr. Cyr averaged 10 points for the Titans last season, when they finished with an 11-16 record.

DeCamp was leading the Big Eight in scoring but only scored 14 against Oklahoma and six against OSU.

K-State has only two games remaining after the game with Detroit Mercy.

■ K-State takes on Detroit at 7 tonight in the Motor City.
 ■ The game will be a repeat of the season opener, when the Cats defeated the Titans 69-56.

Female condom among recent FDA approvals shot for Depo-Provera™. At most private doctors, the cost of an examination is $35-$100, and a shot of Depo-Provera™ costs from $22-$30. Subsequent visits can cost up to $20-$40, plus injections.

Norplant™ is another method of birth control that is becoming increasingly popular.

Six small capsules, each about the size of a matchstick, are inserted in the upper arm under the skin. The sticks release a hormone called levonorgestrel, which keeps the ovaries from releasing eggs. The side effects are very much like those side effects experienced by women on the Pill — headaches, weight gain, nausea, etc.

Lafene charges $470 for Norplant™ insertion, and some insurance companies will help with the cost of insertion.

The female condom, the only birth control option (besides sterility) not offered at Lafene, is a seven-inch long polyurethane sheath with a ring on each end. The inner ring is inserted inside the vagina and lies on the cervix. The outer ring remains outside.

Called Reality, the cost is $2.50 for a pack of three, and a phone survey to local merchants showed none of them carry this type of condom.

It was invented in 1984 and is currently available in Britain, the Netherlands, Portugal, Norway and Switzerland.

"We don't have any literature on that. If we have patients ask, we do try to find out about it, but we really haven't had anyone ask," Bowen said.

Lois Culver, director of education at Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City, said Depo-Provera™ and Norplant™ are also available at Planned Parenthood, which just opened a new branch office in Lawrence.

For more information about Planned Parenthood prices, call 913-832-0281.

He said the lowest fee he has seen for a similar service is $30.

CASHE has been used by other midwestern universities, Moeder said.

"CASHE is very reputable, but there is definitely no guarantee for scholarships other than possibilities," he said.

In the 1991-92 school year, about 350 students used the service. In 1992-93, about 450 students used CASHE.

Although surveys have never been taken to measure the success of the service, there have been reports of scholarship assistance by using CASHE.

"I believe students should do a scholarship search of some kind," Moeder said.

Another free option for scholarship information is in the form of books available in the library.

The Attorney General's office is conducting an investigation of the inquiries about this scholarship fraud.

for all the people of Bosnia."

Clinton said the United States would renew its efforts to help "reinvigorate the peace process" and that Russia would be a partner.

Russia, traditionally pro-Serb, meanwhile sent 400 troops to join U.N. peacekeepers in Sarajevo, a move that apparently ensured the Serbs' cooperation.

The Bosnian Serbs, who started the war nearly two years ago in a bid to create a "Greater Serbia" with neighboring Serb-dominated Yugoslavia, said Russia's stronger role was welcomed.

Bosnian Premier Haris Silajdzic, who met Secretary of State Warren Christopher in Washington on Monday, said nothing is the same after the NATO ultimatum.

"We have a long way to go, but we believe that this is the first step toward the peace because it restores the balance of power in Bosnia," he said.

"Celebrate this victory and don't be afraid any more," Bosnia's Muslim President Alija Izetbegovic said on national TV. The removal of Serb guns is "first in a line of good things that will happen in Sarajevo," he said.

Politics may join info highway

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — With the stroke of a computer key, the public could study on a timely basis the way political candidates raise and spend donations.

The Federal Election Commission is asking Congress for $1.5 million in fiscal 1995 to set up that kind of system, with the goal of eliminating a blizzard of paper.

The first step in the plan is to require political committees to file their reports in a form computers can read.

Going all out with computers would make the data available in 48 hours.

The FEC computerizes only the donation records and not the spending records. That makes it virtually impossible to study the spending trends and patterns of some 7,000 political committees.

"This is an incredible weakness of the FEC reporting now," said Ellen Miller, executive director of the Center for Responsive Politics, a watchdog group that makes intensive use of campaign finance records.

A new system would also allow the FEC to triple the information it puts on computers to 1.5 billion characters from the present 500 million.

"Since the whole cornerstone of federal election laws is the money spent on campaigns, it is terribly important that the disclosure be as rapid as possible," FEC Chairman Trevor Potter said.

Potter said the FEC has moved cautiously because of the need to set up standards for getting information from the 7,000 committees.

5 officials hurt despite peace in Sarajevo

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Artillery fire wounded five U.N. peacekeepers Tuesday near the besieged city of Tuzla, one of the still-volatile areas across Bosnia where diplomats plan to extend a NATO-enforced peace.

Senior U.S., Russian and European envoys meeting in Germany decided the cease-fire model that has allowed Sarajevo residents to walk city streets again should be extended to other beleaguered Bosnian towns.

But Russia blocked consideration of any new NATO ultimatums to enforce cease-fires outside the capital. The diplomats also agreed to push Bosnia's three warring factions — Muslims, Serbs and Croats — toward an agreement to end the 22-month war by dividing Bosnia into three states.

The talks move Wednesday to Croatia.

In Moscow, President Boris Yeltsin proposed a meeting with leaders of the United States, France, Britain and Germany to work out a political settlement in Bosnia. There was no immediate response from those countries.

Tuzla, held by Muslim-led Bosnian government forces, is one of several places where fighting continues while Sarajevo, 50 miles to the south, is quiet.

U.N. troops hoped to open Tuzla airport March 7 for aid flights to central Bosnia, said Kofi Annan, the head of U.N. peacekeeping operations. But Serb-led Yugoslavia objected, saying the airport is too close to Yugoslavia. Tuzla is 25 miles west of the Yugoslav border.

In Bonn, Vitaly Churkin, Russia's special envoy for former Yugoslavia, promised to use his influence with the Serbs to get Tuzla airport opened, a longtime demand of Western governments.

The five Swedish peacekeepers were wounded while patrolling in U.N. armored personnel carriers in Ribnica, 20 miles southwest of Tuzla. Artillery shells wounded two Swedes, and a second attack wounded three more, said Squadron Leader David Fillingham, a U.N. representative in Kiseljak. He said the wounds were not life-threatening.

Students should take note of March 15 financial assistance deadline

BRIEFLY
The priority deadline to file for financial aid is March 15.

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

You've filed your taxes, finished a physics paper and called your mom. But if you feel that you have forgotten something, you may need to fill out the paperwork for financial aid.

The priority deadline to file for financial aid is March 15, and Larry Moeder, director of Student Financial Assistance, said financial aid applications are the last things on students' minds.

"Students have so many things to deal with to fit into their schedule that their main concern is just getting through the semester," he said. "They really don't begin to think about filling out the financial-aid applications until the semester is over."

Waiting until after March 15 may be too late to apply for certain kinds of financial assistance, such as college work study and Perkins loans, he said.

About 1,300 K-State students have had their applications completely processed so far, Julie Esau, assistant director of financial assistance, said.

Students and their parents need to be sure to fill out their applications properly, Moeder said.

"With the applications that we have received thus far, our biggest problem is that students are filling everything out fine, but they aren't checking a box that indicates that they want their records sent to the schools," he said.

Moeder said the application has a space to write the name of the school the student is planning to attend.

Next to that line is a column that says, "Same for 1994-95?" Moeder said the student should be sure to check that box in order to ensure the form is processed as quickly and as easily as possible.

In the 1993 session, Congress passed laws that have made the process easier and have cut down the amount of paper work that students and parents fill out.

"An application that was eight pages long has been cut down to four pages, and they also have a renewal application this year, which I hope has made the process much easier and faster," Moeder said.

The renewal application is the latest in a trend to make the financial-aid process simpler.

If students qualified for financial aid last year, they will receive an application already filled out with the information from the previous year.

The student simply checks over it and corrects anything that may have changed in the past year.

After filling out the application for financial aid, the student then needs to send it to the federal processor.

The federal processor will then send the student a student aid report (SAR), which restates the information for verification. Students need to sign the SAR and return it to the federal processor.

The processor will then send the information to the school, and students will receive an award letter, which lets them know the award or awards for which they are eligible.

"The student has two weeks to decide if he or she wants to accept the financial aid awarded to them," Moeder said.

ADS INFLUENCE YOUNG SMOKERS

NEW YORK — Cigarette advertisements aimed at women in the 1960s enticed underage girls to begin smoking.

This is fresh evidence that tobacco ads create demand among children, researchers said Tuesday.

A study found a jump in rates at which girls younger than 18 began smoking around 1967.

That was the time when advertising began targeting specific cigarettes for women.

The work is a crucial extension of prior research that showed a cartoon character used to advertise Camel cigarettes was widely recognized by children, said study co-author John Pierce.

Earlier research suggested that advertising could encourage children to start smoking.

Pierce said in an interview, "We had to establish the link between advertising and the uptake of smoking among minors."

Classes evacuated as result of bomb threats on campus

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

An on-campus caller reported a bomb threat to four buildings on campus Tuesday at about 10 a.m.

The person called the Riley County Police Department's 911 number and reported bomb threats for the K-State Union and Waters, Dickens and Leasure halls.

The threat was then routed to campus police, Annette Boddy, campus police keyboard operator, said.

It wasn't necessary for the buildings to be evacuated, however, because the caller did not say when the bombs would go off, Lt. Robert Mellgren said.

The geography and statistics classes evacuated Dickens Hall as a precaution, Pam Schierer, business manager for the statistics department, said.

A few department heads in the buildings were contacted about the situation.

Courtesy searches by some staffs were done as well.

The police have been unable to trace the call because of difficulty tracing on-campus numbers, Mellgren said.

► MOURNERS COUNTER PHELPS' FUNERAL PICKET

SAN FRANCISCO — More than 1,000 mourners gathered on Tuesday to honor pioneering gay journalist Randy Shilts and to counter picketing by members of a fundamentalist Kansas church.

Shilts, a reporter for the San Francisco Chronicle who began covering the scourge of AIDS before it had a name, died last Wednesday of the disease he wrote about in news stories and in books.

As ranks of riot-clad police stood guard in the streets around Glide Memorial Church, a throng estimated by authorities at more than 1,000 milled outside, many carrying signs opposing the Rev. Fred Phelps, minister of the Westboro Baptist Church and Library in Topeka.

But the threatened protest lasted about 30 seconds. About a dozen Phelps supporters arrived at 1:20 p.m., about 20 minutes after the service started, carrying signs bearing such slogans as "Shilts in Hell" and "Fags burn in hell."

They were greeted with a deafening chorus of boos and a few eggs and pieces of fruit and quickly fled in vans parked nearby, with a police escort.

► CLINTON WANTS FLEXIBILITY IN ABORTION FUNDING

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration, which wants to revoke the congressional ban on federally funded abortions, would use foreign aid for abortions only in limited circumstances, Agency for International Development Director Brian Atwood said Tuesday.

The administration wants the flexibility to provide funds to treat women who have been raped or had botched abortions, which may mean performing an abortion.

It also wants to include abortion in family planning counseling, Atwood said at a government-sponsored population conference.

An aide said pregnancies resulting from incest also would be considered for U.S.-funded abortions.

"Every case could be different," Atwood said later at a news conference. "We would like to get a lot more flexibility."

He called abortion the "worst method of reproductive choice," but said a woman should have the right to make that choice.

"Increasing access to contraceptive information and service is our first line of approach to addressing the tragedy of unsafe abortion," he said.

► COUPLE ARRESTED FOR ESPIONAGE

WASHINGTON — A former head of Soviet counter-intelligence for the CIA and his wife were arrested on charges of spying for the former Soviet Union and later Russia since 1985 and receiving more than $1.5 million, the Justice Department announced Tuesday.

Aldrich Hazen Ames, 52, and his Colombian-born wife, Maria del Rosario Casas Ames, 41, arrested Monday by the FBI, appeared Tuesday before a federal magistrate in nearby Alexandria, Va., federal authorities said.

President Clinton told reporters it was a very serious case and said the United States would immediately file a protest with the Russian government.

"I congratulate the FBI and the CIA for the work they did in cracking it," he said. "We will be immediately lodging a protest to the Russian government, and because of the nature of the case, there is really nothing more I can say at this time."

At 8:41 p.m., a major-damage, minor-injury accident occurred between Artista Pittman, 1122 Kearney Apt. 7, and James Shanteau, 133 N. 15th St. Shanteau complained of head pain, and passengers Doreen and Jill Shanteau complained of back pain.

CLARIFICATION

A graphic on the Opinion Page yesterday said in-state tuition would increase 27 percent and out-of-state tuition would increase 39 percent next year as part of the Partnership for Excellence plan. It should have said in-state tuition would increase 9 percent next year, which would be an estimated 27-percent increase compounded over the three years of the partnership. Out-of-state tuition would increase 13 percent next year, which would be an estimated 39-percent increase compounded over three years. The Collegian regrets the errors.

Quality of a DONOR

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

11:30 a.m.

After taking a grueling eight-page test I'd stayed up half the night studying for and probably failed, I mentally girded my loins for my first time donating blood.

Four-plus years at K-State and I'd never participated in a blood drive. Sure I'd had opportunity, but I'm a hypophobic, that is, a person with a fear of hypodermic needles (my own creation, I'm proud to say).

But this year, I thought, it's time to put cowardice and selfishness behind me. I'm an adult, my blood could save lives and KU is in danger of kicking our hemoglobin all the way to the blood bank.

At 11:30, two nice ladies were on the second floor of the K-State Union to congratulate me on my first time as a donor. Lois Hartley, one of the Red Cross volunteers, gave me a sticker with a bright red tombstone on it that said, "Be nice to me. It's my 1st donation." She said they'd be gentle with me inside if I showed them the sticker.

The volunteers showed me the forms to read and which parts to fill out and which to leave blank. I sat down to read "What you must know before giving blood."

Michael Hoffman, freshman in civil engineering, donates blood in the Union Tuesday.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

It went through the donating process step by step, assuring me I could not be infected with HIV and describing the "brief 'sting.'"

Then followed a list of things you should not have done if you want to donate blood, including shooting up with drugs, having sex for money since 1977, being tested positive for any AIDS virus or having had sex with anyone who might have had sex with anyone who did all of the above.

After ascertaining that I had not done drugs or had sex since 1977, I went to the first station to have my blood pressure checked. There I suffered a minor setback when I couldn't push my sleeve up far enough to get the constrictor cuff on my upper arm. Lina Brooks, L.P.N., said I might have to don a hospital gown, so I yanked that flannel sleeve up as far as it could go, and Brooks managed to take the vital sign. The results were inconclusive, however. Darn.

They sent me on to sit behind a screen, and another nurse took my blood pressure again. This time it registered.

The nurse then wanted to prick my earlobe. When I flinched, she asked me if I was sure I wanted to go through with it. I didn't want to flinch like that during the real thing, she said. But, having gone this far, I refused to turn back.

So my ear was pricked, and my iron was tested and judged to be just right. Once more I answered questions about my medical history and lifestyle and was given bar code stickers to put on my donor form. The bar code system is for anonymity and to make sure the blood is safe, the nurse said.

I went behind a blue screen and affixed a bar code to my form.

12:08 p.m.

Volunteer Virginia Mitchell gave me a glass of orange juice to drink.

12:18 p.m.

"Next!" I walked into the bloodletting room. Empty blood bags lay on a table like sinister beached jellyfish. Donors lounged on pool furniture, only there was no pool, just the silent ebb and flow of vital fluids. Oh, the irony.

12:22 p.m.

A nurse, Nancy Davis, put another blood pressure cuff on my arm and gave me a little red ball with a ring on it. She touched my vein with her cold finger, and I jumped. She swabbed my arm with a sickly yellow wash, and I jumped. She swabbed it again with an even sicker yellow iodine, and I jumped. She got the idea that I was jumpy.

Just before she plunged the needle into my vein, I gasped out, "Are you a registered phlebotomist?" She assured me she was. Then I dug my fingernails into my neck to counterbalance the pain as she drove home the needle.

After I recovered from the agony, it was pretty cool to watch my hot, red blood fill the bag. I realized I had better squeeze it out in record time if I wanted to make it to class.

12:45 p.m.

The volunteers gave me more orange juice and a donut to recover my strength. They wanted me to stay for 15 minutes before I left, but I figured it would be better to annoy the nice volunteers than the professor of the class I was late for.

But before I left, I stuck my shiny blood globule pin in my shirt proudly. For once, I was late for a good cause.

Students help towns in need

ALIE BRESADOLA

Collegian

If small Kansas towns need help with aspects of community life, they can look to K-State for help.

K-State offers a community-service program that is utilized by small communities for help and K-State students for experience.

Towns struggling with community problems apply through the K-State Community Service Program each summer for the following summer. Students wanting involvement apply during the fall.

"It's a very competitive application process," Mark Ray, senior in speech and student coordinator for Kansas Summer Teams, said.

"The communities come up with projects and solicit us," he said.

For eight weeks, students live in the community with host families. By actually being a part of the community, the students work very closely with town members and it helps things go smoothly, Ray said.

The students selected for the summer teams prepare for the road ahead with a community service seminar and they do preliminary work.

"The work they do is a crash course in strategic planning. They do site visits twice during the semester. They do an in-depth community profile, and this gives them the insight they need into the town."

"They learn what makes the town tick, what's important to them, their values," he said.

This is so the students can accomplish the goals they set for their town, Ray said.

The projects and goals vary greatly from town to town — anywhere from redesigning the downtown area to helping with their newspaper.

Troy Bolander, second-year graduate student in regional and community planning, worked on last year's summer team.

His team went to White Cloud, to help set up a historical district.

"White Cloud is rich in history, and they wanted us to come in to capture and promote that history. The town is starting to die out, and they felt tourism could save it," Bolander said.

TO GET INVOLVED:

If anyone is interested in the K-State Community Service Program, call Mark Ray at 532-6888.

The work his team did—housing inventories, researching and finding the significance of the buildings—has been approved by the town's city council and its tourism committee.

However, the town is still waiting for approval from the state, and if it gets that, then White Cloud automatically goes to the National Register to be approved as a historical site, Bolander said.

This summer, the program's seventh season, there will be four teams going out, each with five students.

"There are four students from the University, and one international student, usually from Mexico or Costa Rica," he said.

At one time, only K-State students were on the teams.

"It's starting to become an exchange," Ray said.

Kristen Bailey, senior in art education, is one of the students preparing to go this summer.

Her team is going to help the town of Almena with its newspaper.

"We are going there to re-start the paper. The lady who used to run it quit in 1990, and they need a lot of help."

"They don't even have computers to run their paper," Bailey said.

Her team is going to bring in the computers, teach the community, and gradually step back, so that when they leave, the town won't be at a loss, she said.

"I am very excited about this. It's going to be a good experience, and I would recommend it to anyone," she said.

OPINION

FEBRUARY 23, 1994

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Texas to break up Big Eight family

Look who's coming to dinner. Gas guzzlers and 10-gallon hats. "Don't Mess with Texas" stickers. Rednecks from hell, like Oklahoma squared.

Grab a glass and squeeze your honey. It's time to raise a toast and wax nostalgic for the late, great Big Eight Conference.

A league second to none, at least since K-State joined it in 1913, has just two years left on the meter.

Monday, our conference presidents officially invited four universities from the Southwest Conference — Texas, Texas A&M, Baylor and Texas Tech — to join our fair league.

Spurred by recent negotiations over a TV contract for football, the presidents have decided the best way for the league to thrive is to add schools that will bring viewers with them.

And look who's coming to dinner.

Gas guzzlers and 10-gallon hats. "Don't Mess with Texas" stickers. Rednecks from hell, like Oklahoma squared.

Big Eight, RIP.

Now, there are so many unanswered questions: First, what do you call this new league? "The Big 12?" "The Big Southwest?" "The Conference of Really, Really Flat Midwestern States?"

But once upon a time, say, oh ... five years ago, K-State would have been where Texas Christian, Houston, Southern Methodist and Rice may soon be — out on the street.

A conference is like a family. It gives us a sense of self and our place in the Big Picture.

But until recently, K-State was so athletically pathetic that the other schools in the Big Eight talked about kicking us out.

Imagine the effect of comparing ourselves with those Bradley Braves and the Wichita State Shockers of the Missouri Valley Conference.

That was the shape of things to come.

But K-State picked the best time to hire a good football coach, build nice facilities and have its best season in 83 years.

It's hard to kick us out of the conference when we're holding the can of whoop-ass. Stick out your chests, Wildcats.

And now we'll get a reward — a big helping of the $70-million TV pie.

Competition-wise, the Big Eight could have picked better. Only A&M and Texas Tech made it to bowl games last season. Tech got drilled by Oklahoma in the Hancock Bowl; A&M is going on probation.

In basketball, Texas may be the only team to get in the NCAA tournament this season. It's like inviting in a bunch of Colorados.

The schools have yet to accept the offer, but it smells almost like a done deal. In the meantime, there are lots of important things to be sorted out.

Where the heck is Baylor, anyway? How far is a Manhattan-to-Austin road trip? How about calling it the "Big Eight plus the Four Rednecks?" Welcome to the Brave New World.

But it sure beats figuring out which schools are in the Missouri Valley.

It's time to go on the offense against crime

We hear a lot about what defensive measures should be taken to stop crime, but we hear almost no ideas about any offensive measures.

By defensive, I'm referring to programs such as those proposed by President Clinton in his recent State of the Union address. He promised to build additional prisons, pledged to hire an additional 100,000 cops and proposed a "three-strikes-and-you're-out" policy of life sentences for three-time offenders.

These programs are designed to protect our nation. But protect us from what? Clearly, the menace of crime. This sounds obvious and reasonable, but these proposals, which differ little in spirit from every other piece of crime legislation, confront the problem after the fact. We need to consider what we can do before the fact and prevent crime from happening in the first place.

To clarify this point about the way our country confronts crime, consider an America of decent, upstanding citizens whose only vice is driving 150 miles per hour on the highways. Instead of encouraging citizens to change their reckless driving habits, which often lead to fatal accidents, the government sets off on a crusade to implement an elaborate and grossly expensive program of protecting the nation by, for example, stacking millions of crash-proof hay bales along I-70.

The truth is no amount of government protection can effectively insulate the public from crime.

That is, assuming we don't want to live in a police state.

The state has gone to great lengths to protect us from crime. The prison population has tripled since the 1960s, but violent crime has increased 560 percent during the same period, according to Department of Justice figures.

The government has failed to protect us from crime. However, they aren't the ones to blame; it's the public. We've asked the government to do what it can't do and what we don't seem to be willing to do ourselves.

Criminals don't pop out of thin air. They are products of their environments. The environment that plays the most dominant role in shaping people is not their economic or social conditions but their soul, out of which grows their character, values, attitudes, sense of purpose or sense of hopelessness. These factors determine whether a person will lead a life of crime.

Because the root cause of crime is in the spirit or a sense of despair, that is where solutions should first be tried.

Prison Fellowship, a volunteer organization, has helped transform the lives of countless prisoners for the better. Of the convicts involved in the organization, less than 10 percent became repeat offenders, as compared to a recidivism rate of 70 percent and above for most government programs.

Prison Fellowship's Charles Colson thinks penal policy should require inmates to attend school and undergo drug treatment so that they can have the opportunity to do something productive for themselves and society. At the very least, this approach will give inmates a sense of hope — a rare commodity among criminals.

Our nation is sick and tired of crime. I believe we're ready to approach the problem with a fresh perspective and move away from the empty rhetoric of the past. Government should stop repeating previous mistakes, focus on the root problem and do what works.

But the greater responsibility is with the public. We should also do what's most effective. Don't change policy; change society. Don't change politicians; change ourselves. Then we will be in a much better position to encourage others and help develop in them an environment where hope, not despair, will reign.

'BENT'

Play reminds us not to forget persecution of homosexuals

Dear Editor,

I would like to congratulate the cast and crew of "Bent" on a superb production and performance and thank them for providing K-State and the Manhattan community the opportunity to explore the Nazi persecution of homosexuals in concentration camps.

We cannot forget how homosexuals and those who showed compassion for them were beaten, raped with sharp objects, clubbed to death, killed by dogs trained to attack the genitals or, as illustrated in "Bent," given the choice to be shot to death or opt to touch electrical fences.

In the camps, homosexuals were forced to wear pink triangles, not only to identify them but to disgrace and humiliate them. Today, it serves as a symbol of empowerment for gays, lesbians and bisexuals. It is worn proudly to honor the memory of those men and to make a statement to the world that persecution and hatred are no longer tolerated.

Despite your feelings toward homosexuality, you should remember it is OK to "agree to disagree."

Homosexuals are not asking you to love them; just don't hate us. Accept us.

Hate breeds violence, and violence breeds death. Violence can be stopped with courage and acceptance.

America is based upon individual liberties and freedom. If we discriminate, then we are not Americans — we are much, much worse.

■ TUITION

Keep raising the cost of tuition, and enrollment will decline

Dear Editor,

Monday I was listening to the radio and was informed that enrollment at K-State was down significantly. I could think of about a dozen reason, but the most recent entered my mind.

I am from Kansas City, Mo., and I pay out-of-state tuition. That alone is a whopping $6,190 a year. My parents help me out a little. I receive about $2,200 in financial aid, and I pay all of the rest (books, fees, housing, expenses) on my own. I work two jobs and take 15 credit hours.

I love K-State, but how can I continue to go here? By the time my senior year rolls around, how can I afford to pay almost $9,000 a year for pure tuition?

I agree with a smaller, regulated increase for the faculty. It is the Kansas government that needs to foot the rest of faculty salary increases. I do not understand why we are thinking of footing the bill for Washburn — is that our responsibility?

As Michael Henry stated in Friday's Collegian, "They're pricing the students out of an education."

Do you really think raising tuition will help? Enrollment is down, and raising tuition that high will not help bring it back up.

TOLES

Death never logical — neither is death penalty

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

"I'm not the man. He goes free as the candle vigil glows as they burn my clothes as the crowd cries 'hang him slow...' He goes free." — 10,000 Maniacs

You ever have something you can't get out of your mind? Something you see whenever you close your eyes? Something that gives you nightmares?

I saw something like that last week. I was reading about a woman in Colorado who was kidnapped and raped repeatedly. She managed to escape, and a woman gave her a ride to the police station.

The rapist followed them and shot the rescuer several times, paralyzing her. Then he kidnapped the woman again and killed her.

He is a convicted sex offender who had been released. He's also been linked to another murder in 1988.

He was supposed to be in a sex-offender program. He dropped out.

I want him to go to jail for the rest of his life and learn what rape is really about.

Well, actually, I want him to die slowly and painfully. I want him to suffer.

Just like she did.

The level of anger I feel is amazing. It scares me, in fact. See, that anger is based in fear and hate. That anger creates responses in me that make me cease to think rationally.

Death is never logical, and the reasons for wanting to impose the death penalty are even less so.

It appeals to a base instinct in people, saying things like, "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth."

What gets lost sometimes in the need to find someone, anyone, to blame, is the idea people are innocent until proven guilty.

See, fear does weird things to people. They don't think rationally, and when the crime rate keeps rising, the easiest thing to say is "kill the bastards."

Everyone from the president of the United States to the average citizen is scared and angry.

When you mix fear and anger, you lose sight of reason and logic.

At least that's what I read in the letters to the various newspapers around the state.

And when I read some of these letters, I think about the people who would burn witches and turn people in to the House Un-American Activities Committee.

All to protect themselves.

So, when Gov. Joan Finney told the Kansas Legislature she wouldn't sign a death-penalty bill but instead would let it become law without her signature, I admired her.

You can shut your mouth now.

See, by not signing the bill, she is making the Legislature take all the responsibility for that decision.

She saw what they did to former Gov. John Carlin. They tried to "embarrass" him by sending the death-penalty bill to his desk, knowing he wouldn't sign it. Then they were absolved of all responsibility that way.

I'm not saying I oppose the death penalty in all cases. I'm not saying I support it, either.

What I'm saying is we need to think about what we're trying to do.

Maybe I could understand the death penalty better if the reason we were thinking of reinstating it was based on something other than public fear.

Maybe if this weren't a knee-jerk reaction, I would feel better about reinstating it. The problem is that this is all it is. It's an attempt by a frightened mass of people to regain control, and the way they want to do that is by bringing back the death penalty.

I know, because I'm afraid, too.

I do have one question, though. If we bring this thing back, what will be the method?

Will we hang criminals like we did before? Like Washington State does now? Will they die by lethal injection or by the electric chair, like in Texas?

In all the rush to bring the death penalty back, it seems most people are forgetting about the ways this will happen.

In the hurry to kill the people who are killing others, no one seems to have thought about how they will die.

Maybe we need to think about that. That and who will do the killing. I'm fine with it as long as it's someone else.

How about you?

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL Cats get win against Detroit in 2nd meeting

MOOLE POELL
Collegian

In their second meeting of the season, the K-State women picked up a non-conference road win against Detroit Mercy, 64-50, Tuesday night.

The lead went back and forth throughout most of the first half, until one of Shawnda DeCamp's four treys put the Wildcats up for good, 21-18.

Led by junior Shanelle Stires, who had 14 points in the first half, the Cats held a 28-23 lead at half-time.

The Titans pulled within three at the start of the second half, but K-State's 56 percent shooting effort in the second period put the Cats in control.

With the loss, Detroit Mercy falls to 13-9 on the season. The Titans were led by Michelle DeHaan, who ended up with 16 points on the night.

Stires led all K-State scorers, finishing the game with 20 points and a season-high seven assists. DeCamp followed with 16 points, while senior Lynn Holzman pulled down 11 rebounds for the Cats.

With the win, K-State's overall record moves to 12-12. The Cats will put their 5-8 Big Eight record on the line this weekend, as they face the nationally-ranked Kansas Jayhawks for the second time this season. The game kicks off at 7 p.m. Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

Kevin Lewis defends against UMKC's Derecko Rawlins during the first half of the Cats' 71-58 win against the Kangaroos. The win was the ninth straight for K-State in its series with UMKC.

K-State hits the baskets, defeats UMKC 71-58

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Here is the good news for K-State. The Wildcats shot over 50 percent for the second-consecutive game to beat the University of Missouri-Kansas City, 71-58, last night in Bramlage Coliseum.

Coach Dana Altman said the reason for their high shooting percentage was the Cats forcing 13 turnovers.

"We got a couple of points off of transitions and that's always going to help your percentage," said Altman, whose team shot 39.6 percent from the field going into the game.

Forward Belvis Noland said the team is in a shooting groove.

"We're all shooting on the same level," said Noland, who scored 13 points in the game. "The defense caused them some turnovers, and then we started taking over."

Here is the bad news for K-State.

The Wildcats could not hold Tony Dumas as he fired for 29 points.

In the first game between the two schools, Dumas was held to just 21 points on Dec. 22 in Kansas City.

"I was disappointed with the job we did on him," Altman said. "There were a lot of (National Basketball Association) scouts looking at him, maybe some of our guys too, but mostly at Tony."

"He is a Big Eight caliber player. Heck, he could play in any league."

Plus, K-State could not put away the Kangaroos until midway through the second half until K-State (17-8 overall) went on a 19-4 run to seal the game for the game.

Dumas' 14 points gave UMKC (12-16 overall) a 36-31 deficit at half-time. Then he scored seven of the nine Kangaroo points as UMKC led 40-39 with 17 minutes left in the game.

Guard Askia Jones, who led K-State with 22 points, said the team was not ready for UMKC.

"I think, at first, we just didn't dictate the game like we should have," Jones said.

"That was basically a wake-up call when they got ahead of us."

In the 19-4 stretch, Jones scored eight points and Noland popped in five points, including a dunk that started an 11-0 run for K-State and excited the crowd of 9,424 fans.

Kangaroo coach Lee Hunt said his team could not fight back in that stretch.

"K-State had a time out and then they made their run," Hunt said. "We lost our composure and we played right into their hands."

"Give K-State a lot of credit. They are a good basketball team and they stayed focused."

UMKC has never won a game against K-State in nine tries. Dumas said his team wanted to win, but couldn't pull it off.

"We played tough tonight," Dumas said. "We had a couple of defensive lapses that really hurt us."

Both forward Ron Lucas and Altman said the team was not ready to play.

"I don't think we came to the game as fired up as we did in the last game (against Oklahoma this past Saturday)," Lucas said.

"We didn't seem to have the same emotion that we did on Saturday," Altman said.

"I wasn't pleased with that."

U.S. SKATERS WIN BRONZE

► SPEEDSKATING — The U.S. women's short-track speedskating team was awarded the bronze Tuesday in the 3,000-meter relay. Originally in fourth place, the U.S. team won the bronze when the Chinese team, in second place, was disqualified.

► MEDAL RACE — Russia has 19 medals (nine gold, seven silver and three bronze) while Norway has 17 medals (eight gold, seven silver and two bronze.) The U.S. is in fifth place with four gold, three silver and one bronze medal.

The invitations have been handed out, and all that remains is to see who's going to show up for the dance.

Sorry Rice, Texas Christian University, Southern Methodist University, and Houston. This dance is by invitation only.

Two days ago, a conference call was held between Big Eight officials and Rice, TCU, SMU, and Houston. In the call, the Big Eight let the schools know that they aren't going to be invited to join the conference.

Then the Big Eight had another conference call with Texas, Texas A&M, Baylor University, and Texas Tech to let them know that they are extending an invitation to join the league.

Now all that is left is to see if whether or not the schools will accept and what exactly the deal is.

K-State President Jon Wefald said the league still has to be tight-lipped about the deal.

"I can't comment on the offer a whole lot," Wefald said. "I can say that the deadline for the schools, to let us know if they accept or decline, is pending."

"We can't say a lot right now, because of the politics in Texas."

With the Big Eight's proposal on the table, SWC coaches pondered what will become of the league.

"The future of the Southwest Conference is going to be different," Rice coach Willis Wilson said.

"Obviously, there have been some things that have taken place that would seem that this thing is very, very, far along. We now have to start exploring our options."

Alvin Brooks, coach at Houston, was surprised that his school wasn't included in the offer. However, he said that the university can survive without the SWC.

"This is a bit of a surprise to me," Brooks said. "I know that there was going to be a lot of things going on with this realignment, but now they have lost the Houston TV market."

"I don't think that we will have a problem realigning with some other conference, given all of the TV homes in the Houston market we can bring to the table."

Texas A&M coach Tony Barone said the Big Eight's offer not to include Rice, TCU, SMU, and Houston makes sense.

"I come from a private school, and I know some of the down sides that they have to deal with," Barone said. "I don't have any brilliant statements about the break-up of the SWC. It is interesting that we leave those four schools though."

Barone said joining the Big Eight will help his program.

"I look at the kids that we have lost, and where we have lost them to," Barone said. "Then again this year, we lost another kid to Oklahoma State. Obviously Brooks Thompson left here to go to Oklahoma State."

"When you have a self-contained conference in one state, and a kid says to you, 'I want to leave the state, or I want to play in a conference that's not all interstate,' you're going to lose that kid. Now, maybe if we are in the Big Eight, it will eliminate one of the reasons that a recruit won't consider our school."

Texas coach Tom Penders said they have been successful this year against Big Eight teams, and they would hopefully continue to be.

"Right now we are 2-0 against Big Eight teams," Penders said. "We've already beaten Oklahoma and Nebraska this season."

COLUMN

His Airness can shoot the hoops, but he can't hit the ball past the fence

Michael Jordan is the greatest athlete of this decade. John Kruk is not.

Kruk, the beer-drinking, cigarette-smoking, tobacco-chewing first baseman for the Philadelphia Phillies, is one of the best baseball players in the game today, batting over .300 last season. But a svelte, lean baseball god, like George Brett, he is not.

Kruk is living proof that you don't have to be a top athlete to excel in baseball.

He said it best last year when he was approached by an angry fan at spring training. According to Sports Illustrated, Kruk was leisurely smoking a cigarette when the woman said, "I'm shocked. You're a professional athlete, and you smoke."

"Lady," Kruk said, "I'm not an athlete."

He took another puff on his cigarette and said, "I'm a baseball player."

While it probably wouldn't hurt Kruk to lose some of his substantial beer gut, that doesn't stop him from being a better baseball player than Jordan is or ever will be, not because he is a wonderful athlete, but because he has worked at baseball and only baseball throughout his life.

Jordan has also worked for years developing and polishing his skills, but he did it on a basketball court, not the baseball diamond.

He decided many years ago that basketball was his sport, and his goal was to become one of the greatest of all time.

Many would agree that he achieved this, so why would he risk losing his super-human image by attempting to play baseball?

When Jordan retired from basketball this winter, he said he wanted to spend more time with his family, and he was sick of the constant media attention.

The last time I checked, the basketball season was half as long as baseball's 162-game stretch, with nosy reporters following every team from spring training until the fall classic.

Jordan recently drew about 200 reporters in Florida while he was just working out. Call me crazy, but it looks like he's been missing his daily dose of media attention since his retirement from basketball.

If Jordan even had some baseball skills, it might be a different story, but after his first performance in front of the press last week, it's obvious his Airness can't handle a big-league fastball.

NICOLE POELL

According to the Chicago Tribune, of the 100 balls he hit in his first open workout with the Sox, only one reached the fence.

Most of the other ones were either weak flies or balls pounded into the dirt.

So, what is Jordan himself saying about his career in baseball? In a recent press conference, he told reporters his goals aren't necessarily that high.

"My expectations are not to go to the All-Star game, win the MVP or hit .300," he said. "It's just to try to make the team at this particular time."

Yeah, this really sounds like a guy who wants to play the game. Real baseball players love the game and constantly strive to be the best.

By signing Jordan, the Sox are insulting any young player in their farm system by essentially saying, "Sorry, you may have more heart, desire and talent, but you don't have the name."

If and when Jordan actually plays in a game, be it in the minors or majors, he will be a sideshow, turning the locker room into a media circus.

The Sox should have learned this with the Bo Jackson fiasco of last year. All of Jackson's attention was a major distraction for the team, creating tension between players and coaches.

If the Sox thought Jackson's press was out of control, they ain't seen nothing yet.

So, what should Jordan do? Get out of baseball. Let some unknown farm boy with a killer fastball take his spot on the Sox minor-league team.

If he does get the urge to play baseball again, he can always go out and play with his little boys. He did say he wanted to spend time with his family, right?

School zone puzzles reader

Dear Cassandra,

I have a question. It is not about sex, roommates or even Beavis and Butt-head. I just want to know why there is a school zone on Claflin Avenue between Sunset and College avenues. There is no school there. I have driven by there at least four times a day for the past three years now, and I have seen a grand total of five kids in the area, and only three of them crossed the street.

Also, how come the kids (if they exist) are forced to walk into a tree on the south side of the street? I think a sidewalk might be nice. How about a crosswalk light with flashing yellow lights placed up the road on either side instead of a 20 mph zone that is in effect most of the day? That might even help support the local donut shops — if you know what I mean.

Signed,
Smells kinda porky

Dear Smells kinda

porky,

I am familiar with the area you wrote about. The school zone is required because some children must cross Claflin to reach Lee Elementary School. Some of the children in the Lee Elementary School attendance center live across the street, and city officials decided that area would be a good place to put a zone. Claflin is a very busy street, so I'm sure you understand why children might need assistance.

Tired of your moldy oldies? Give 'em to UPC

Somewhere, hidden beneath the depths of the compact-disc or cassette collection, lies that big mistake.

For some, it's Vanilla Ice. For others, it's Milli Vanilli. But everyone has one — the unwanted record collecting dust under the music that actually gets listened to.

Union Program Council is giving students a chance to say goodbye to some of those blunders and make some money at the same time.

UPC will sponsor Second Time Around Sound beginning Thursday in the K-State Union.

"This event will help students get rid of unwanted music and help other people find music that they're looking for," said Debbie Perlman, junior in business administration and chairperson of UPC special events.

UPC will collect music that anyone wants to sell from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. this Thursday, Friday, Monday and Tuesday in the Union First Floor Alcove.

Perlman said students can choose the price they want for their old CDs, cassettes and albums.

Then, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on March 2-4 in the alcove, UPC will try to sell this music to other students.

Finally, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. March 7-8, UPC will return 85 percent of the net profit and any unsold music to the seller. UPC will keep the other 15 percent to help sponsor future special events.

"The money that we make from this will go toward other UPC programs. Most of the special events UPC sponsors are free, so the money we make will help us keep sponsoring these free events," Perlman said.

'Darrow' lives in 1-man play

HAROLD RING

Collegian

Walt Boyd, graduate student in theater, directs and stars in the one-man play "Clarence Darrow" this week.

The play was written by David Rintels and is based on Irving Stone's book "Clarence Darrow for the Defense." Darrow was one of the great legal minds of his time.

The first production of the play was in 1975 on Broadway with Henry Fonda starring as Darrow.

This isn't the first time Boyd has performed in a one-man play. He had the starring role in "Bully" while earning his bachelor of fine arts in theater arts at Drake University.

For that performance, he had a co-director. This time the only feedback he has gotten has been from his adviser, Lewis Shelton, assistant professor of speech.

"I always get nervous, but the trick is to channel that into something positive," Boyd said.

The primary challenge in a one-man play is relying on yourself because there is no one else there to help you, Boyd said.

Boyd began acting seriously in 1980 and has been in about 70 productions since then.

TICKET INFO.

"Clarence Darrow" will be presented at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday in K-State's Purple Masque Theatre. Tickets for the performance are available at the K-State Theatre Box Office in Nichols Hall. Prices are $2 for students and $3 for non-students.

Jami Anderson, junior in apparel design, speaks to an alum while making phone calls as a volunteer in the Telefund Tuesday night. Anderson and the rest of the volunteers from the colleges of Agriculture and Human Ecology helped increase the total funds earned to a preliminary $715,767, eclipsing last year's total of $713,000. So far, seven of the eight colleges involved in Telefund have set new records. Gordon Dowell, Foundations Telefund director, said the success can be attributed to student and alumni support.

Refuge to protect whales

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORFOLK ISLAND, South Pacific — Japan lost a key ally Tuesday in its effort to block the establishment of an Antarctic sanctuary for whales.

The Solomon Islands said it will not attend the next whaling conference in May, where delegates will vote on a proposed 50-year ban on Antarctic whaling. The decision elated conservationists, who said it means Japan has lost its ability to ensure the plan's defeat.

But delegates to the technical meeting on Norfolk Island were more cautious, saying it will take intense lobbying of the wavering members when the commission meets in May in Mexico to vote on the ban.

The International Whaling Commission has been meeting since Sunday to discuss the creation of a refuge for whales below 40 degrees south latitude. Most commercial whaling is now carried out in the Antarctic.

Conservation groups believe the proposed ban on Antarctic whaling would mean the end of commercial whaling forever.

The Indian Ocean is already a whale sanctuary. The conservationists believe that if the overlapping Antarctic environment is also made a refuge, whale populations may recover the numbers they had before industrialized whaling techniques drove most species to the brink of extinction.

Commercial whaling has been banned by the whaling commission since 1987, but Japan is also lobbying to overturn that ruling so that it can start harvesting the 760,000 minke whales in the Antarctic. The sanctuary proposal would act as an insurance measure for preserving the whale population.

At the meeting in Mexico, the proposed ban must pass by three-fourths of the votes cast. Abstentions do not count.

Dear Diary: Today I got an A, received my first wheellock

CARON CITRO
Collegian

After you graduate and become famous, the University may want more than your money.

They may want a collection of your memoirs.

K-State's University archives is a collection of records of the history of the University as well as the state.

"It's neat to go back 100 years and read student diaries," Pat Patton, library assistant in the archives, said.

The more things change, the more they stay the same, she said.

"The students were complaining about their professors, the food and the restrictions on their lives," she said.

Tony Crawford, University archivist, has been working on the collections of K-State for 10 years.

"People don't keep diaries or write letters anymore, but people do keep photographs," he said.

The collection contains more than 50,000 photographs and is used practically every day.

"The most common comment we hear about personal collections is that no one would want them," he said.

Personal and business letters are of interest to the archives office. But people don't write letters the way they used to.

"I don't know if people have less of a sense of history," Crawford said. "The format and the technology is changing the objects that can be passed on."

It is possible to get into the University's archives without knowing it.

Patton tries to keep up with alumni by maintaining a file.

She said it is important to realize that what made K-State what it is today is the people of the past.

"Our students are doing tremendous things when they leave us," she said.

At the very least, your descendants can trace you through the Royal Purple yearbook, student directories and the Collegian.

Although many memories are housed in the University Archives, other collections are elsewhere.

An exhibit including photographs from Gordon Parks, a preeminent photographer and a native of Fort Scott, will be housed at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and has toured the world.

"The collection has been on tour for 11 years," Jessica Reichman, collections curator for the Beach collection, said.

After receiving an honorary degree from the University in 1970, Parks created an exhibit for K-State titled, "Moments Without Proper Names."

The exhibit is a

"They keep old medals and Family members are the best

Contributions to the University don't always find their way back.

They have been here all along.

Overlay wrinkles to be ironed out

Kenneth Brooks, landscape architecture professor and member of academic affairs said the committee should consider all aspects of the proposal and develop a unified stance on diversity overlay.

"These issues have such a diverse opinion. We have to make sure that we have a strong recommendation one way or the other before we send it on to Faculty Senate," Brooks said.

Schapaugh said he expects the committee's version of the proposal to evolve and undergo changes during the committee meetings.

"I expect there to be minor and substantial changes in the proposal. We're going to do what we can and then pass the torch on," Schapaugh said.

Before the proposal enters the hands of the Faculty Senate, several wrinkles in the proposal must be ironed out in the academic affairs meetings.

The committee expressed problems with the limiting criteria, availability of courses and implementation of the proposal.

Kenneth Shultis, professor of nuclear engineering, raised his concern about the added stress of the diversity overlay on the student.

"The requirement is another pigeonhole that a senior will have to frantically have to fill if he can't get into the class he needs to graduate."

"I think a bulk of students aren't interested in getting into other areas and want to concentrate on their discipline," Shultis said.

Another concern addressed by the committee was that the criteria were too restricting and placed a burden on the committee and professors developing the course.

"I think the criteria for the selection should instead be guidelines. There needs to be flexibility and as the demand and experience grows, the University can then set higher standards," Brooks said.

Academic affairs plans to address these as well as other member's concerns as they continue to explore the diversity overlay proposal.

Harriet Ottenheimer, a member of the Diversity Overlay Committee and professor of anthropology, explained the purpose and criteria of the proposal and answered concerns raised by committee members.

"We collected input in writing, on the phone, and through forums and surveys and developed a new proposal with sharper and clear criteria," Ottenheimer said.

She said she talked to people all over the country who were involved in multicultural education.

"There is an upsurge in these courses and it is on an upswing. I think we should jump on the wave while it's still growing," Ottenheimer said.

Schapaugh said the committee has been working on diversity overlay for a year and through the discussions, he hopes to come closer to finalizing the proposal.

"Academic Affairs is facing a lot of complex issues right now with general education and diversity overlay. If we were dealing with just one, I could see it get done this semester, but with two, I don't know what will evolve," Schapaugh said.

"These issues have been circulating around the University for quite some time and there is a desire to get them resolved," he said.

RACIAL/ETHNIC HARASSMENT Responsibility . . . A K-State Tradition

The K-State community is dedicated to learning and to developing ethical and responsible persons. The university takes responsibility for preparing individuals for participation in an increasingly diverse world. This can happen only when our campus climate is non-threatening and mutually respectful. Racial and/or ethnic harassment is harmful to the entire K-State community and conflicts with our mission. This behavior is prohibited by K-State policy, and could be against the law.

Definition

Racial and/or ethnic harassment includes verbal, physical or written behavior directed toward relating to an individual or group on the basis of race, ethnicity, or racial affiliation, and has the purpose or effect of

1. creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive work or educational environment;
2. interfering with an individual's work, academic performance, living environment, personal security, or participation in any university sponsored activities;
3. threatening an individual's employment or academic opportunities.

This definition also applies to harassment of persons because of their association with or support of members of a specific racial or ethnic group.

Persons who feel they are victims or observers of racial and/or ethnic harassment should document and report the incident to their department head or the Affirmative Action Office. Students with complaints of harassment by other students should contact the Dean of Student Life office.

A complete copy of the Policy Prohibiting Racial and/or Ethnic Harassment is available at the Student Activities and Services Office in the K-State Union.

Wildcats snap streak of Big Eight road losses

JERRY CHASTINE

Finally, the monkey is off the K-State women's basketball team's back.

The Wildcats defeated Oklahoma 71-70 last Friday, making it the first time this season the team has won on the road in the Big Eight Conference.

It was also the Cats' first conference road victory since they defeated Iowa State last season.

"It was a big victory," Coach Brian Agler said. "Early in the first half, we held them scoreless for a stretch."

Then with about 15 minutes left in the second half, we shot them out, and that was key."

The Cats held a 31-30 lead at halftime, and they jumped right out of the gate in the second half when Shanelle Stires connected from three-point range.

Stires then nailed another three to give K-State a 37-32 advantage. Stires finished the game with 19 points, including three three-pointers. She also had seven rebounds. The Cats then extended their lead to 51-42 when K-State's Shawnda DeCamp drives down the court during a home game with Iowa State. The women's basketball team won its first road game Friday, beating Oklahoma 71-70.

Shawnda DeCamp hit a three-point shot with 12:19 left.

Oklahoma then battled back and got back into the game with a 6-0 run to cut the K-State lead to four. The contest remained close for the next 10 minutes, as the Cats' largest lead was five points.

Then, with 41 seconds left, DeCamp stepped up to the line and canned two free throws to give K-State a 67-62 lead.

Oklahoma came down and scored three points on a trey by Sharee Mitchum with 26 seconds left. The Cats inbounded the ball and took 21 seconds off the clock.

With five seconds left in the game, Andrea O'Neal was fouled.

O'Neal canned both from the stripe, sealing the win.

"This win will help us with the seeding of the Big Eight Tournament," Agler said. "With the win, we probably won't have to play Kansas in the first round. Now, we will probably draw Oklahoma State or Nebraska."

The Cats couldn't celebrate their road success for too long, as K-State had to travel to Stillwater, Okla., to play the Cowgirls on Sunday.

The Cowgirls were coming off an upset victory against No. 10-ranked Kansas on Friday, and that could have intimidated the Cats, Agler said.

"We played scared. We didn't have any emotion, and we didn't have the passion to play," Agler said. "We didn't attack things. There was no winning attitude there."

Oklahoma State used a 20-6 run to bury the Cats, 55-43, in Gallagher-Iba Arena.

"We should have been ready," Agler said. "Everyone wanted to do their own thing. We just didn't compete."

Five points was the closest the Cats could get in the second half, but the Oklahoma State press and zone defense forced 24 K-State turnovers.

"The press caused us a lot of problems," Agler said. "Their zone also gave us trouble. Usually after three or four possessions, we can force a team out of a zone or press, but we just stood around on offense."

The Cats will square off again at 7 p.m. Saturday as they play host to Kansas.

Lost, but now found:

The K-State women's basketball team found what it was looking for in Coach Brian Agler

TROY HALTERMAN

Collegian

When K-State officials went searching for a women's basketball coach during the offseason, they were searching for someone to turn around a struggling program.

They were looking for a coach with experience rebuilding programs — and they found that person in Brian Agler.

Agler came to K-State with a proven ability to turn around down-and-out programs and with a winning attitude that has carried over to his players.

"He has brought a positive attitude and a feeling that we are going to go out and win," Shanelle Stires, junior post, said. "He is very confident, and he instills that in us."

In his previous two jobs, Agler turned around struggling programs at the University of Missouri-Kansas City and at Northeastern Oklahoma A&M Junior College.

When Agler decided to come to K-State, he came with one thing on his mind — to win.

"I wanted the opportunity to win championships and be competitive on a national level," Agler said.

Reviving a program is not the easiest task for a coach to do. However, for Agler, the process is a familiar one.

"Changing the mentality of the people in our program is the first step," Agler said. "You have to believe you can be successful."

Agler said he feels that convincing the players to believe in themselves and the program is the hardest part.

"For me, the hardest part is trying to get the ladies to have as high expectations as the coaches — not only individually, but also as a team," Agler said.

In his first season, Agler has already made improvements in the program.

The teams' five conference wins surpass the last two seasons combined, and its 11 wins is the most since the 1990-91 season.

With a renewed winning attitude among the players and coaches, the next step is to bring in top quality recruits each season and renew the fans' interest.

"To get the fans back, we must recruit good local talent and put a good product on the floor — something the people can take pride in," Agler said. "Winning gets the fans."

For the players in his program, the expectations from the coach are high.

Nothing but 100 percent is acceptable.

"Very demanding are the best words to describe him," Stires said. "He always demands the most and never lets us get away with second best."

The expectations of Agler also include more than just hard work.

"We expect our players to establish good work habits, a strong concentration level and a strong foundation of the basics," Agler said.

Another key to the success of Agler has been his system of a strong man-to-man defense and a true motion offense.

"You learn and understand the game from coaches in high school and college. You learn from their perspectives," Agler said. "My coaches in high school and college used this system."

A strong belief in the success of this system has rubbed off on his players and made believers of them also.

"He is almost cocky about it," Stires said. "He believes in it so much that it makes us believe in it. In practice he shows us exactly what he wants and he goes to great lengths to explain it."

Agler's belief in a strong man-to-man defense has proven to be successful during his 10-year head-coaching career.

His ball clubs have led the nation in scoring defense five times, and his 1991 squad set the all-time NCAA record by allowing only 51.8 points a game.

For Agler, the goals for his team are simple.

"I want to win Big Eight championships and make the NCAA tournament. After that, I'll let the chips fall where they may," Agler said.

Universities responding to Title IX's provisions in large numbers

Editor's note: This is the final part of a three-part series.

The NCAA is beginning to show the results of increasing pressure from outside organizations to enforce Title IX, the gender-equity act passed in 1972, according to a report released by the NCAA Gender Equity Task Force two weeks ago.

In the report, figures showed the number of women participating in intercollegiate sports increased for the third straight year.

The participation of women in 1993 was up 3.5 percent over 1992 figures, to 99,589.

The sports gaining the most players were soccer, outdoor track and field and indoor track. Despite this, basketball remains the top sport with 827 teams, followed by 784 volleyball teams and 732 tennis teams.

"We're seeing a flurry of activity concerning Title IX, after a period of complacency dating back to the early '80s," said Roselyn Cutler, Title IX coordinator and conciliation officer for Colorado State University. "The gender-equity law has certainly played a part in the growth of the figures, though."

Cutler and her office are responsible for CSU's commitment to the laws stated in Title IX and to mediate all grievances brought to the office. The office covers all issues of unlawful discrimination, whether it be racial, sexual or cultural, Cutler said.

"As far as I know, we're the only office solely dedicated to Title IX in the country," Cutler said.

Colorado State has had experience with lawsuits filed under Title IX.

The university attempted to alleviate a $600,000 budget deficit by eliminating the men's basketball and women's softball teams. The softball team sued the university, claiming a "disproportionate gap" between the ratio of male and female athletes.

The women won their suit, with the judge saying, "A fiscal crisis cannot justify gender discrimination."

While Colorado State has reconciled its gender-equity issue, Oklahoma State is in the middle of a lawsuit concerning its women's golf coach. Ann Pitts has sued the school, citing unequal pay for the same duties as the men's golf coach.

"Lawsuits have created a lot of awareness. We feel that we are making progress," said Ann Baer, assistant athletic director for OSU. Baer said this progress includes the increasing of budgets and adding more women's athletic scholarships.

A decision is expected in March concerning Pitts' lawsuit. Baer said she thinks the outcome of the lawsuit could affect the direction of future athletic policies at OSU. Universities are faced with limited options when it comes to establishing gender equity.

"We've looked at both opportunities (cutting budgets and increasing funding) to fix the numbers," Baer said. "We will possibly add volleyball to balance things."

OSU is the only Big Eight school without a women's volleyball team.

"As we make decisions, we balance our requirements. We put lids on walk-on scholarships, evaluate and tighten our spending; centralize our issues and look for mechanisms to balance things," said Cutler, who said she thinks gender equity should be an integral part of an athletic department's philosophy.

"There must be a commitment to equity, not just adding it on whenever necessary. It must be part and parcel of the philosophy. Gender equity must underlie all decisions, not just in athletics. You must constantly be critiquing yourself and checking where you are," Cutler said.

"We have to create awareness because there are still people out there who don't feel this way," Baer said.

Cutler said the success and future of gender equity relies on athletic competition that comes before the college level. "This reflects well on junior-high and high-school athletics and strong city programs," she said.

TITLE IX: GENDER EQUALITY?

The number of women participating in intercollegiate athletics has increased for the third straight year.

► The total number of women is now 99,589, up 3.5 percent from 1992.

► There are 187,041 men in intercollegiate sports, the most since 1966-67.

► The biggest gains in women's sports were in soccer, outdoor track & field and indoor track.

► Among women, basketball is still the most popular sport, with 827 teams. Basketball is followed by 784 volleyball teams and 732 tennis teams.

K-STATE PEOPLE: THEN AND NOW

A passion for the game

K-State walk-on played pro football for a decade

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Paul Coffman's overwhelming passion for the game of football had an early inception.

"I remember as far back as the second or third grade, when anything about the NFL would come on television, I would get goose bumps and just start breathing hard," Coffman said. "I just had a heart that wanted to play the game."

Coffman, who was raised in Chase and played tight end for K-State from 1974-1977, took his childhood vision and made it happen.

He played for the Green Bay Packers from 1978-1985, the Kansas City Chiefs in 1986-87 and spent his last year with the Minnesota Vikings.

In all, Coffman played the game for 22 years, starting in junior high.

But abundant talent didn't take Coffman through college and professional football. It took sheer will.

"We would have marathon practices at Kansas State, where all we would do was hit, hit and hit," he said. "At the end, I might have been crazy, but I loved it. So, when I got to the pros, it wasn't as bad as I thought. The talent was better, but I was in shape and was able to get over the mental aspect of it."

Desire. Coffman exhausted every ounce of it just to excel through the talent-heavy NFL scene. But his skills proved to be potent as well. Coffman made three trips to the Pro Bowl from 1982-1984.

"I think it's kind of a God-given gift," Coffman said of his desire to play. "I mean, you see little kids, and moms and dads try to implant burning desire into them. Burning desire isn't something that is taught. Either you have it, or you don't."

So, which is better, extreme talent or pressing desire?

"If you have great ability and a bad attitude, you're not going to go very far," Coffman said. "I saw guys come up to the pros that didn't apply themselves to learn the playbook and stay in shape in the off-season. Their careers weren't very long."

Coffman's NFL career spanned nearly 10 years. His last season, he said, he was used mainly as a back-up for the Vikings. Coffman said his stint in the pros was a pleasurable one.

"It was a season in my life that I thoroughly enjoyed," he said. "It feeds your ego and your pocketbook."

But Coffman said he knew when his football days were over.

"I knew physically, there were things I couldn't do any more. In my last season, I kind of lost the eye of the tiger. I was one of those guys that had to go out there really intense, because I was small and slow. I knew my last year that I didn't have it any more."

Even though K-State only won two games in Coffman's final two years as a Wildcat, he said his time spent in Manhattan was vital.

"We only won one game my junior year and one game my senior year, so I could deal with adversity," he said.

"I saw guys come to Green Bay from major programs like Texas, USC and Michigan. It would be late in the season with a wind chill of minus five, and we would have won five or six games by the time of the playoffs."

"They would lay down. They didn't want to play any more."

"Our coaches at K-State kind of had the attitude that the reason we weren't winning was because we weren't working hard enough. That didn't have anything to do with it. We didn't have any talent."

"At K-State, it helped me to overcome a lot of things. I loved playing football so much, it didn't matter if it was fair. It didn't matter if we were losing or it was cold or hot. I just loved to play."

Coffman's unbridled love for football didn't keep him away from K-State when he wasn't offered a scholarship.

He walked on. Originally a running back and linebacker, he eventually moved to tight end when a few other players gave up on the program and quit.

Vince Gibson, who was coach for Coffman's first season, promised him a scholarship his sophomore year. But in the transition from Gibson to Ellis Rainsberger as coach in 1975, Coffman's scholarship was lost.

"Vince told me he was going to give me a scholarship after my freshman year — then he got fired," Coffman said.

"Ellis got hired, and I walked up to him and said, 'Vince said I was going to get a scholarship,' and he said, 'He never told me.' I don't know whether he did or he didn't, I just know I didn't get my scholarship. But I did the next year."

After Coffman's senior season, he started pestering professional teams to let him try out. "My roommate in college was Gary Spani, who was an all-America linebacker here," Coffman said.

"And all the pro teams would come and try him out. So, I would come along and say, 'Can I try out, too?'"

"A couple of weeks after the draft, Green Bay finally called me up and offered me a contract. There was a $1,500 signing bonus, not a million, and a $24,000 salary."

Signing with the Packers was just half the battle, though. When Coffman showed up, six other tight ends were vying for a starting position as well, and he was seventh on the depth chart.

"Every day you had two-a-day practices," Coffman said.

"You were worn out mentally from learning plays, and you were worn out physically from the practices. On top of that, you had to worry about whether you were going to make it or not."

"My rookie year, I didn't know if I would make it. But I knew in my heart that I was going to give everything, every practice. There would be some days where you would have a bad practice and think, 'Oh man, they're going to cut me.' I know they're going to cut me."

"Sometimes, they would cut you at lunch or at breakfast before practices."

Coffman said the person whose sole job was to inform players they were being cut from the team was called the Turk.

"That was basically his job," Coffman said. "He shows no emotion. He's kind of a miserable person. It's kind of cruel."

But Coffman was never a victim. He quickly fit into the scheme at Green Bay and became a starter at tight end.

"One of my greatest moments on the field was against the Washington Redskins," he said. "It was a Monday Night Football game. We beat them 48-47, and I had like 120 yards receiving and two touchdowns. Later that year, I made it to the Pro Bowl."

However, Coffman said there were humbling moments as well.

"Robert Brazil was sort of the Lawrence Taylor of his day," Coffman said. "Robert was one that would talk during the whole game. He would talk about you, he'd talk about your momma, just trying to get your focus off the game and onto him."

"On this particular play during our game with Houston, I drove out and stuck Robert in the chest with my helmet and just laid him on his back. Robert jumped up and squared off with me. He stepped back and said, 'All right Coffman, the coaches said you would be coming out on me. You're a good player.'"

"My helmet started to swell a little bit. But on the very next play, I went in motion and turned up field. I caught the ball, and their strong safety, Vernon Terry, comes right across my face mask with his forearm. It knocked my helmet one way and the football the other way. The first thing that hit was my head on the ground."

"I looked up, and there is Robert Brazil. He looked at me and said, 'Vernon's a good football player, too.'"

"No matter how good I thought I was, there was always someone just as good. It can be a humbling sport at times."

When Coffman parted from the NFL, he went looking for new employment. He had obtained his degree from K-State in milling science management.

PAUL COFFMAN

Coffman

Then: Coffman played at K-State from 1974-77 as a tight end. He then played professionally for the Green Bay Packers (1978-85), Kansas City Chiefs (1986-87) and Minnesota Vikings (1987-88).

Now: Coffman now resides in Peculiar, Mo., and said he still makes it to K-State football games. He and his wife, Amy, have four children.

"After my pro career, I had a lot of interviews with a lot of grain companies and major corporations," he said. "The corporate setting really wasn't me."

So, Coffman turned to a friend who owned a janitorial supply company. He has been working there as a sales representative for four years, residing in Peculiar, Mo., and handling the Kansas City area.

Another humbling moment: Coffman's first account with the new job was the Kansas City Chiefs. But he said his job fits him well.

"I'm out around people all day," he said. "I don't have to wear a coat and tie, and I have time to spend with my family. I really enjoy it."

Coffman is married to a K-State graduate, Amy, and has four children — Chase, 7; Carson, 5; Camille, 3; and Cameron, 1. Their eldest son is named after Coffman's hometown.

Coffman reflected on the outrageously large salaries of professional athletes today and said there isn't a problem, yet.

"I think it's great," he said. "If the owners pay it, why not take it? Two years ago, people said it was going to stop. You think it's going to stop, but it hasn't."

Coffman has spent countless hours on the football field. He said athletics and life have things in common.

"I just think athletics are just such a correlation to life," he said. "During a game, you have good things happen to you and bad things happen to you. But you keep pressing on toward the goal at the end of the game."

"Just like life, there are lots of ups and downs. Basically, what you put into it, that is what you will get out of it. Just like life."

"Our coaches at K-State kind of had the attitude that the reason we weren't winning was because we weren't working hard enough. That didn't have anything to do with it. We didn't have any talent."

Fereday playing hardball like vet

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

He sure isn't playing like a freshman. With just four games under his belt, K-State newcomer Todd Fereday is performing more like a seasoned veteran than a 19-year-old recruit.

Call it talent, call it beginner's luck, call it whatever you want, but this shortstop from Oklahoma City, Okla., has quickly demonstrated why he was a highly recruited player.

It took Fereday a game to warm up to college ball. At shortstop in the Cats' home opener against Missouri Western, Fereday went 0-for-3 at the plate. He recovered quickly, going 2-for-4 with one RBI in the second half of the doubleheader.

Fereday was K-State's leading man in the Cats' weekend series against Peru State, going 5-for-9 with six RBIs.

"I was glad to have a good weekend," Fereday said. "I kind of got my jitters out last weekend, so that helped out a lot. It was fun."

Things seem to have always looked good for Fereday. A former prep star coming out of Putnam North High School, Fereday hit .463 his senior year while setting school records in hits, home runs, doubles and triples.

An all-stater in both baseball and football, Fereday, the quarterback, led his football team to a state championship in 1991 and threw for more than a 1,000 yards his senior year.

Recruited by Wichita State, Notre Dame, Rice and Oklahoma, why did this native Sooner decide to leave home and become a Wildcat?

"Since I'm an only child, it was kind of hard to leave," Fereday said. "But I wanted to go out of state, just to see what it was like. I knew that K-State was rebuilding, and I wanted to be a part of that. They needed some young players, and I wanted a chance to play a lot."

While Fereday has gotten that chance to start for the Cats, he said it's taken a lot of hard work to get there. He credits Coach Mike Clark and his staff for toughening up the team.

"Coach Clark had us all working hard in the fall, which has been good for the team," Fereday said. "We get up at 5:45 every morning to lift, which is pretty tough, but it's helped us become more disciplined. I really like their philosophy — they expect us to get the job done."

Fereday is happy about his performance so far, but he said he knows the Cats need to stay focused.

"These last few games have been good, and they've helped the coaches find the right niche for us," Fereday said.

"But they've really been warm-ups compared to what's ahead. I think we'll be able to handle it all right."

Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs argues with an official during K-State's 89-76 win against the Sooners Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum. Tubbs was assessed a technical foul for his actions.

ROLE REVERSAL

K-State's sudden hot shooting stuns Coach Tubbs, up-tempo Oklahoma

The timing couldn't be better. Actually, it could've come earlier. But now, it's crucial.

K-State, riddled by poor shooting all season, was seemingly unconscious in its 89-76 drubbing of Oklahoma last Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

"It's good for the players to feel good about their performance and themselves," Coach Dana Altman said.

"I knew it was coming sometime. I just wish it had happened a lot earlier. It was good to see them play like that."

K-State shot 85 percent in the second half, including a Big Eight record of 16 straight field goals. This coming from the same team that ranks last in the conference in field-goal percentage, shooting a 35.3 percentage in Big Eight games.

The Cats shot 57.1 percent for the game, outdoing the Sooners, who shot 43.4 percent.

"I don't know what I can say, guys. We just got whipped today," Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said following the loss. "We couldn't stop them."

K-State avenged an 87-77 loss to Oklahoma earlier this season.

"We put a complete game together today," said forward Ron Lucas, who scored 10 points in the victory. "We've been waiting for this day."

The Wildcats' NCAA Tournament hopes were dismal a week ago. A 65-56 loss to Kansas on Feb. 12 marked their fourth straight. But the Cats survived the plunge, traveling to Western Kentucky and getting a much-needed victory.

With the win against the Sooners, the Cats improved to 16-8 overall, 4-7 in the league, and have renewed prospects for the Big Dance. K-State has three games remaining on its regular-season list, excluding the Big Eight Tournament March 11-13.

It was the second-highest output for the Cats this season, the other being a lopsided 100-57 win against Marshall. K-State hadn't scored more than 89 points in a conference bout since 1991 — against Oklahoma.

Askia Jones led all scorers with 27 points. Anthony Beane, who has provided stability in the last two outings with a total of 45 points, contributed 21. Deryl Cunningham added 18 points and grabbed eight rebounds.

"Whatever the reason, we shot the ball better," Altman said. "I don't know what it is."

The underlying question: Can the Wildcats do it again and again?

"We've got our work cut out for us," Altman said, "but we've got to finish strong, and we have to play well down the stretch."

"Every win is important."

K-State scored eight points in two seconds during a 19-2 run in the second half.

Six of the Wildcats' eight-point run came with 13:48 left, when Oklahoma's Ken Conley was called for a foul and then hit with a technical for objecting too strongly.

That set off Tubbs, who stalked onto the court to berate the officials and also was hit with a technical. Although Conley had fouled Cunningham, Jones stepped to the line instead, where he hit all six free throws to give K-State a 53-36 lead.

"I saw Ski shooting what seemed like 100 free throws and the ref didn't realize he had called the foul on Conley, and I was shooting," Cunningham said. "Ski is shooting 90 percent from the line, so I wasn't going to say anything."

"It was by far the wildest play I've ever been involved with in college basketball. In my mind, I was saying 'Wow'."

Just two seconds later, Oklahoma's James Mayden was called for an intentional foul on Beane, who drilled his two free throws to give the Wildcats a 55-36 lead with 13:46 to play.

"The game ended right there," Tubbs said. "It took the wind out of our sails."

Tubbs spoke only briefly to the media after the game, and left without answering questions about the technical fouls.

"I'm not sure what was said by either party, but neither of the referees hesitated to make the call," Altman said.

The Wildcats travel to Nebraska Saturday and will try to break even with the Cornhuskers, who downed the Cats 76-68 at Bramlage.

K-State will then play host to Missouri, a team that has been merciless to the rest of the league with an 11-0 record.

The Cats will complete their regular season at Iowa State, followed by a trip to the Big Eight Tournament.

"I think right now we've got Beane clicking, and Belvis and Ron going to the boards and contributing offensively," Jones said. "We've got D.C. playing steady and people off the bench contributing."

"This is the time."

COLUMN

Hasta la vista, Big Eight

K-State's athletic director, Max Urick, is a busy man these days.

Every afternoon, he spends hours on a conference call with the other seven athletic directors of the Big Eight.

The reason is to discuss the ramifications of a TV alliance between the Big Eight Conference and the Southwest Conference in Texas.

The two leagues were offered $57-60 million by ABC-TV for a combined five-year broadcast deal, and they are shopping for other offers. The stack of notes from the teleconferences is nearly two inches thick on Urick's desk.

"Our talks are exploratory," Urick said. "What do we know to be true, what does it mean, what is the good side and the down side, what should we be looking at next?"

"We're trying to develop hard information and not just speculation that we can pass on to our presidents as recommendations."

And what those recommendations are pointing to is the end of the Big Eight Conference as we've known it.

The league has been stable since 1957, when Oklahoma State joined to make it eight teams. But the current talks concerning the TV package have laid the ground for further conference realignment with universities from the Southwest Conference.

"Merger is not a complete deal," K-State President Jon Wefald said Monday morning. "A merger will depend on the politics of Texas, which I can't fathom."

But with a TV deal probably shaping itself in the next week to 10 days, Wefald said, the organization of a conference realignment, or some form of merger, could be a month or less way.

There are two basic themes powering the drive toward a merger between the two conferences:

■ Television revenue — "TV has goosed us along," Urick said. "The more TV market you command, then the more money you can command, also."

"It takes some kind of alliance by including Texas in terms of TV sets. The percent of TV sets you command dictates the amount of money you receive."

The Big Eight only commands 8 percent of the television households nationwide. With the breakup of the College Football Association, which used to bargain for all the conference TV deals combined, TV sets have become the coin of the future.

With the inclusion of just Texas and Texas A&M into the mix, that figure would roughly double for the Big Eight.

■ Fear of the future — Rumors have alternately placed Colorado joining the Pac Ten, Oklahoma joining the Southeastern conference, and Missouri's administration has said in the past year it would entertain joining the Big Ten.

"If Colorado was to go to the Pac Ten, where would that leave the Big Eight?" Wefald said. "The Big Ten is going to expand soon, and it's in the realm of possibility that they'd take Big Eight schools."

EDITOR'S NOTE:

■ An Associated Press story late Monday night, during the production of Wildcat Watch, reported the Big Eight Conference has invited four members of the Southwest Conference to join its league with the start of the 1996-97 season.

Texas, Texas A&M, Texas Tech and Baylor were the SWC teams allegedly involved in the merger offer. At press time, no university had accepted the proposal. The Collegian and Wildcat Watch will bring you up to date on any developments.

Instead of waiting to be picked apart, the Big Eight has decided to be proactive and pick someone else apart. They've decided to mess with Texas.

"In the very near future, we will be around five mega-conferences," Wefald said. "If we are going to be competitive with the Big Ten, Pac Ten and the Southeastern Conference, the Big Eight needs to be one of those."

"By 2010, if this doesn't go through, what are the chances of the Big Eight remaining a major conference? Slim. And without the Big Eight, where is K-State? It would be devastating."

"With members of the Southwest in, the Big Eight is insured into the 21st century," he said.

But a complete merger is probably not in the offing. The Big Eight is dictating the terms and seems likely only to add four universities to get the conference total to 12, with additional teams negotiable, depending on the stance of the Texas legislature.

"The number of schools — that will turn on the politics of that state," Wefald said.

According to various rumors, any merger deal will be up to the University of Texas and the support it can muster in the state Board of Regents. What the Longhorns decide will probably resolve the issue.

"To use diplomatic parlance, it's a very fluid situation," Wefald said. "With the politics of Texas, I can't comment."

But all signs so far point to it happening soon, with K-State leading the way.

"What's neat is Kansas State is part of the game," Mike Clark, K-State's baseball coach, said.

"We're being included instead of being a little nervous about it."

"Heck, we're going to bowl games and NCAA tournaments. We're putting into the package — we're part of the group helping the conference. It's exciting."

BIG EIGHT MERGER

Talks continue on realignment

JEREMY CRABTREE

Collegian

The Big Eight Conference's phone bills must have tripled last week as its athletic directors held conference calls every day.

The topic the schools' officials were talking about is the possible merger of the Big Eight with the Southwest Conference schools.

"Serious talks have been going on," K-State athletic director Max Urick said, who spent up to three hours a day on the phone. "We've been discussing everything from 12- to 14- to a 16-team league. There are so many options. It's a really exciting time for the Big Eight."

The merger talks got even more serious when the Atlantic Coast Conference broke away from the College Football Association. The ACC separated from the CFA's television package and struck its own deal with ABC and ESPN for $80 million.

Until then, the Big Eight had hoped to be part of a four-conference group that would have also involved the ACC as one of the remaining members of the CFA.

That agreement, along with the Big East Conference's agreement with CBS for football and basketball, diminished all wishes of the CFA's survival.

An even bigger step toward a merger was taken last week when ABC offered the SWC and the Big Eight $60 million to merge and to televise the football games.

According to the Dallas Morning News, the package could be $70 million if the newly merged league played a championship football game.

"This is moving a lot quicker than people will realize," Urick said. "The hurdles seem fewer and fewer every day. This could be finalized any day now."

Throughout these negotiations, football has been the main priority of conference and television officials. Basketball teams and their coaches have been left in the cold.

"I honestly don't know a whole lot about it," Kansas basketball coach Roy Williams said. "They haven't told me anything about it."

A merger with the Southwest Conference is the last thing the Big Eight basketball coaches want, according to a poll of the coaches. In that poll, which was conducted last season, the coaches voted 8-0 against merging with the SWC.

"We would just hate to merge the two leagues and allow them to enjoy the same things that we do," K-State basketball coach Dana Altman said. "The Big Eight, basketballwise, enjoys a very good reputation."

"We have our television contracts with ESPN and ABC. We would hate to have anything dilute that, where we would have to give some of our appearances for SWC schools."

When Missouri basketball coach Norm Stewart was asked what he thought about the possible merger, he said he didn't want to share his ideas.

"I have no comment on that," Stewart said. "I have my own thoughts and ideas, but I would rather have someone else talk about it."

A possible reason that the basketball coaches don't like the possible merger is that they would probably have their non-conference schedules significantly reduced.

Currently, Big Eight teams are allowed to play 27 games during the regular season, including one game from the Big Eight Tournament.

With those 27 games, there are 15 league games. If eight more teams from the SWC were added, the Big Eight schools will only be able to play four non-conference games.

"There has been a lot of debate about the merger, especially about scheduling," Altman said. "We would still like to keep our non-conference schedule. If the whole league joins, then that would significantly reduce our non-conference games."

Another reason the Big Eight coaches probably are against the merger is because the SWC doesn't draw large audiences on their home courts, including football.

Last season, the Southwest Conference played to 57-percent stadium capacity.

The Big Eight schools averaged 78-percent capacity at their home games.

Wildcats to compete individually, not as team

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

K-State's track team will not compete in the Big Eight Conference Championships this Saturday at the Myriad in Oklahoma City due to NCAA sanctions levied against the Wildcats in January.

The team was cited by the NCAA for breaking regulations last season. Although K-State will not be included in team scoring totals, team members will still be allowed to win individual and relay championships.

"Track is based on individual performance," said Marlone Davis, who will be running the 600. "But there is still something in the back of my mind that tells me I won't be helping out the team."

Some of the edge has been taken off because of the sanctions, Coach Cliff Rovelto said. It will be totally an individual effort.

"I want our people to go out and get better," Rovelto said. "I want them to enjoy the opportunity to compete against some very good people."

Rovelto said he redshirted some of his top performers because of the sanctions, and that considerably weakened the team.

Gwen Wentland, Jill Montgomery, Dante McGrew and Percell Gaskins all placed in the top three of their respective events at last season's championships, and all will not participate this season.

"A lot of our scorers from last year I had to redshirt this year," Rovelto said.

However, Rovelto said the team is by no means without any talent returning to this year's championship.

Ed Broxterman and Itai Margalit placed second and third last season when the meet was at Iowa State.

or better at every meet this season. He said he it feels good to gain some consistency.

"I'm definitely more confident than last year," Broxterman said. "I don't think I'm supposed to win, but you never know what will happen."

Francis O'Neill, an outdoor all-American in the steeple chase who will be competing in the 3,000-meter, said he is psyched and ready to go.

"I feel good about my conditioning," O'Neill said. "The runners in the Big Eight are better than last year."

Freshmen Karissa Owens and Angela Showalter are two newcomers who could find themselves among the conference's best.

Showalter will compete in the 55-meter hurdles. Owens will compete in the 55-meter and the 200-meter. Owens is also a member of the mile relay team.

Nicole Green has hit the NCAA provisional qualifying standard on more than one occasion in the 200-meter and the 400-meter.

Her time of 55.00 in the 400-meter is the second best in the conference.

"I've competed against about everybody who will be there," Green said. "There won't be any surprises."

Judge pleads innocent to charges in Whitewater case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — A former judge who accused President Clinton of pressuring him to make a federally backed loan to a Clinton business associate pleaded innocent to charges that he defrauded the Small Business Administration.

David Hale pleaded innocent to similar charges last fall, but special counsel Robert Fiske Jr. obtained a superseding indictment last week which made changes in the charges against Hale. Tuesday's arraignment was in response to the new indictment.

Hale, a former Little Rock municipal judge, and co-defendants Charles Matthews and Eugene Fitzhugh face one count each of conspiracy. Hale is also charged with three counts of making false statements to the SBA. Matthews and Fitzhugh did not enter pleas.

Fiske took over the case as part of a broad probe of Arkansas business relationships known as the Whitewater investigation. President and Hillary Clinton were 50-50 investors with savings and loan owner James McDougal and his then-wife, Susan, in Whitewater Development Corp.

After his first indictment, Hale alleged that Clinton, while he was Arkansas' governor, twice pressured him into making a $300,000 loan to Susan McDougal, who owned a company that did marketing work for the Whitewater company.

Education courses may change

"Students in a critical-thinking climate will be expected to grapple with issues, become actively involved in learning and start asking questions which may not have any answers."

DAVID BALK
General Education Project Team member

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Future electrical engineers, fashion designers and architects sit side by side to learn the basics of business.

In this class of the future, general education requirements bring students with different majors and career plans together.

The General Education Project Team developed a general education proposal to target active learning and expand an undergraduate's vision and experience beyond a specialized major curriculum.

"The specific focus of general education is to broaden the knowledge base, put more variation in learning and open up more opportunities for the undergraduate," David Balk, General Education Project Team member, said.

The general education proposal will require students to select 18 hours from a list of approved general education courses. One-third of the courses must be taken during a student's junior or senior year, and all of the credits must be outside a student's major.

The credits could be used to satisfy requirements for diversity overlay or a minor and could be taken in the same college as a student's major or in different colleges within the University.

General education would not increase the amount of credits students need for graduation, but it would broaden a student's experiences by requiring them to take courses outside their majors.

"It is not a normal curriculum proposal where we're prescribing a specific set of courses. The general education proposal is a framework on which to design a common university experience for all undergraduates," Balk said.

The supporters and opponents of the general education proposal have been asked to voice their views during public hearings this week.

"The hearings are discussions across the University for people to review the proposal and give feedback, discussion and disagreement," Balk said.

The Dean's Council appointed a project team in 1991 to design a proposal to make recommendations and develop a suggested timeline for implementation of general education at K-State.

The proposal is now in its first round of examination, called the "green sheet" stage, and is under extensive University community review.

The committee will consider the views and concerns of the entire K-State community, make necessary changes and modifications and then present the new version of the proposal to Academic Affairs for consideration.

"We need to get the University aware of the proposal because general education impacts everyone," Steffany Carrel, student senator, said.

The committee is convinced courses and professors already exist which meet the general education criteria. Balk said existing courses will have to be modified, and new courses will be added to the curriculum to meet the demands of the proposal.

The existing pool of courses will be reviewed in March 1995, and the tentative date for implementation of the general education program is slated for August 1996.

The general education proposal has the vision of moving students beyond their course of study and leading them to connect ideas between their majors and general education courses. The goal of the proposal is to prepare undergraduates with a wide range of experiences before they graduate from K-State and move on to a career, Bill Schapaugh, Chairman of Academic Affairs, said.

"Students in a critical-thinking climate will be expected to grapple with issues, become actively involved in learning and start asking questions which may not have any answers," Balk said.

Child-care rates to rise by March 1

ROBYN NASH
Collegian

The walk to the mailbox may become a discouraging one for K-State students with children who use Social Rehabilitation assistance. They are going to be notified that their child-care funding is being cut.

As of March 1, Social Rehabilitation Service will be raising the amount parents have to pay for child care by 25 percent. In addition, SRS is cutting the hours the children are eligible to attend day care, Lorna Ford, director of KSU Childcare Cooperative, said.

Previously, parents got child-care assistance for the time they studied, in addition to time spent in the classroom.

This allowed the children the time to socialize and the parents the time to concentrate on their studies, Ford said.

Now, if parents want their children in day care when they need time to study, the fee comes completely out of their pockets.

And Christopher Dunn, graduate student in geography, said for him, child care is not cheap.

"If it wasn't for that extra bit (of assistance), I wouldn't have been able to get my bachelor's degree. I know what it meant to me, and I hate to see others deprived of their shot," Dunn said.

Because of the cuts, Dunn and Ford went to Topeka last week to speak to the Kansas Legislature about the harm the cuts will do to students. So far, they haven't heard whether it had any effect.

In the meantime, many K-State students who rely on SRS support will be suffering.

Ford said one of the biggest problems with the cuts is the change came in the middle of the semester.

"If you know what child-care costs will be, you can budget what your loans could be. But, changing mid-semester, you can't go back and get more loan money," Ford said.

"It's really putting parents in a child-care dilemma and a financial hardship."

Abortion repeals positive step for women in '93

"I think the Clinton administration lifting the gag rule was an important step. Even though it didn't affect campus, it doesn't matter."

When he fulfilled his first campaign promise on Jan. 22, 1993, it was cold.

On the second full day of his presidency and the 20th anniversary of Roe v. Wade, Bill Clinton sat down at his desk in the Oval Office and rescinded all abortion-related executive orders made during the Reagan and Bush administrations.

The Title X "gag rule" — which prohibited federally funded family planning clinics from counseling women about abortion — was repealed, along with the Mexico City Policy, which was a similar policy which had forbidden U.S. support for international family planning organizations that promoted abortion.

Clinton also lifted the ban on fetal-tissue research from aborted fetuses and the ban on abortion in all U.S. military bases overseas. He also ordered the Food and Drug Administration to review its ban on RU 486.

Repealing Title X was extremely beneficial to women, Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said.

"I think the Clinton administration lifting the gag rule was an important step," Davis said. "Even though it didn't affect campus, it doesn't matter."

The lifting did affect the Riley County Health Department, Davis said, because it is a federally funded clinic.

"It was gross interference with a woman's routine seeking of legal medical advice," Davis said of the executive order.

Erika Fox, director of public affairs for Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City, said the lifting of the Mexico City Policy had international repercussions.

LIFTING BANS

On Jan. 22, 1993, President Clinton rescinded all abortion-related executive orders made during the Reagan and Bush administrations.

Among those were:

- ▶ The "gag rule" on Title X which prohibited federally funded family planning clinics to counsel abortion as an option.
- ▶ Mexico City Policy — forbade U.S. support for international organizations who promote abortion.
- ▶ Prohibition of fetal tissue research from aborted fetuses.
- ▶ A ban on abortion in all United States military bases overseas.
- ▶ President Clinton also ordered the Food and Drug Administration to review its ban on RU-486.

"In the international field, the rescinding of the Mexico City Policy has greatly increased the amount of foreign aid to family-planning clinics all over the world," Fox said.

The year was an active one on the abortion front, with both pro-choice and pro-life activists gain

CONTRACTORS CAUGHT RED HANDED IN OPERATION

HOUSTON — Martin Marietta Corp. and General Electric Corp. have agreed to pay $1 million for the cost of an FBI sting operation at NASA that resulted in charges against nine people and one small corporation.

The 20-month undercover probe at the Johnson Space Center was aimed at rooting out fraud in the space agency. It involved FBI agents posing as businessmen trying to pay bribes for favors from NASA workers.

General Electric and Martin Marietta, which bought GE's aerospace division last April, were not directly implicated, but two former employees were charged with accepting bribes from FBI agents.

The civil settlement gives GE and Martin Marietta immunity from charges for a year and keeps their files open to investigators who expect to bring more charges.

U.S. Attorney Gaynelle Griffin Jones said Tuesday that agents found contractors willing to accept bribes, kickbacks and inside information on National Aeronautics and Space Administration contracts even as the agency came under fire for cost overruns and contract abuse.

BLAIR 1ST AMERICAN TO WIN 5 GOLD MEDALS

HAMAR, Norway — Gimme five. That's five — count 'em, five — gold medals around Bonnie Blair's neck. Five golden tributes to greatness. More golds than Dick Button or Brian Boitano, Dorothy Hamill or Peggy Fleming, Mary Lou Retton Wilma Rudolph ever won.

She's not bashful, not controversial, not conversational. She's not a quote machine who loves to hear herself talk and see her words in print. She's so much the All-American Girl, she'd probably have to pay to be on "Inside Edition" or "Hard Copy" rather than the other way around.

So, then, what exactly is Bonnie

Blair? Only the greatest U.S. female Olympian ever; the greatest U.S. Winter Olympian ever.

"Maybe in time I'll realize what I've done," Blair said Wednesday after winning her second-straight Olympic speedskating 1,000-meter gold medal. "All I know is I loved skating and loved competing."

"I think she will be remembered as the greatest women's speedskating sprinter ever, one of our greatest athletes ever," U.S. coach Nick Thometz said. "Bonnie just does not like to lose."

Maybe that's why she hardly ever does.

STADIUM PULLS FLAG WITH CONFEDERATE EMBLEM

ATLANTA — The board that governs Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium voted unanimously today to stop flying the Georgia flag there because its design includes the Confederate battle emblem.

The decision by the Atlanta-Fulton County Recreation Authority means the state flag will not fly during Atlanta Braves home games this season. It also would not fly during the 1996 Summer Olympics, when the stadium will be used for baseball.

Opponents of the flag contend it is racist because it includes the Confederate battle flag emblem — cross blue bars with stars on a red field. Gov. Zell Miller tried to get the flag changed during last year's Legislature, but he dropped the effort because not enough legislators supported it.

The stadium board had considered flying the pre-1956 state flag, which did not include the Confederate battle emblem. But board members decided removing the flag would send a more powerful message.

1 DEAD, 9 INJURED IN HOTEL BLAZE

ERIE, Pa. — A fire destroyed a three-story residential hotel early Wednesday, killing at least one person and injuring nine, authorities said.

Sixteen people were believed to be at the Station 1 Hotel when the fire began at about 3:30 a.m., Erie Police Lt. Tom Adams said. Eleven people were pulled out of or jumped from the building, and four others were still unaccounted-for six hours later, Adams said.

"I've never seen a fire spread that fast before. It was unbelievable," police Sgt. James Perfetto, who was off duty when he discovered the fire, said.

PROPOSAL MIGHT DROP SOME TOLLS

TOPEKA — The House Transportation Committee heard testimony Wednesday on a bill that would eliminate tolls on portions of the Kansas Turnpike.

The bill would eliminate the toll between exits serving the same city. Topeka, El Dorado, Wichita and Lawrence would be affected.

Rep. Rocky Nichols, D-Topeka, said the bill would stimulate economic growth in Topeka.

"I believe it would become an incredible economic benefit to Kansas and the cities with two or more exits," he said.

It costs only 20 cents to travel between the east and south Topeka exits, but, Nichols said, that amount deters commuters from using the turnpike.

Salute to Spring Break. Coming March 3.

Kerrigan wins 1st round; Harding out

Kerrigan surpasses world champ; Harding finishes in 10th place

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAMAR, Norway — Nancy Kerrigan soared above Tonya Harding and the rest of the field Wednesday to win the opening round in the most-anticipated women's figure skating competition ever.

In a triumphant return to competition from a clubbing attack, Kerrigan even surpassed world champion Oksana Baiul's "Swan Lake" routine and placed first in the technical program portion of the Olympic competition.

Baiul, from Ukraine, was second and France's Surya Bonaly was third going into Friday's free skate, worth two-thirds of the total score.

Harding, who skated near the beginning of the evening, finished 10th and ended up an afterthought, out of medal contention.

Kerrigan presented a nearly flawless short program, providing a dynamic climax to the evening.

Amid a sea of waving American flags and deafening applause, Kerrigan hit a strong triple lutz-double toe loop combination to open the program. Then came a double axel and double flip.

Her lowest score for technical merit was 5.6, and her presentation marks ranged from 5.6 to 5.9.

She ranked first with every judge except Great Britain and Ukraine, who put Baiul, who skated earlier, on top.

Baiul, 16, captivated the crowd and — it seemed — the judges as the delicate black swan from "Swan Lake."

She drew six 5.9s for presentation, and her only mistake was a two-footed landing on her triple lutz combination.

As Kerrigan skated, Harding watched from a booth in the Olympic Amphitheatre, clapping politely and looking stony-faced.

Harding, whose ex-husband has implicated her in the attack on Kerrigan, did what she had fought hard to do — skate at the Olympics.

She completed her short program without hitting the ice, something she hadn't done in a week of practices.

"I was happy with it," she said afterwards. "I'm happy with the performance."

Dressed in the same red-sequined halter top outfit she wore during last month's U.S. championships, Harding stepped on the ice to enthusiastic applause and more than a dozen American flags waving.

"There was a lot of support out there, and it felt great," Harding said.

She opened her two-minute, 40-second program with a triple lutz-double toe loop combination, but had to stop between the jumps to keep her balance. That would result in a deduction by the judges.

"I thought it was fine," she said. "You can't be perfect every time."

Skating to music from "Much Ado About Nothing," Harding drew cheers from the crowd on her layback spin.

She had a wobbly landing on her double flip, another of eight required elements in the program, but finished with a strong double axel.

While most skaters play to the judges at least a little bit, Harding appeared to never look at the nine-member panel, even when skating close to the judges' seats.

Her first set of marks — for technical merit — ranged from 4.8 to 5.3, the latter from the Canadian judge. Her presentation marks ranged from 5.3 to 5.6.

Two-time gold medalist Katarina Witt skated fourth and was the early highlight. She finished sixth.

Harding's marks placed her behind Witt — who skated a simple but clean program to the music from "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves."

China's Chen Lu was in fourth place, ahead of Germany's Tanja Swewczenko, Witt and Japan's Yuka Sato.

Wednesday's technical program counts for a third of the total score.

Medals will be awarded after Friday's free skating, which counts for two-thirds.

Many students in the K-State Union were glued to the television sets Wednesday night to see Tonya Harding and Nancy Kerrigan compete in the women's figure skating preview.

Reactions were mixed among a modest crowd at Union Station.

"Kerrigan is gonna kick her butt," Doug Urban, junior in art education, said. "No matter what happens, Kerrigan will come out on top."

Myliissa Smith, senior in pre-veterinary medicine and animal industry, said both girls are under a lot of stress.

Smith said she especially thinks it wasn't fair for the media to dig up Harding's past.

Lisa Mayhugh, senior in life sciences and pre-physical therapy, said she thought that the Olympic committee did the right thing by letting Harding compete.

However, she said she also thought Harding had some knowledge about the attack planned on Kerrigan. She added that Harding won't win the gold, but she'd like to see Kerrigan win.

More people were located in the Union television lounge watching the competition.

Amy Weldon, freshman in business administration, said she just wants to watch them compete.

She said she hopes Kerrigan wins, because she thinks Tonya was involved in the attack.

"Personally, she has a stuck-up attitude about her," she said. Weldon said she thought that even though Harding has come a long way, she doesn't need to brag.

Kim Miller, sophomore undecided, said she feels sorry for Harding, but she thinks Harding knew it happened.

"I don't want to think she did it," Miller said.

After Harding's performance, Jon Strahus, senior in mechanical engineering, gave his own critique.

The first spin was bad, and he concluded that Harding knew all along about the attack. He added that he felt neither of the two women will win the gold.

Robert Goings, senior in anthropology, said he gives Harding the benefit of the doubt.

He said that there was way too much hype. He said he felt the media didn't do her any justice.

Kerrigan placed first in the technical program, and Harding placed 10th overall.

Bosnians sign cease-fire treaty

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian government and Bosnian Croat military chiefs, under mounting diplomatic pressure, Wednesday signed a cease-fire agreement, effective Friday, Croatian state television reported.

While previous cease-fires have all collapsed, there was heightened pressure on both sides to silence their guns in the wake of a two-week truce around the Bosnian capital Sarajevo.

Word of the accord came after almost five hours of negotiations in the Croatian capital, Zagreb, between Rasim Delic, the Bosnian government commander and Ante Roso, the Bosnian Croat commander.

Significantly, the talks were attended by Gen. Jean Cot, the U.N. commander in all of former Yugoslavia, and Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, the commander of U.N. forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

No details of the agreement were immediately known, but the cease-fire would apply to central Bosnia, Mostar and other parts to the southeast of the war-torn republic where the two sides have been locked in bitter fighting for at least 10 months.

The United States considers an end to the fighting between Bosnian Croats and Muslim-led government forces in central Bosnia crucial to an overall peace settlement. Numerous previous cease-fires have failed.

Bosnian Croats and the government were initially allies but are now battling for the 30 percent of Bosnia not claimed by the Serbs.

The cease-fire agreement reflected a new diplomatic push in the wake of the success of NATO's demand that Bosnian Serbs remove their heavy weapons from around Sarajevo.

There have been hopes that the plan that worked for Sarajevo would work elsewhere in the country, but the shooting on Tuesday of five Swedish peacekeepers near the government-held city of Tuzla underscored the difficulty of realizing those hopes.

NATO jets were called to fly cover for U.N. peacekeepers after the Tuesday shooting.

The alliance jets flew low over the area later in the day but did not fire because of lack of specific target information, U.N. officials said today. But NATO warned that it would use air power to protect peacekeepers.

McDonald's bans smoking in company-owned stores

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — McDonald's Corp. Wednesday banned smoking in its 1,400 company-owned restaurants in the United States, the second fast-food chain to make a sweeping statement about the threat of secondhand smoke.

With Wednesday's announcement, more than 3,600 of 9,100 McDonald's stores nationwide will be smoke-free. About 2,200 had already ended smoking by the end of last year, including company-owned and franchised restaurants, the company said.

The move, effective immediately, comes one week after the Texas attorney general sued McDonald's and four other restaurant chains, demanding that they either make their restaurants smoke-free, ventilate them better or post signs warning of second-hand smoke.

The Environmental Protection Agency has said second-hand smoke is a carcinogen that kills about 3,000 nonsmokers a year from lung cancer and is responsible for up to 300,000 cases of bronchitis and pneumonia in children.

The Tobacco Institute, a Washington-based group that represents tobacco companies, is challenging the estimates.

McDonald's, the nation's largest fast-food chain, said the idea began with a test in 40 restaurants a year ago.

"At Commerce Bank, we know it's tough to do your best in school if you're hassled by money problems. So we offer Money 101 — a package of banking services especially for college students. Use any or all of them.

Money 101 is a Student Loan Program with a difference. All student loans are the same — same rates, same terms. Only the banks are different. And Commerce Bank can save you interest. While other banks capitalize interest as many as 16 times while you're in school, Commerce doesn't until you graduate — meaning real interest savings.

Money 101 includes a Student VISA or MasterCard to help you get the things you need — and cash advances, too.

The low-cost Money 101 Checking Account helps you keep track of expenses with a complete monthly statement.

And for maximum convenience, sign up for Money 101's Connection 24 Card. It gives you access to your checking and savings accounts 24 hours a day at any Connection 24 ATM (Automated Teller Machine) in Kansas — and other CIRRUS and BankMate ATMs nationwide.

So call me or stop by today and sign up for Money 101 — find out how top performance banking can help your performance at school."

FEBRUARY 24, 1994

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Vice presidency deserves second chance

We need a system in which students have the opportunity to elect the second highest person in student government.

The new position of vice president created by Student Senate took its first casualty at the end of last semester.

However, Vice President Eric Henry's resignation should not be reason for eliminating the position.

His resignation after having completed only one-half of his term in office shows the need for guidelines to be established — some outline of what that position should do.

The sponsors of the bill intended for the vice president to exclusively serve as a backup to the president, which means that if the president resigned, the elected vice president would replace him.

A job description for the vice presidency needs to be included in the Student Government Association Constitution By-Laws. Appropriate duties might include handling external affairs for the president and serving as chair of the Educational Opportunity Fund committee.

The time-consuming job of chairing the EOF, which gives out more than $200,000 annually, would be a perfect job for the vice president.

What we shouldn't do is turn the position into an appointed position rather than an elected one. We need a system in which students continue to have the opportunity to elect the second highest person in student government.

Henry's decision to resign is not enough reason for abolishing the vice presidency while it is in its infancy.

Fewer visits from Tubbs a plus in conference change

K-State and company have scored big by inviting four powerful members of the Southwest Conference to join us beginning with the 1996-97 season.

The University of Texas, Texas A&M, Texas Tech and Baylor would join Oklahoma State and Oklahoma in a southern division; the northern division would comprise K-State, Kansas, Iowa State, Missouri and Colorado. This alignment would be used to schedule regular-season games and playoffs.

Talk of expanded markets and bigger TV contracts would probably put you to sleep faster than a calculus lecture, so I'll try to avoid that. If I need a few inches at the end when I'm done, though, I'm sure you'll hear plenty about it.

What I'd like to focus on is the potential boost the big boys from down south could provide for various sports.

Of course, when people think of sports in Texas, the first thing that comes to mind is football. The SWC has a football tradition as grand as any other conference but has stumbled on hard times of late. Last year, only two members made postseason appearances, and both lost. Texas A&M, the class of SWC football the last few years, will be on probation next year.

But all is not lost for Texas. Baylor's football program, despite a poor season last year, has been a force in the recent past and shows signs of improving.

And don't count out the University of Texas. Under the leadership of Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds, the Longhorns are rebuilding a program that will soon be competing for the title.

And though I said I'd try not to talk about money, a potential conference championship game in Arrowhead Stadium would mean big returns for the Kansas City area and big home crowds for the Cats' Orange Bowl bids.

The other significant revenue sport, men's basketball, should also benefit from the proposed merger. Again, on the surface the SWC looks as if it has little to offer. Beyond Texas, there are no conference contenders for NCAA spots.

But Baylor and Texas Tech have had strong teams in recent years. Texas A&M (whom the Cats defeated earlier this year) is receiving votes in the Associated Press Top 25 poll. It has been suggested that we would be adding three new Colorados to the conference. But even Colorado can recruit some big-name players (Donnie Boyce, Shaun Vandiver, Stevie Wise) and win some big games.

And can anyone argue with a plan that will mean fewer visits by Billy Tubbs?

Perhaps our biggest gains will come in other sports. Despite the consistent quality of OSU's teams, the recent appearance of Kansas in the College World Series and the placement of a K-Stater on the '92 Olympic team, the Big Eight is not known as a baseball conference.

The Southwest Conference, however, often fields some of the best teams in the nation. Not only will the addition of a Texas branch of the conference lead to increased baseball TV revenues (sorry — I had to mention it), but we should also have better luck recruiting.

The other sport that will undoubtedly improve with the addition of the Texas schools is women's basketball. Big Eight women's hoops — with two nationally ranked teams, one in the top three — is nothing to frown at, but Texas and Texas Tech are two of the traditional powers in the nation, with Tech being the current defending champions.

DAN LEWERENZ

The benefits of the proposed realignment are tremendous. There are a few things that need to be worked out (What happens to the Nebraska vs. Oklahoma football game? Isn't there some disparity in ability level between the north and south in basketball? Where will conference tournaments and playoff games take place?), but those will come in time.

The increased level of respect in some sports, the increased competition in all, the chance to send Tubbs to his own little corner of the world and ignore his ranting and raving, and the increased revenue that will inevitably come from the realignment are more than enough reasons to support it.

Dan Lewerenz is a junior in American ethnic studies and philosophy.

MOVING ON UP

If the University of Texas, Texas A&M, Texas Tech and Baylor enter the Big Eight, they would join Oklahoma State and Oklahoma in a southern division. The northern division would be made up of K-State, Kansas, Iowa State, Missouri and Colorado.

'Friendly fire' on 'Parking Services'

I love the English language, but it falls short in a few areas.

It's not just the bombardment of traditional phrases by politically correct manipulation.

It's everywhere. Sometimes, a traditional label just totally misses the mark. Oxymorons, for example, sound like they should be idiotic teenagers with acne problems.

But an oxymoron is a contradiction in terms, like friendly fire. Jumbo shrimp. Military intelligence. Plastic silverware. Deafening silence. Original copy. Media ethics. Half naked. They negate themselves.

I wish the English language would call things what they are. For example, don't beat around the bush about what the person you're busing with should be called.

Don't call them boyfriends or girlfriends. That's not what they are. By that definition, everyone who has friends of both sexes is bisexual. For God's sake, don't call them your significant other. That sounds like something that goes behind a coefficient. Let's get literal. Boyfriends and girlfriends are pleasuremates.

And what made people come up with the word government, anyway? You know what a government is? A bunch of people in suits with access to our money, which they use to buy guns to steal more money to buy more guns to steal more money ... I see a pattern developing here. So, let's change the national seal. The feds should be dubbed Bureaucrats With Guns.

Parking Services. That label conjures up images of valets and oil changes for me. These people are not parking your cars or running ahead of you yelling, "There's a great spot right next to the Union! Hurry!"

They are lurking behind trees and meters waiting for your quarter to run out so they can ticket you 10 seconds before you arrive breathless after jogging two blocks. Is there a subdivision of Parking Services called Wheellock Services?

They should rename themselves Parking Ticketing. Because Parking Services implies that these people are helping you park. And they're not, that's for sure.

Political Parties. It's almost a contradiction in terms. A political party would be a bunch of Democrats or Republicans getting rowdy together after gaining office. Joan Finney would dance on table tops while Al and Tipper danced again, and Strom Thurmond knocked back and enjoyed a cold one. You see? It just wouldn't happen. But that would be a political party.

School board. There's one. They are not a board. School board members are not made of knotty pine. They are your friends' parents who had enough money to stick cheap signs in community yards and get your parents to vote for them.

They then have the divine right to police the local school for perverted teachers and little punks with switchblades. But they have nothing to do with wood, even though they might look like they're composed of it.

First Lady. Oh-kay! Just because she marries the president doesn't mean she's a lady.

I think we can all see a glaring example of the flaw in this theory. She's throwing lamps around on Capitol Hill right now. And what is the first thing all about? First in what? Did she win some race in the Rose Garden? Florence Griffith-Joyner would be the First Lady, not Hillary. Hillary only runs from independent investigators. But usually she just stands behind a podium.

I wonder if there is an excuse for this garbage. Did some king in a Germanic society decree, "Thee shalt not call it as thee sees it?" Or do we like it? Is it a form of avoidance from the ugly truth? Probably.

But English is still beautiful because it changes every day. It is always evolving a step ahead of us. In 200 years, this column will be even more incoherent to the reader, should anyone find it.

Until then, call things as you see them. If Parking Services services you, do as my friend does. Make out your check to "Parking Services Opportunistic Scum."

► DEATH PENALTY

Save sympathy for victims, not murderers

Dear Editor,

It is not just the fear in people that makes them want the death penalty; it is pure anger for the injustice committed by the murderer.

Why should killers be allowed to live a long and fruitful life when the person who has been murdered will never see the light of day, smell the fresh morning air or feel the sweet kiss of their lover.

It seems murderers are turned into victims of society because they had terrible youths. Who cares. All that matters is that they took another person's life, and that is wrong.

I would like to give my opinion on President Clinton's "three-strikes-and-you're-out" policy. I think it is sick of the president to think of crime in terms of a baseball game.

Under Clinton's policy, if someone kills once the judicial system has him rehabilitated once more. The killer is then given his final chance to live in society where he kills once more.

This time, instead of a slap on the wrist, he gets spanked and locked up for life.

In lock-up, he gets three square meals a day, gets to watch television and sleep in a bed while three innocent victims sleep eternally in a cold, dark, damp place six feet underground.

► PETITION DRIVE

Peltier needs our help to achieve freedom

Dear Editor,

Last semester, several hundred members of our K-State community joined in the international campaign seeking executive clemency for Leonard Peltier. Signed petitions, letters and e-mail were sent to the White House.

On Dec. 20, a national delegation met with President Clinton on behalf of Peltier, seeking release for the Native American leader and activist by Christmas.

While that hoped-for release did not occur, we are closer, and the effort to obtain Peltier's freedom continues. His clemency petition is currently with the pardon attorney and is next in line for consideration by Clinton.

There is more to be done, and we can help. For those who are not familiar with Peltier's case, PBS (channel 11) will broadcast "Warrior: The Story of Leonard Peltier" tonight at 9.

Petitions for your signatures or distribution are available at the reception desk of the Student Activities and Services Office (formerly called the SGA office) on the lower level of the Union. Also, write, call or fax President Clinton.

Leonard Peltier has been jailed for 17 years for a crime he didn't commit. Other countries in our world community, and many U.S. college textbooks and other literature, consider him a political prisoner of the United States. It's time to correct this injustice. Let's continue to support the effort to rectify this prominent human-rights violation.

► PHELPS

Minister's daughter defends family protests

Dear Editor,

While your article about our picket of the homosexual-sympathetic play "Bent" on your campus was objective, the column by freshman Aaron Otto ("Phelps like a rash that won't go away") was borderline hysterical — apparently what he was when he wrote it.

Before Mr. Otto proceeds much further with his "political science and pre-law" education, he should learn to appreciate the importance of a modicum of research before he puts pen to published paper.

I mean, a little libel is sometimes good for a laugh, but the drivel he put out as thoughtful editorializing sounded more like the ranting we draw out of angered homosexual counterprotesters who are shooting from the hip.

For example, that fairy tale about a "group of people" getting "restraining orders" whereby "if they all go to Gage Park and stand about 25 feet apart, Phelps cannot enter the park." Get real! Not only did such a thing never happen, my experience practicing law for nearly a decade would suggest it never could.

To borrow a phrase from my dad (pardon the cultish tendencies), we're swimming in a sea of fag lies.

But, that's all right. People like Mr. Otto don't understand people like us, because they either will not or cannot understand what motivates us — a sincerely held belief that this country is in the throes of a life-and-death struggle for its collective soul, centered around the increased and forced acceptance of homosexuality as merely an innocent alternative lifestyle.

We happily and vigorously do that, despite the guaranteed revilements of the politically correct masses.

TOLES

Face it now — there is no such thing as free health care

JOANN

Night after night, I listen to the news on television and hear the figures of 58 million Americans in a health-care crisis. I wonder who could possibly wish these people be denied access to medical treatment. Seriously, I don't think anyone wishes that.

I am a student on a limited budget. I do not choose to invest in health insurance; yet, when I do seek medical attention, I receive excellent health care. Like me, many Americans without health insurance are in school or between jobs.

When I was selected for nine months of study in the United Kingdom, I was also pleased to learn I would have "free" health-care coverage during my stay. I was required to have a complete physical examination, but that is a small price to pay for "full coverage" for nine months, right? I was wrong.

My experiences with "free" health care were not what I had expected. First, upon arriving in the United Kingdom I was not allowed to select a physician but rather was assigned one randomly when I went to the student clinic. However, this is called "selecting" your physician.

Secondly, when I developed symptoms I felt merited urgent care, the quickest I could make an appointment for was 3-1/2 weeks.

I determined another clinic, that was not so crowded, would better suit my needs, but other clinics refused me because I had already been taken care of. I eventually learned that all of the clinics were overburdened with patients.

My roommates were more persistent than me. After making an appointment, they would arrive at the clinic between 7 and 7:30 a.m. and wait for several hours to see the doctor, then be refused prescriptions drugs no matter how much they pleaded. Their ailments ranged from colds and flu to contagious measles and intense muscular pain. The advice was always the same — "Take plenty of fluids, and get lots of rest."

I was happy to learn a friend of mine was pregnant. She had been living in London with her husband while he was studying. However, I was saddened when she confided in me she had decided to return to the United States to get prenatal care she could be confident in. I certainly could not blame her.

Finally, I contracted a bronchial infection. As I lay in bed coughing, trying to decide what to do, I couldn't help but think about another student in my program who had been admitted into a mental institution for weeks before she was allowed to call home. ("She snapped," authorities said. But she seemed to be just a little more rambunctious than the rest of the students.) When I coughed up a small amount of blood, I decided it was time to do something. I purchased a plane ticket home.

My "free" health care was more costly than I had bargained for. I have never been so happy to walk into a clean, colorful office of a family practitioner for a first-time visit.

True, probably not all "free" health clinics in England offer the poor service I observed, but it is the rule rather than the exception.

However, I did try to the best of my ability to find alternate care, and I was denied that right by the government-regulated health-care providers.

The clinics and hospitals I observed were not adequately equipped with modern equipment.

The medical school on campus did not display a commitment to medical research and improved technology.

Nightly, the news reported increased closings of hospital beds and facilities. Special news reports had interviews of medical professionals so overworked that their performance (and patients) suffered.

Specialized, life-saving equipment is limited to key locations, primarily London. Children are often admitted in hospitals hundreds of miles away from their families to receive needed treatment. The general population also seems to exhibit an exceptionally high degree of physical deformities and handicaps.

I realize denying people "free" health care sounds barbaric, especially when we are singled out as the only developed nation that does so.

However, I question President Clinton's plan to "make history by reforming the health-care system."

In his State of the Union address, Clinton said, "We have got to solve the health-care problem to have real welfare reform."

I understand his reasoning but question whether his proposal to put every American on health-care welfare is the best action to take. Just as most welfare recipients are glad to have the help of welfare but would prefer to have a higher level of income, wouldn't most Americans who are happy to have health-care coverage prefer to have better health care than the government system provides?

In recent polls, more than 80 percent of Americans indicated they were happy with their health-care coverage. It seems like we should concentrate on the problem of 20 percent who are unhappy with health insurance, rather than put every person in America on health welfare.

The main difference between the current student health-care plan at K-State and proposed complete coverage plans is after paying the required health fees, we now have a choice to go somewhere else if not satisfied with our service.

This competition results in high standards in health care. With plans where equal treatment is mandated, we will still pay the required fees, only we will eventually not have the freedom to opt out if we are not satisfied with our service.

Why should we settle for the same plan of other developed countries that have failed so miserably time after time?

Government-guaranteed health care is failing in England and Canada. Cradle-to-grave services in Cuba and Europe have bankrupted their economies.

It is indeed a tragedy when individuals lack the resources to get necessary health care.

But why must this prosperous nation of creative people who are constantly pushing forward for better treatments, improved health care and new technologies settle for the sadly inadequate system already failing in other nations?

There are many ways to help those without insurance when they are in need, without harming those who are happy with their present health care.

A better plan would allow individuals the freedom to choose which physicians they trust with their lives.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Announcing the Big Nine: Baylor joins conference

DEREK SIMMONS

Collegian

Baylor is in.

The Board of Regents of Baylor University voted unanimously Wednesday to sever its ties with the Southwest Conference and accept an invitation from the Big Eight Conference to join its league.

The offer, which was constructed by the Big Eight in order to make the most lucrative television contract, could mean the end of the 79-year-old Southwest Conference.

"We feel it will offer us an opportunity to increase the university's exposure on a national basis and will provide our alumni and students an opportunity to be a part of one of the major national conferences in the country," Thomas Powers, chairman of the Baylor regents, said.

"Baylor is proud and pleased to be offered an invitation to join the Big Eight Conference.

"The financial possibilities of the new alliance are exciting and should help Baylor and other schools involved to offer athletics to more students and to more broadly diversify the programs available to them," Powers said.

The creation of the new league would make its debut in 1996.

The remaining three schools involved in the offer — Texas, Texas A&M and Texas Tech — are expected to enlist later this week, forming a 12-member conference.

Will the other schools follow Baylor's actions, completing the expansion deal?

"I would think so," K-State Athletic Director Max Urlick said Wednesday. "But not knowing the politics of Texas makes it hard to speculate.

"The discussion has really progressed. It is all moving rather quickly."

The Associated Press reported a source said the deadline for the deal was Friday. K-State Athletic Director Max Urlick said there has been no set deadline.

"There really wasn't a deadline set at all," he said. "It was just a target. We thought we would get together and talk about it Friday, but there was no set deadline."

The Big Eight made the proposal earlier this week, excluding four other members of the SWC.

The members not included in the deal were Houston, Rice, Southern Methodist and Texas Christian.

The Big Eight schools voted unanimously to invite the other four universities on Monday during a teleconference.

Baylor President Herbert Reynolds said the university is excited about the possibilities of becoming part of a new conference but is also melancholy in light of leaving the SWC.

"We're looking forward to the challenge," Reynolds said.

"I believe it's a new era for us. We view this as a wonderful opportunity, which is also tinged with sadness over the breakup of the Southwest Conference, of which we were a charter member."

Baylor, with an enrollment of about 12,000 students and located in Waco, Texas, will be the sole private school in the new conference.

Additionally, Baylor is the oldest university in Texas and the largest private institution.

The Associated Press contributed to this story.

Iowa State 95, Oklahoma 82

Fred Hoiberg and Hurl Beechum led a second-half run that allowed Iowa State to pull away and beat Oklahoma 95-82 Wednesday night.

Hoiberg finished with 25 points and Beechum had 17 as the Cyclones (13-10, 3-8 Big Eight) won for just the third time on the road.

BIG EIGHT

Cat coaches excited by merger

JEREMY CRABTREE

Collegian

The possible addition of four schools from the Southwest Conference into the Big Eight Conference has K-State coaches excited.

Baylor University accepted the offer to join the Big Eight Wednesday afternoon. Texas, Texas Tech and Texas A&M have also been offered to join the Big Eight.

Baseball coach Mike Clark said the new league would become the premiere baseball conference in the country.

"If it indeed goes through, it will be an unbelievably good baseball conference," Clark said. "It's really exciting that the Big Eight is doing something to improve itself."

Texas has won two national championships and is 6-3 this season. The same success has also been achieved at Texas A&M.

Last season, the Aggies finished with a 53-11 record and captured the SWC title. They also made an appearance in the College World Series last season.

K-State will play in College Station, Texas, from March 10 to 14 in the Aggie Continental Classic. Texas A&M will be host to the Classic.

Clark said the possible new additions to the Big Eight will help his program several ways.

"Finally, things will balance out," Clark said. "We always have to go down south to play those type of schools. Maybe now, this will force them to come up here to God's country and play in the cold."

SWC

Golf coach Mark Elliott said the new additions will help, especially in facing Texas.

"Texas is always in the top 10 in the country," Elliott said. "We'll get to see them even more. Baylor is the only other team that I've seen so far."

Elliott also said the conference tournament would be interesting.

"When we try to recruit people, we try to sell them on playing Oklahoma State, which is always at the top," Elliott said. "But playing against Texas and the others might give them another reason to come to K-State."

In track, the schools from Texas will make the league a lot more challenging, Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"Texas and Baylor have very strong programs," Rovelto said. "Texas Tech isn't as strong as the others. Still, though, it will greatly enhance the Big Eight."

Rovelto offered a different perspective on how the merger would help the track program.

"The way I look at improving individually is how the league improves on a whole," Rovelto said. "If it improves, then we will have stronger athletes."

"We always have to go down south to play those type of schools. Maybe now, this will force them to come up here to God's country and play in the cold."

LINCOLN — Nebraska opened up a 24-point halftime lead on No. 10 Kansas and hung on to send the Jayhawks to their third-straight loss, 96-87, Wednesday night.

The Cornhuskers hit 61 percent of their shots in the first half, forced 13 Kansas turnovers and out-rebounded the taller Jayhawks 22-13 on their way to a 58-34 halftime lead.

"The first half was as good of basketball as we have played all season," Nebraska coach Danny Nee said. "We had very high energy on defense, and Kansas never got untracked. The three fell, we made our free throws and we executed on offense."

Senior guard Eric Piatkowski led the offense, scoring 18 points and getting six rebounds in the first 20 minutes.

"We know we are all good shooters, and eventually they are going to fall," Piatkowski said. "Once you make a few, it's like an avalanche — they just keep coming."

Kansas coach Roy Williams praised the Huskers' efforts. "They played exceptional basketball the first 20 minutes and made more shots against us than anybody has made against us all year," Williams said.

"But what really got me was we didn't play as well as we could have played, and we didn't do the little things. They had a 24-point lead, and if we had done our part, it would have been a 14- or 12-point lead."

Nebraska cooled off in the second half, hitting only 40 percent of its shots. But the Jayhawks trailed by 20 with 6:39 remaining.

Then Steve Woodberry scored six quick points to trigger a Kansas rally that saw the Jayhawks outscore Nebraska 21-4 in the next six minutes, cutting the lead to just 90-87 on Patrick Richey's layup with 32 seconds remaining.

Piatkowski, who finished the game with 33 points, clinched the victory for Nebraska, hitting four free throws in the final 30 seconds.

"It was a lot of fun there at the end of the game," Williams said. "We almost stole the inbound pass, but we had to foul. And Eric went to the free-throw line and hit four in a row."

Nebraska looked in disarray in the final five minutes, but Piatkowski said the Huskers didn't crumble under pressure.

"I don't think we really panicked. I know we were upset at ourselves for some of the stupid things we did," Piatkowski said. "It's a W in the column against a Top 10 team. I don't care if we win by one or 20. I don't care. It's still a win."

Teams face must-wins as season ends

TROY HALTERMAN

With the intramural basketball regular season coming to an end, several teams are still fighting for spots in the playoffs.

Wednesday's intramural basketball action showcased several do-or-die games for teams trying to make the playoffs.

Three games matched undefeated teams playing for a spot in the playoffs. One game had seventh-ranked Mad Face Invasion playing Run & Gun. Both teams were playing for a spot in the independent division tournament.

Mad Face Invasion rolled to an easy 42-29 victory with a strong pressure defense and some hot second-half shooting. The victory finished off an undefeated regular season for Mad Face Invasion.

In another game for a spot in the tournament, it was Indo-Smoke defeating the Bombers, 52-48, in a game that went down to the wire.

Trailing 38-25 with only 7:50 left in the game, the Bombers started a run and actually tied the game at 45-45 with less than a minute to play.

"I think our defensive pressure was the key in the game," Indo-Smoke team member Jerome Stokes, senior in psychology, said.

"We missed several free throws down the stretch that let them get back in it."

With the game on the line, the Bombers turned over the ball twice in the final minute and missed two key free throws. Indo-Smoke converted the two turnovers into four points and escaped with the victory.

With the win, Indo-Smoke advanced to the 6-foot-and-under tournament.

The win also capped a perfect 5-0 regular season for Indo-Smoke.

"We are really excited to make the playoffs. This was one of our goals at the start of the season," Stokes said. "Going into the season, we weren't sure where we stood."

In late action, two teams ranked in the top 10 squared off to see who would advance. Sigma Alpha Epsilon, ranked third, played the sixth-ranked Tau Kappa Epsilon.

This marked the second time this year two ranked teams have played where the winner will advance to the playoffs.

With the regular season all but over, the attention now is focused on the playoffs.

"We will have the brackets for the playoffs ready by Thursday night," assistant intramural director Bryan Skinner said.

"There are a couple of tie-breaker games that have to be played, but those should be finished by Thursday."

One playoff game will involve Purple Reign, which was ranked last week. However, after being forced to forfeit a game for using an ineligible player, it must win a one-game playoff to advance.

Each division will have a tournament to determine the champion, and then the winners will square off for the all-university championship.

BLAIR STRIKES FIFTH GOLD; U.S. HOCKEY TEAM LOSES

> SPEEDSKATING —

American Bonnie Blair won her fifth Olympic gold medal Wednesday in women's 1,000-meter race. The time was second-fastest of her career. The medal made Blair the top U.S. medal winner in Winter Olympic history with five gold and one bronze.

> ICE HOCKEY — While Blair won her medal, the U.S. hockey team was being trounced by Finland 6-1 in Wednesday's quarterfinal match. The loss ended any hopes the U.S. team had of repeating its 1980 gold medal performance. The best America can do these games is fifth place.

> MEDAL RACE —

Russia still leads the medal race with 21 medals (10 gold, seven silver and four bronze). Norway maintains its second place standing with 17 medals (eight gold, seven silver and two bronze.) The U.S. is in fifth place with four gold, three silver and one bronze medal.

► CONTROLLER ELECTED CACUBO TREASURER

K-State's controller has been elected treasurer of an organization representing chief business officers at more than 600 institutions.

Keith Ratzloff, who has been controller at K-State since November 1988, was elected treasurer of the Central Association of College and University Business Officers (CACUBO) at the organization's annual meeting. Because of this position he will also be a member of the board of directors and serve on the business and finance committee.

CACUBO is one of four branches of the national association in Washington.

CACUBO, which was chartered in 1915, is a nonprofit organization that represents the north-central region of the United States. Its intent is to encourage all levels of management in business and finance areas to strive for higher education.

"It influences legislation that affects higher education in a positive way," Ratzloff said.

Ratzloff has been associated with CACUBO for almost 10 years, during which he has done committee work and served as chair of the Drive-in Work Shop Committee. This committee gives the business officers at member-institutions a chance to discuss ideas about such things as cost accounting and IRS exposure.

"I believe that if we can better educate or better train the administrators of the University, that has got to provide some positive fallout back to the student population," Ratzloff said.

These workshops are intended to be in an area where a representative from every member institution in that region could make the trip in one day to lower travel costs.

Of the 600 institution members, there are small colleges, along with two-year and four-year institutions. All of the members must apply and pay dues.

Ratzloff said he feels the organization brings leadership not only to K-State, but has given him personal benefit in his career as well.

"It has given me the opportunity to grow and strengthen my administrative abilities," he said.

However, Ratzloff said the organization is of equal value to students as it is to the University.

► CLASSIFIED EMPLOYEE NOMINEES ANNOUNCED

Classified Senate has announced its nominees for the Classified Employee of the Year competition.

The winners will be announced during the 17th Annual Classified Employee Recognition Ceremony.

The finalists in the service and skilled crafts category are Manuel Garcia, G.M.R.T.I., in the Southwest Research Extension Center; Charlotte Prockish, custodial supervisor in the Department of Housing and Dining Services; and Annie Sanders, cook for the Department of Human Development and Family Studies.

The finalists in the office and clerical category are Linda Bottom, office assistant IV; Nancy Hillan, secretary III; and Claire Waffle, office specialist.

The finalists in the technical and professional employee category are Patrick Evans, agricultural technician; Daniel Foster, plant science technician; and C. Ruth Nellis, librarian.

The awards ceremony will be at 3 p.m. April 20 in McCain Auditorium.

MUSICALLY DEMANDING

BAND DIRECTOR INSPIRES STUDENTS TO WORK

CARON CITRO
Collegian

Teachers who grate on your nerves and demand more than you can deliver are often remembered long after graduation.

Frank Tracz, director of bands, is one of those annoying, demanding professors.

That is probably the reason he gets so much mail from former students. And it isn't hate mail.

Geralyn Tracz, his wife, is in charge of the Tracz family Christmas card list.

"I have to knock it off at relatives and friends, or it would be a mile long.

"It amazes me. All of the students who keep in touch with him and tell him what they're doing," she said.

Nelson Penserga, graduate student in music education, is a former student from Syracuse University who kept in touch with Tracz. When Tracz had two graduate positions open at K-State, he offered one to Penserga.

Kansas is a long way from Penserga's East coast home, but he said getting to work with Tracz is compensation for the distance.

"I'm a music education major," Penserga said. "He's as good as they come, and you want to be associated with someone of his caliber."

Tracz does more than conduct the marching band. The concert band, the symphonic band and three jazz ensembles are also among his musical responsibilities.

Jim Strain, assistant professor of music, works with Tracz as a conductor for the concert band.

"He does a wide variety of things," Strain said. "You need to be a good musician to do that."

Strain said the concert band is a different group when Tracz conducts.

"He knows what to say to get them to do better."

Marching band rehearsals can be heard blocks away during the fall semester as Tracz tells the band exactly what to do every couple seconds. Tracz stands high in the stands at Memorial Stadium and barks commands at the 135 band members on the field.

Concert band rehearsals don't have the hustle and bustle of the marching band. The room is full of the cacophony of musical instruments tuning as students prepare for the afternoon's work.

The setting is smaller, so he doesn't need his megaphone.

"Forget how nice it is outside today," he joked during one practice last week. "Forget that you're in here on one of the last warm days we'll have for a while."

It's show time. He gives directions only a musician could appreciate and music fills the room. He isn't always happy with the results.

"Please start thinking together," he tells the band. "We're not accomplishing what we're here for today."

As the musicians play, he scribbles notes to them on the board: breath, pitch, focus, support, attack.

Attack is a good word for Tracz.

He's become a little famous on campus for dismissing the Classy Cats from the band. Marc Riegel, sophomore in music education, said the situation surrounding their dismissal is not what Tracz is all about.

His wife said he knows what has to be done for the program to improve, and he jumps right in to accomplish his goals. He also wants more than good musicians, she said.

"He's really focused on what he wants to do and what he wants the students to get out of it."

K-State's Center for Science Education received three Dwight D. Eisenhower Mathematics and Science Education Awards totaling $103,000 from the Kansas Board of Regents.

John Staver, director of K-State's Center for Science Education, who received a grant for $47,009, said the center serves as a vehicle to enable groups to get grant funding for projects in science, mathematics, technology and environmental education.

"We help them turn their ideas into projects," Staver said. "If the best way to get the project off the ground is to write a grant, we do it."

The center is a university-wide organization to improve science, mathematics, technology and environmental education. It is run out of the College of Education and specializes in teacher education.

"We're about the improvement of teaching and learning," Staver said. He said their main goal was to improve the teaching skills.

The Dwight D. Eisenhower Mathematics and Science Education Act provides states with federal funds to develop programs that improve math and science instruction from kindergarten through high school.

Project qualifications for the program include improving the skills of teachers or instruction in mathematics

When Elizabeth Dodd was 21 years old, she knew exactly what she wanted to do with the rest of her life — write poetry.

She came to this decision with good reason; she had spent most of the previous years mastering the art through practice and exposure to her family's interest in reading and writing.

Michael S. Harper, an American poet and professor at Brown University in Rhode Island, might agree that Dodd, professor of English, has mastered the art of poetry.

Harper chose Dodd as the recipient of the Elmer Holmes Bobst Award for Emerging Writers in 1992 for her collection of poetry, "Like Memory, Caverns."

"In June of '92, I had gone to a conference in Connecticut to give a paper on Virginia Woolf," Dodd said. "It was a short train ride from there to Rhode Island, where I was going to see my college roommate."

"While I was there, my husband called me and said he had some pretty exciting news and wanted to know if he should tell me then or let me wait."

"Well, I had him tell me the news. He said Michael S. Harper had called and said I had won the prize and that I needed to call Harper in London."

"When I called London, I reached the answering machine and started leaving my message when he picked up the phone and told me that he had chosen me."

"I was delighted. It was a huge honor." In December, Dodd was flown to New York to receive the prize.

Dodd will make another appearance in New York this April when she, along with two other young poets, Elizabeth Alexander and Michael Weaver, will appear at the Unterberg Poetry Center in New York. The three, introduced by Harper, will be reading as part of the 10th Muse Series.

Tough choices

Journalism professor leaves K-State for Louisiana State University

AARON GRAHAM
Collegian

K-State will be losing a professor in August to Louisiana State University.

Richard Nelson, professor of journalism and mass communications and head of the public relations sequence, will take over as associate dean of graduate studies and research at the Manship School of Mass Communication at LSU, in Baton Rouge, La.

Nelson, who has been at K-State since 1989, said leaving Manhattan will be difficult for him to do.

"As a family man, it's been particularly good for my children," he said. "You become a part of the community in Manhattan. It's a pretty community and a nice town."

Nelson said teaching at K-State has been a good experience, and the students do not always realize how good they have it here.

"K-State is far more student-oriented than other schools. It's a very different atmosphere. It has a family feeling," Nelson said.

"The faculty is a very collegial one, and it makes a difference if people celebrate your successes and not knife you in the back."

The reason for his leaving is not dissatisfaction with the University, but rather a job opportunity dealing with two of his main interests, research and public opinion, he said.

"My reason for leaving is because of the challenge. LSU is the No. 1 school in the state," Nelson said. "The opportunity was so compelling, and they wanted someone with my background. My work's going to be cut out for me, but I really feel I'm the right one for that job."

Chuck Lubbers, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications and member of the committee to hire Nelson's replacement, said the public relations sequence and the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism will be weakened without Nelson.

"Anytime anyone leaves a sequence this small, it dramatically decreases the stability of the program," Lubbers said.

"The hope is that we can find a replacement for him with a minimal amount of disruption."

Finding a replacement who can match Nelson's credentials and reputation will not be easy, Lubbers said.

"We're losing someone with a national, if not international, reputation in the field," Lubbers said. "K-State can't afford to be losing people known internationally. We just don't have that many here."

March 1 is the application deadline for those applying to fill Nelson's position. A new professor may be named as early as the end of March, even though Nelson will be on staff through July.

Julie White, senior in journalism and mass communications, said she will be sorry to see Nelson leave K-

State.

"He's a teacher who truly cares about his students," White said. "It's too bad that future students at K-State won't have the opportunity to learn from him because he knows a lot about the real world of public relations."

White also said she is certain Nelson will continue to care about his students and his work after he takes the new position.

"He's earned the respect of students here, and I'm sure he'll do the same at LSU," White said.

Nelson said he feels regretful about leaving K-State, but he is positive the school will hire someone who can also add to the public relations sequence.

"Sometimes you leave a place with a bad feeling, and sometimes you leave with a feeling of regret. In my case, that's how I feel," Nelson said. "No one is irreplaceable, and many attributes of the school will draw a good replacement for me."

Tracz works on recruitment

Jill Pruitt, junior in music education, said Tracz knows what he's doing.

"He wants people to learn, not just perform," she said.

Riegel said Tracz is demanding in a way that is needed.

"We need to be kicked in the butt every now and then," Riegel said.

"Tracz has enough experience to know what needs to happen."

One thing that needs to happen at K-State is band recruitment. Tracz said it is one of the biggest parts of his job.

"We should have close to 300 students in the marching band compared to other schools our size."

With an almost entirely new staff, Tracz is working hard at building the band by visiting high schools around the state.

Although new to Kansas, Tracz is seeing the state faster than most newcomers might.

There is a map of Kansas on the wall next to a big poster that says, "Attitude is a little thing that can make a BIG difference."

That map is dotted with red and white pins. Red means he has visited a local high school. A white pin means he has been invited but hasn't gotten to visit yet.

The state's high school band directors need to get acquainted with him so their confidence in K-State's program increases, Tracz said. High school band directors often have an influence over which college a student will choose.

Tracz also meets with students who visit K-State and express an interest in joining the band. They aren't all music majors but that doesn't concern Tracz. Tracz said 50 percent of college bands nationally are composed of non-music majors.

"I won't turn anyone away," he said.

That is a good attitude to have since not all band members will be great musicians, his wife pointed out. She played percussion at the University of Wisconsin in Madison when she and Tracz met.

"Even the worst musicians will feel like they've been a part of it," she said.

Strain said that under Tracz, the students mature musically and come together as an ensemble.

"It is amazing," Strain said. "I wish I could do it."

Tracz's open-door policy could be part of his success. His office is open to all of his students. But there is a warning they need to consider before entering.

A sign cautions: "No whiners or crybabies allowed."

His graduate assistant knows how busy Tracz is every day.

"He's in and out of the office, running an ensemble, or making phone calls," Penserga said. "But if you need something, he'll stop what he's doing and sincerely listen to you."

Tracz gets a lot of respect from his colleagues and students as well as those in his profession.

Jack Flouer, professor and department head of music, gave an example of the respect Tracz commands.

"He went on his own to a Kansas Bandmaster Association meeting and was appointed to the board of directors on the spot," Flouer said. "He makes a good impression."

Tracz said he enjoys what he does so much, he thinks he is getting paid for a hobby.

His wife said Tracz thinks working in a job he loves is normal.

"I keep telling him it's not normal," she said. "It's what we all want to do."

and physical and biological sciences, improving the access to mathematics and science education for the less fortunate, and developing relationships with local school districts.

Maureen Toll, integrated curriculum coordinator at Smoky Hill Educational Service Center, and Loren Riblett, assistant dean at K-State-Salina, share a cooperative project focusing on mathematics, science and technological education in rural schools. Carol Borchers, associate director of the Center for Science Education, and Staver will work with teachers at Pearson Elementary School in Kansas City for one year. They plan to use technical science education with limited-English-proficient students to improve their language skills.

Students participating in the project by Diane McGrath, educational technology researcher and associate professor of secondary education, will produce a multimedia project about Kansas water issues that focuses on the marshland bird sanctuary at Cheyenne Bottoms. They will go to Cheyenne Bottoms to observe the marsh ecology first hand. John Zimmerman, ornithologist and professor of biology at K-State, and Jan Garton, a Manhattan-area conservation educator, will assist McGrath with the project.

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

Julie Wienberg, fifth-year student in architecture, works on a studio project late Wednesday night in Seaton Hall. Wienberg, like many other architecture students, works rigorous hours in her studio and is left with very little time for sleep.

Sleep deprivation plagues students' health

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Larry Kleinkemper, junior in architecture, left studio one day after working on a project for three days straight. Strung out and sleep deprived, he and his girlfriend began driving home and came to a sign that said "Do Not Pass."

Instead of realizing the sign marked a no-passing zone, Kleinkemper thought he shouldn't pass the sign, so he didn't and brought his car to a complete stop.

Kleinkemper, like many architecture students, is a victim of sleep deprivation. In his world, a full night's sleep is rare, and pulling an all-nighter is a weekly occurrence.

Sheri Blackford, senior in architecture, once fell asleep in jogging class after depriving herself of sleep for three days.

She was jogging around the track, then she began walking. She later started leaning against the wall, and soon she was completely still and sleeping while standing up against the wall.

Once, Julie Wienberg, fifth-year student in architecture, fell asleep in a public place in Kansas City after not sleeping for three days. People were walking by her, yet Julie said she snoozed away.

All of these students said they have felt the effects of extreme sleep deprivation — hallucinations, itching, loss of motor skills and violent mood swings.

"You'll start itching somewhere," Kleinkemper said. "I don't know if that's from not showering for three days or lack of sleep."

Wienberg said after living on no sleep for three days, she begins to experience severe mood swings.

"After going 56 hours without sleep, the birds begin to annoy you," Wienberg said. "It's 5 a.m., and they begin to chirp, and it really pisses you off."

With project deadlines approaching, the students push themselves to stay awake as much as possible, and when the strain is too much, they crawl under their desks and take a three-hour nap. Sometimes, they don't leave studio for extended periods, and the world outside becomes a blur.

Blackford said she loses track of days. Wienberg said she once didn't even know who was running for president.

The three students said they have suffered long-term ailments because they get so little sleep. Blackford said she gets sick a lot, and because of a low-immune system, she is constantly fighting a cold.

After completing these no-sleep marathons, the students said, they usually go home and pass out. When they can get it, sleep is very important.

"You'll pass out and wake up, and your alarm has been going off for an hour," Blackford said.

Sleep deprivation can strain a person's emotional and physical health, Art Rathbun, counselor at Lafene Health Center, said.

Various curricula at K-State demand a tremendous amount of hours, and students need to be careful to get enough sleep, he said.

Student accident prompts change

KRISTEN WELBORN
Collegian

An architecture student's accident recently prompted the Department of Interior Architecture to reconsider the safety policies in the Seaton Court woodshop and spend about $5,000 in improvements.

Last semester, R.J. Reissig, fifth-year student in interior architecture, cut his left hand while using a table saw for a project in a furniture-design class. His medical treatment was estimated at $15,000 to $20,000.

"It's definitely a negative situation where somebody gets hurt, but you need to turn it into a positive," Steve Murphy, head of the interior architecture department, said. "We learned from the accident, and it was something to build on."

During semester break, the interior architecture department improved the safety of the woodshop area for students' protection.

A safety inspector from University facilities evaluated the condition of the woodshop and filled out a report that cited what needed to be done, Murphy said.

"It's something we were all aware of what should be done, but the hardest thing was finding the limited funds to do it," he said.

The College of Architecture dean's office provided $3,000 for the safety guards, and the Department of Interior Architecture contributed about $2,000 for electrical improvements, he said.

Plexiglass safety coverings over the blades of the radial arm saws, table saws and belt sanders were added to increase the students' safety, Murphy said.

Automatic electric motor breaks on equipment, which previously ran continuously, were added to increase the safety of the woodshop area.

The drill presses also were improved by being bolted to the floor so that they cannot be tipped over.

"All students are required to wear mandatory safety glasses while class is going on," Murphy said.

In addition, every machine was dust-proofed, and a chain-safety shut-off was added to each machine.

"There isn't any way a student could come in and turn on that machine and be injured from the fact that it's not operational," Murphy said.

Dust-proofing is important because sparks from the electrical wiring could combine with the dust particles and result in combustion, he said.

Southwestern Bell Telephone wants a proposal passed that will put Kansas on the cutting edge of telephone technology. The Kansas Corporations Commission is considering whether it will cost Kansans too much.

TeleKansas II is a proposal by Bell that will replace some existing phone lines.

"We're going to run fiber-optic cable to every high school, junior college, university and also to every hospital," Wayne Franklin, area manager of external affairs for Southwestern Bell, said.

This addition will allow for interactive learning in high schools and colleges. The cable will also allow courses taught elsewhere to be piped into remote classrooms. In addition, the fiber-optic link to hospitals will allow the possibility for telemedicine, Franklin said.

TeleKansas II is the second part of a previous proposal, TeleKansas I. It replaced and provided 131 communities with electronic switching.

What this means to the end user is that party lines are now non-existent.

"Everyone now has a private line," Franklin said.

Electronic switching also means faster connect times, better connections and the ability to use features like call waiting and three-way calling.

This proposal has the ability to improve the standard of learning at K-State. "It would be a tremendous help," Mel Chastain, director of the Education Communication Center at K-State, said.

"We use lots of different technologies already," Chastain said. K-State uses telephone lines and satellite transmissions to pipe in educational programming.

"It opens up the avenues of communication to everyone. It'll be great," Chastain said.

The KCC is concerned that TeleKansas II will end up costing Kansans too much.

"We protect the public from monopolies," Ramona Becker, director of public affairs for the KCC, said.

"The cost of service is actually going down for the providers (Southwestern Bell), therefore making more profit for the supplier," Becker said.

"We don't want to keep them from making money," Becker said. "But they don't have to make excessive profits while they do it."

Franklin said if TeleKansas II was passed, a rate freeze would occur. This means the customer would have no service rate increase until the year 2000.

"How many other businesses can say that they know where their rates will be in the year 2000?" Franklin said. "Our business has to grow in order for Kansas to grow."

Becker said a rate freeze looks good on the surface. But, he said it costs Bell less to provide service now, and there should actually be a decrease in rates.

The KCC guidelines for Bell state that it must provide affordable telephone service to everyone who needs a telephone, Franklin said.

He also said if Kansas wants to attract new business, Bell needs to be on the cutting edge of technology.

"So many things sound just wonderful on the surface," Becker said. "But rates could be lower than they actually are currently."

Although Franklin said rates will not increase for five years if the TeleKansas II passes, these rates only include basic service.

"Optional services very well could be fluctuating," Franklin said.

Optional services include call waiting, call forwarding, three-way calling and other non-standard services.

Bell has been ordered to reduce their rates three times in the last decade by the Public Service Commission.

Microbiologists study bacteria health

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Microbiologists want to know how bacteria are feeling, a leading microbiologist said.

David White, distinguished scientist from the University of Tennessee, spoke Wednesday in Throckmorton Hall about methods of measuring bacterial health and vitality.

"The question is, how are you going to study these multicomponent communities?" White said. "You could do it like biochemists do it and the way microbiologists used to — it's what we call hand-grenade biochemistry. Just blow it up and isolate the components."

This is unsatisfactory because you cannot be sure how the components interacted when they were alive, he said.

White is the executive director of the Center for Environmental Biotechnology, a center run by the University of Tennessee and Oak Ridge National Laboratory.

White has won many scientific achievement awards. In 1993, he won the Proctor and Gamble Award in Applied and Environmental Science.

Monitoring microbe communities is difficult, White said, because of the variety and number of kinds of bacteria. White and his colleagues are developing monitoring techniques that describe microbe communities without destroying them.

One of the technologies White is experimenting with is genetic engineering. Scientists can incorporate genes that cause the bacteria to light up, the so-called bioluminescence phenomenon.

By measuring the light given off by the bacteria, scientists can determine how many and active the bacteria are without killing them, White said.

"We can tell if they are sick," he said.

White said opposite to expectations, his experiments show that when bacteria are sick, they just live fast and die.

Another procedure White and his colleagues are developing involves extracting and measuring a chemical compound called polar lipid fatty acids. This chemical is an important component in cell membranes, White said.

"Not any one technique is ideal, but this is a very intelligent technique that is biochemically well based," Lydia Halda Alija, graduate student in agronomy, said.

One important aspect of White's lipid technique is that it can detect viable bacteria, Halda Alija said.

"We can see who's dead and who died the fastest," White said.

"What we have here is a measure of happiness."

Instructor experiments with sleep deprivation

While everyone does not need the same amount of sleep, Rathbun said, a healthy amount is five to nine hours a night.

Architecture students aren't the only ones not sleeping.

Scott Scrogin, instructor and assistant to the dean of the College of Engineering, deprived himself of sleep for almost 108 hours — four and one-half days. During this period, he only allowed himself 37 minutes of dispersed sleep.

Scrogin said his sleep deprivation was part of a 14-week time-management study he performed on himself.

He was trying to determine how much sleep was required to manage his time the most effectively.

Reggie Schoen, senior in mechanical engineering who saw Scrogin in the middle of his sleep deprivation, said Scrogin came to a meeting with his trousers pressed, a blazer and a nice white pressed shirt buttoned to the top, but had on no tie. Apparently, he forgot it.

"He was wired," Schoen said. "He was running about 100 miles per hour, but at the meeting he was kind of tired and irritable."

In the sleep segment of his study, Scrogin said he learned that four to six hours of sleep suits his needs.

"I've never been a person for a lot of sleep," he said. "Sleep is a tool to get you where you want to go."

Jim Agniel, sophomore in electrical engineering, has also learned to manage his time on little sleep.

He used to sleep five hours a night, but he said he's seen the light and is now getting seven hours a night.

"I have suffered so much that I've started getting a decent amount of sleep," he said. "I don't know why I didn't do this before."

Agniell said being his busiest this semester has forced him to use his time more wisely.

"I have structured my schedule more and am getting down to business," he said.

DEAR CASSIE

by Cassandra Duveaux

It's time to lean on your family

Dear Cassandra,

Will you listen to the Kansas City news and make a prayer for the safe return of my cousin? She has been missing since Saturday about 1 a.m. Her disappearance is being investigated, and I'm really in a lot of misery waiting and praying for her safe return. I have been getting closer to her than my own sister. The fact that I had not been at work back home and that she may have been visiting me over the weekend hangs over me. I am in need of a big hug, and I have no one close to me here in Manhattan. I'm going back home to be with family and friends this weekend.

All other problems seem small compared to someone missing whom you care so much about.

Signed,

Waiting for good news

Dear Waiting for good news,

Isn't it strange how dramatic events, such as your missing cousin, can make everyday problems seem minuscule? A bad test grade, a parking ticket or a stain on your new sweater aren't matters of concern. It's a pity it takes traumatic event to give our lives focus.

It sounds as if you have a loving and caring family to help comfort you during this terrible time. Although you don't know anyone who is close to you here, there are many people on campus who care and would listen to you. Seek them out. We'll be waiting.

New Currents jazz it up for K-StateTED ELLET
Collegian

In a dark, smoke-filled room, a mellow audience snaps its fingers and taps its feet to the rhythm of subtle drums and a smooth saxophone. The music fills the air with an unmistakable mood — jazz.

For one evening this weekend, K-State students will have the opportunity to jazz it up by attending the Fourth Annual New Currents Jazz Festival.

The event will begin at 6 p.m. Saturday at the Union Station. Admission is $5.

"There is a real personal satisfaction for all of us bringing people together to enjoy this type of music," said Eric Brunt, senior in electrical engineering and president/co-founder of New Currents.

Kansas City's K.C. Bottoms Band, which has been featured on several KSDB-FM 91.9 jazz programs, will be headlining the festival. Three other local bands, Wasted Potential, the End, and Henry Ashwood and Friends, will also be featured.

"Different music really broadens your scope, especially with this jazz festival. We can all enjoy it together. We will know that we did this, and we can sit down and enjoy what we have done," Brunt said.

New Currents, a K-State music-appreciation club, premiered the jazz festival four years ago. Brunt said attendance has increased each year, and the club is expecting an even bigger turnout on Saturday.

Henry Ashwood, junior in music performance and one of the festival's featured performers, has played at the event for several years.

"I don't get paid. I do it just because it's a fun activity. Lots of people at K-State aren't into jazz, but it's a nice time if you're into the art," Ashwood said.

"It's a great chance to meet other musicians and to listen and be a part of the music I'm so much attached to," he said.

Many K-State music students are also excited about the festival.

"I used to go to Kansas City to hear K.C. Bottoms Band at the Tuba every weekend," Troy Diehl, sophomore in music education, said. "They have a really good sound, and they had some originals I really liked."

"I'm planning on going to the festival because jazz is really mellow and fun to listen to," he said.

Dodd created her own books in the first grade; inspired by Wright, Bly

She recalls creating her own books as early as the first grade, even though they were made out of simple construction paper.

"I grew up in a family of readers and writers," Dodd said. "My father was a poet and college professor."

Besides her father, Dodd was inspired by poets James Wright and Robert Bly.

Wright was especially inspiring to Dodd because he grew up in the same area as Dodd, the foothills of the Appalachian mountains in southern Ohio. Each has written of the landscape in their poetry.

"Louise Glück has also been inspiring because her work is understated. It implies a lot, exploring interior life, feelings and emotions," Dodd said.

Both Glück and Dodd have dealt with anorexia in their work.

"Like Memory, Caverns," is described as "an elegiac book, mourning losses from the personal to the planetary." Dodd writes of the loss of her mother in 1989, but said she disagrees with the thought that the poems dealing with her mother's death serve only the purpose of being therapeutic to her.

"I do deal with loneliness and implications of solitude," Dodd said. "But I hope that my work is an artifact that I offer to the world."

At the age of 16, Dodd enrolled in a college-level Introduction to Poetry class.

"This was extraordinarily important to me because it was then that I first met the poems and poets that I still teach."

Dodd said she remembers working at McDonald's to earn money to buy a 1962 Volkswagen bug, so she could have a way to get to class.

"It was a whole new world to me — discovering a world of poems," Dodd said.

Dodd is teaching creative-writing courses, both at the introductory and advanced level. She also teaches one or two literature classes each year and regularly teaches a women-in-literature class.

She said she has a passion for teaching, equal to that of writing poetry.

"The experiences I have as a writer inform the way I teach, and the experiences I have as a reader inform the way I write."

Although Dodd loves teaching poetry, there is one aspect that she would like to see change.

"I hate grading creative work," Dodd said. "In the best of all universes, art classes of any kind would be pass/fail."

"The whole point of taking an art class is for growth and discovery, and sometimes grades can impede that."

Along with "Like Memory, Caverns," Dodd has also published a volume of literary criticisms.

During the last two years, she has been writing non-fiction prose. Her personal essays have a large focus on nature writing, issues in landscape, history and personal identity.

Success depends on teamwork

Sitting Bull was a leadership genius, Cornell Mayfield Jr., director of the department of human resources and personnel for Manhattan, said.

Mayfield, who spoke in conjunction with Black History Month, said Sitting Bull was a master of heroic leadership. He took seven tribes of Native Americans and organized them into a united force to defeat General Custer.

Mayfield was the speaker for a workshop sponsored by the K-State Multicultural Alumni Council at 7 p.m. Wednesday in Union 207.

Teamwork and leadership share certain buzz words, Mayfield said. He is a 1970 graduate of K-State and a founding member of the Black Student Union.

Among the characteristics that team members and leaders must share is commitment to their cause, ability to communicate with all types of people and a need to lay groundwork.

"Every member of our team, you're going to be held accountable for whatever you're asked or volunteer to do," Mayfield said.

Training is the key to being a good leader, he said.

"There is no such thing as a born leader," he said. "Good leaders are trained."

SRS cuts make life difficult for students

April Martin, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, is a single parent who may be affected by the cuts. Right now, Martin said, she's doing OK because she is enrolled in 18 hours, which entitles her to more care.

However, Martin said, she is unsure how long this might last because her letter said her funding could change with only 10 days' notice if more cuts are made.

"I really can't believe the state Legislature is cutting this aspect of the aid. I mean, we're college students, and we're trying to improve our lives. When we're graduated, we're going to become employed taxpayers," Martin said.

Tammi Holovach, graduate student in speech, received a bill last week from the SRS for $500 in childcare she said she didn't know she owed.

"It's bad enough that I almost had to make the decision to pull my daughter from the center and take her to classes with ones I teach and the ones I attend," Holovach said.

"One of the things that greatly upsets me is that if I worked a full-time job at $4.25 an hour, they'd be paying the entire bill. Now, just because I'm a student, they penalize me," she said.

All over campus, parents are being faced with the challenge of staying in school.

Ford said two families have already been forced to terminate their care from the center because of their inability to pay the new financial obligations. And some say they fear the situation will worsen.

Unfortunately, these cuts are affecting more than the students, Ford and Dunn said.

"It's the children, too. If you can improve your future, you dramatically improve their future," Dunn said.

"I think one of the smartest things to do is take care of these kids now."

Students who are trying to get away from government aid by bettering their lives may now be forced to take advantage of more aid programs, Ford and Dunn said.

Speaker encourages development of skills for success

TONYA BOBBITT

Collegian

A K-State alumnus and former student body president said to be successful, black people must develop their skills.

"You cannot talk about leveling the playing field if you do not have the inner drive to reach the playing field," Latrian Cuffy, a 1988 K-State graduate, said Monday in K-State Union 213.

Cuffy's discussion for Black History Month focused on struggling black entrepreneurs.

In order to talk about the struggle of black entrepreneurs, people must ask what the black struggle is and who is struggling, he said.

The answer to those questions, Cuffy said, is black businesses employing black people.

Society needs people who will help keep blacks off the streets.

Instead of worrying about stopping violence, people need to think about ways blacks can stay out of trouble, he said.

Cuffy said he believes successful blacks such as Bill Cosby or Oprah Winfrey, should help give back to the inner cities.

"We need famous blacks to pump money back into the inner cities. They need to do something like be a tutor or a role model," he said.

"If they do not help their people, they will become barriers, and they will never reach the playing field."

Blacks will face barriers, Cuffy said, if they do not use and develop their skills to their fullest capacity.

"You will face many obstacles if you do not keep up with what is going on. For example, you will be at a disadvantage if you do not know how to use a computer or word processor," he said.

Cuffy also asked the audience if they thought black businesses were doing well.

Many people see famous blacks doing well on television and they think that business must be good, but this is not always true, he said.

"There are too many blacks who are not contributing as much as we need to. We need to do whatever it takes to keep our businesses running," Cuffy said.

ing ground.

One of the most shocking aspects of the year was the murder and attempted murder of several abortion doctors. One doctor in Pensacola, Fla., was killed outside his clinic in March, and George Tiller, a Wichita abortionist, was shot in both arms by a pro-life activist as he was driving away from his clinic. Several other doctors across the country were also threatened with murder if they continued to perform abortions.

These activities have created an atmosphere of fear, Davis said.

"I believe terroristic actions are accomplishing what they're intended — they frighten people," Davis said. "There is an altered atmosphere in which they (women) can make a choice."

The violence was decried by many within both the pro-choice and pro-life communities, but the assailants received some support from within the pro-life community.

Fox agreed that there is fear among abortion providers.

"There is more fear," Fox said.

"To a certain extent, I think our patients are more fearful as the people outside resort to more extreme tactics."

For the future, some are calling RU-486 the next abortion battle ground.

The manufacturer, Roussel-Uclaf of France, had refused until recently to market RU-486 in the U.S. market, fearing that anti-abortion activists would boycott their other products in the U.S. market. It will be tested in the United States soon.

RU-486 has several potential applications, including treatment of certain cancers, but is primarily known as an abortion pill. It eliminates the risks of anesthesia and the possibility of an infection or perforation of the uterus that a surgical abortion might have.

After a pregnancy test and internal exam, the patient must take three tablets in the presence of a doctor or nurse.

The drug, mifepristone, prevents the uterine lining from supporting a developing embryo. In 2 percent of the women, the drug alone brings on an abortion. The rest must return to the clinic after 48 hours to get a second drug, prostaglandin, which makes the uterus contract and bleed. While this happens, between four to six hours, the woman must remain at the medical facility. She collects the tissue as it is expelled, and one week later, she must be checked to make sure no tissue remains.

"One of the nice things is it can be administered very early in the pregnancy," Fox said, adding that RU-486 shouldn't be used after the ninth week. "It can be administered as soon as people find out they're pregnant. Because of that, and because it is not an invasive procedure, women will feel more comfortable about their decision."

"There will be less fear."

Group discusses Union expansion

BRIEFLY
Architects' K-State Union expansion ideas are to renovate interior and expand student services.

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian
A student walks into the K-State Union, gets a haircut at the barbershop, eats a burger at McDonald's and attends a new UPC program.

Well, not yet. After a year of planning, architectural designs and ideas are springing to life to expand, renovate and provide additional programming in the Union.

A group has routinely met and worked behind the scenes to formulate the plan for the project and address the financial and spatial realities of the expansion.

Faculty, students and administrators jumped into the average K-State student's shoes to confront the economic side of the project in a meeting at 5 p.m. Thursday.

The group met to discuss ideas, raise concerns and present proposals for the Union expansion and renovation project.

"We will provide you with new drawings, share the fiscal realities, go over the time table and visit about referendum specifics as we work through this evening," said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life.

Skyler Harper, associate architect of facilities and planning, presented new computer sketches and explained the specifics of the future building design.

Harper said the project is limited by the budget and how the expansion affects the campus, but his team is working on confining and designing the space to meet problems.

The architectural plan focuses on tightening the interior space, creating a plaza-type area, maximizing the green space and renovating the dining center.

Harper said he is working on refinements and would like to see decisions made to further the progress of the project.

"Right now, I feel like I'm shooting a moving target," Skyler said. "I want to be able to move in a confirmed direction."

The participants of the discussion raised questions about the design, targeted the financial effect of the project on the students and explored strategies to market the proposal to the University community.

The group considered the options of funding the project by increasing the student fee by $25 or using the profits from the third party vendors to cover the costs.

David Frese, student body vice president, presented three approaches to obtain the $25 fee. His proposal will be reconsidered at a Union renovation meeting next week.

Trent LeDoux, student senator, supported the Union enhancement proposal but had concerns about the reactions of the students to the new fee. He said the spring tuition receipts got the students' attentions and that they were starting to catch on.

"The dollar signs are really starting to weigh me down," LeDoux said. "I don't think we should nail a student with every fee we can think of. For their $25 fee, they're really going to want a bang for their buck."

Bosco said the Union needs to be renovated, and the money has to come from somewhere.

"The Union does not stand alone," Bosco said. "It functions as part of the University, and a cost comes along with it. I wish a student could write a tuition check, and it would cover everything, but we're not living in Fairyland."

Dale Silvius, senior in management and marketing, said that to pass the proposal, the supporters must explain that the project doesn't focus solely on the expansion of the Union but will also renovate the interior and increase programming available to students.

"Everyone knows it's a Union expansion," Silvius said. "The Union is not in a crisis situation as far as room, and if we don't promote the overall enhancement, the project has a snowball's chance in hell of passing."

Ed Skoog, student body president, said the proposal will lie in the hands of the students and because we live in a democracy, the students will have the power to vote for or against it.

"We have a good sketchwork," Skoog said. "But if it passes, there are further student decisions to be made."

Competitors label U.S. skater as dirty

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAMAR, Norway — The Canadians are screaming, and the Chinese are protesting. But Cathy Turner, called a dirty skater by two angry opponents, is celebrating again.

Turner, one of the unluckiest Olympic champions, survived a wild race, a bizarre awards ceremony and a formal protest by China to again win the Olympic gold medal in 500-meter short track speedskating Thursday.

"I don't know what's going on and why everybody's mad at me," said Turner, 31, of Hilton, N.Y. "But I earned this. I really earned it. Nobody's taking it away from me."

Zhang Yanmei of China disgustedly accepted the silver medal, but she stormed off the awards podium when Turner pulled bronze medalist Amy Peterson of Maplewood, Minn., onto the winner's platform with her. Zhang tossed her honorary bouquet of flowers over her shoulder and onto the ice as she walked toward her locker room.

Turner skated in an Olympic record 45.98 seconds.

The 31-year-old from Hilton, N.Y., ended an eight-year layoff to take gold in Albertville and returned from a 15-month retirement to add two more medals in these Games. She anchored the United States' 3,000-meter relay bronze medalists Tuesday.

More than twice as old as South Korean finalist Won Hye-Kyung, 14, Turner has four medals in the last two Olympics, two of them in relays. She and long track speedskater Bonnie Blair have six of America's 11 gold medals in the last two Winter Olympics.

Senate wants fee to decrease $10

TAWNIA ERNST
Collegian

Student Senate passed a recommendation that would ask the Kansas Board of Regents for a $10 decrease in the health-care fee per semester Thursday night.

The bill asks to drop the fee from $80 to $70 and was passed by an overwhelming majority of 40-15.

The decrease, if it were to pass the Board of Regents, would affect full-time students only. Part-time and summer students would not see a change.

Along with the decrease, the Lafene Student Health Advisory Committee would continue to review the fee every year and would recommend any needed adjustments to the Student Senate with the goal of maintaining 25 percent of the operating costs in the reserves account.

Twenty-five percent is the minimum needed to maintain the level of health-care services, Lannie Zweimiller, director of student health, said.

Currently, there is more than $2.1 million in the reserves account, Zweimiller said.

This accounts for about 60 percent of the operating costs for fiscal year 1994, which are at about $3.97 million, he said.

If a decrease were to pass, it would increase the likelihood of Lafene returning to Student Senate for an increase in fees sooner than if the fee was kept at $80.

With a $10 decrease for 1994-95 school year, there would be the possibility of a $9 increase in 1996 and a fee increase to $90 in 1997-98 according to a projected financial forecast, Zweimiller said.

Otherwise, if the fee were to remain at $80, Lafene most likely wouldn't approach Student Senate for an increase in fees until the year 2000, Zweimiller said.

"We have to look more to students and the future," Zweimiller said. "Students coming up to K-State now would have to pay more if we cut it today."

The bill was brought forward to deal with the large reserve of student money that is unused.

Senior volunteers tutor local youth

AARON GRAHAM

A community program linking older citizens and school children is now underway.

Project Re-Generate, a cooperative effort of UFM, Unified School District 383 and the Division of Continuing Education, matches community members 55 years and older with children in middle and elementary schools who need help with their studies. The volunteers visit the schools and tutor a child a few hours every week.

Linda Teener, UFM executive director, said the project was necessary for the community because other tutoring and literacy programs have vanished.

"We used to have Friendship Tutoring, but that program lost its funding and dried up a few years ago," Teener said. "Since the Student Literacy Corps is gone too, we've lost all of our literacy programs in Manhattan."

The project has been in the planning stages for several months but had some trouble getting off the ground, Teener said. Project Re-Generate is now fully operating, but Teener said she is looking for more older citizen volunteers.

"We were trying to get it underway last fall, but the flood got in the way," she said. "We're doing about as much as we can do for this semester. We've got a huge mailing going out to adults in the community 55 and older in a few weeks."

Teener said the main focus of the program is the tutoring, but other components also will be implemented.

"The tutoring is the key to Re-Generate, but we're trying to set up a quiz bowl so the kids can have some fun with older adults," Teener said. "They'll be working in teams of an older person and a younger person and answering questions together. The official dates have not been set, but we're looking at the end of April or beginning of May."

TUTORS NEEDED

Although Project Re-Generate is not designed for K-State student volunteers, the community needs students for tutoring. Students interested in becoming tutors can contact the UFM office at 1221 Thurston St. or by calling 539-8763.

YEAR OF THE WOMAN The Workplace

Women made significant strides in terms of breaking the glass ceilings of promotion and salaries, and Congress passed the Family Leave Act. But sexual harassment in the workplace still dominated headlines in 1993.

In 1986, the U.S. Supreme Court determined sexual advances, dirty jokes and pin-up girls created a "hostile environment" for women to work in. But last year's Supreme Court case, Harris v. Forklift System Inc., expanded the sexual discrimination laws. In the new ruling, plaintiffs are not required to show psychological distress or impaired work ability.

"The decision clarified one's right to be free of sexual harassment. This case was valuable. Everyone is entitled to be free of sexual harassment on the work site," Colleen Kelly Johnston, coordinator for Kansas National Organization for Women, said.

"Every year, these cases come to the court that deal with small aspects of sexual harassment," Sandra Coyner, associate professor of women's studies, said.

An increased number of sexual harassment cases came to court last year. Coyner said Anita Hill's report of harassment by now-Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas may have been responsible for more women coming forward and reporting incidents.

"It's impossible to tell whether it's just increased reporting or increased incidents," Coyner said.

Although improvements in the area of sexual harassment were mixed, improvements were made in the area of "glass ceilings."

"Glass ceilings" is a term used to describe the inability of women and minorities to be hired as high-ranking officers or administrators.

RADIO, TV STAR SUCCEDES TO CANCER AT AGE 76

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Dinah Shore, who delighted radio and television audiences from the 1940s to the '90s with her breezy singing and Southern charm, died Thursday. She was 76.

Shore, who was recently diagnosed with cancer, died at her home after a short illness, publicist Connie Stone said.

Shore's television career spanned the 1950s to the early 1990s. She started in 1951 with "The Dinah Shore Show," a live, 15-minute musical show.

The more elaborate "The Dinah Shore Chevy Show" premiered in 1956 and ran until 1963. From 1974-79, she was in "Dinah," from 1979-74 in "Dinah's Place," and from 1979 to 1984, "Dinah and Friends."

Prior to going into television, she was a singing star on radio known for such hits as "I'll Walk Alone" and "The Anniversary Song."

She occasionally appeared in films in the 1940s, including "Follow the Boys" and "Fun and Fancy Free."

She was born Frances Rose Shore on March 1, 1917, in Winchester, Tenn.

MICROSOFT PAYS FOR PIRATING

LOS ANGELES — A jury ordered Microsoft Corp. to pay a smaller company $120 million for illegally using its software in Microsoft's best-selling MS-DOS computer program.

A federal jury on Wednesday found the world's largest seller of computer software guilty of patent infringement against Stac Electronics, the jury said the violation was not willful.

Jurors awarded Microsoft $13.6 million on a counterclaim that Stac had stolen its technology to develop the MS-DOS Stacker, which is used to manipulate data so more can be stored on hard disk drives.

Stac alleged in its January 1993 lawsuit that the Stacker program was unlawfully included in Microsoft's MS-DOS 6.0, the operating system used by most IBM and IBM-compatible personal computers around the world.

HAMAR, Norway — Two of the top contenders in Olympic women's figure skating slammed into each other at practice Thursday, requiring stitches for one.

World champion Oksana Baiul of Ukraine and Germany's Tanja Szewczenko, both 16, were skating backward at nearly top speed when they collided. Baiul's elbow slammed into Szewczenko's ribs, and Baiul spiked herself with her own skate.

Both were expected to perform Friday in the free-skate that will decide the gold medal, but it's not clear how well they will be able to skate.

In Wednesday's short program, Nancy Kerrigan was brilliant, finishing first. Baiul was second going into the long program and Szewczenko was fifth.

Baiul left the ice under her own power, bleeding from a gash just above her right boot. She needed three stitches and had a sore lower back, Olympic officials said.

Baseball: 'single greatest game invented'

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

From the moment you enter Robert Linder's Eisenhower Hall office, the first thing you notice is his obsession with baseball.

The memorabilia that crowds his walls and the Kansas City Royals cap planted on his head identify Linder as disciple of the ball diamond.

Linder teaches a class on the history of baseball, and he takes his study of the sport very seriously.

"Baseball is the single-greatest game invented by human beings," he said.

Aside from the Constitution and religion, Linder views baseball as one of the only things that holds us together as a country. Linder's fascination with the game comes from his respect for the players and from his own experiences playing the game.

He played baseball on many amateur and semi-pro teams and as an undergraduate at Emporia State University.

"Baseball is the sport that best balances athletic and intellectual skills that I know of."

Before coming to K-State in 1965, Linder served two years in the army and taught briefly at William Jewell College in Liberty, Mo.

Linder came to K-State at a volatile time, during the genesis of the Vietnam War and the resulting protests and activism on campus.

"It was an era of student unrest against the war," he said.

Though he only participated in one of the marches, Linder recalls the incidents of arson that led to the destruction of Nichols Gym.

"We came in one morning and found the history department office door charred and burned," he said. "A few days later, they tried to burn the library, and then Nichols burned down a few days later."

Nichols Gym was gutted by fire on Dec. 13, 1968.

Linder said the campus violence did not end with property damage.

"Myself and a number of other history faculty received threats, and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation was watching our homes."

"I'd been in the army and never had anything like that happen," he said. "I was perfectly safe in the army, but here at K-State it was a different matter.

"For 10 years we were trying to do our teaching and research amidst all this."

The climax of the activism on campus came shortly after the Kent State incident in 1970. After Kent State, Linder participated in the largest demonstration in Manhattan history.

"We marched through campus over to where they were building Ackert Hall — all that was there was a pile of dirt. We had a big coffin representing the war, and we buried it there."

Linder said there is a large difference between the students of those years and the students of today.

"At least the students were engaged back then," Linder said.

"In those days, in my judgement, students were better prepared for the university."

Linder said fewer students realize the difference between high school and college, compared to the time when he did his undergraduate work, although he said he enjoys the new challenge.

Professor IDs Vietnam graves

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

A K-State professor was instrumental in locating and evacuating the bodies of three U.S. servicemen killed during the Vietnam War.

Michael Finnegan, professor of anthropology, returned home from Vietnam on Jan. 30 after spending a month working with a 12-person search-and-recovery team.

Finnegan was part of the 27th Joint Field Activity between the American and Vietnamese and was part of the largest field activity since they began about seven years ago.

For the past four years, Finnegan has worked as a consultant for the Central Identification Lab, CILHI, at the Hickam Air Force Base in Hawaii, which is responsible for identifying remains of soldiers from all wars.

In November, discussions were started between Finnegan and CILHI about the trip to Vietnam.

Finnegan said his team knew from reports what soldiers had died and in what area.

"Everybody in their group had died. They were ambushed," Finnegan said.

"The next day they sent another patrol in, and they found two guys hastily buried, but the rest of the guys had not been found, so they were killed in action, but their bodies had not been recovered."

In the past 20 years, flooding had caused many landmarks to change, making exact identification of the burial site difficult. But, through an interpreter, Finnegan interviewed witnesses, got information about the soldiers's remains and located the man who buried the servicemen.

The man gave directions relative to a hut where he said he buried the servicemen.

"He said if he knew where that hut was, he would be able to give us a pretty accurate location of where the burials were," he said.

Finnegan said he knew where the hut had been because he had seen a site with broken bowls, charcoal, part of a water pot and part of a medicine bottle.

Once the man knew where the hut had been, he was able to point at the approximate area of the burial site.

From there, the team dug a trench about 17 meters long and 12 meters wide.

"We excavated the area and the last cross-trench, literally at the last square meter that we excavated, we came down on human arm bones," Finnegan said.

From there, the grave area was excavated, and the bodies of three individuals were found.

"We are told that this was the first time that a burial was successfully excavated in Vietnam," he said.

The remains of the soldiers were then shipped to the lab in Hawaii and will be tested for positive identification.

While in Vietnam, Finnegan's team examined other sites.

At one point, Finnegan's group split in half and a former POW along with others in the group went to an old POW camp.

"He got there and pointed to where the kitchen and latrine had been and a number of other things and also roughly where they had buried some individuals," Finnegan said.

"And while they were there, a Vietnamese man came along and looked at him real close and then called him by his last name. And so this guy looked at the Vietnamese man and called him by his name, and they had known each other 20 to 25 years ago."

"He said it was rather touching. It was a great reunion, and he said it got a little emotional, and he was really happy to have met these people again," Finnegan said.

At that site, a couple of trenches were dug, but no burials were found. Teams will probably return in the future, Finnegan said.

The third site examined by Finnegan's team was the site of an aircraft crash. By helicopter, Finnegan and five others were flown into the area.

"It was like climbing up a football field, but it was like a 60-to-70-degree slope in a jungle, and you couldn't see the light of day, it was so thick," he said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Clinton crime bill misses the mark

The juvenile justice system that was set up in the middle of the century still has the "slap-on-the-hand" attitude.

The Clinton administration has attempted to solve the ever-increasing problem of crime in America by creating a bill that has more of a bark than a bite, if any bite at all.

The Clinton crime bill contains such proposals as the "three-strikes-you're-out" provision, adding 100,000 more police officers to the streets, more prisons and mandatory minimum sentences for drug offenders.

Philip Heymann, the former deputy attorney general, decided to leave the Clinton administration because of many disagreements, and the Clinton crime bill was one of his biggest disputes.

After picking the plan apart, it's not difficult to discover the problems. Actually, it's something that isn't in the plan causing the problem.

The bill doesn't address the most important aspect of crime — juvenile crime.

The juvenile justice system that was set up in the middle of the century still has the "slap-on-the-hand" attitude. The problem stems from the system being created when juveniles didn't walk up to people and blow them away.

The breakdown of the family unit has created an atmosphere in America where juveniles don't learn the values that would keep them from committing these crimes.

Likewise, the justice system doesn't deliver swift consequences for juveniles' actions. Juveniles live free for sometimes eight months before their crimes are even addressed in a courtroom.

This bill must include provisions that would deal with and decide punishments so juveniles learn crime is intolerable — even though they are not adults.

Stop picking on Tonya — you're not in her skates

"Her mother was married six times; she grew up in a trailer home, was called trailer trash, called a white nigger. Abused child, abused wife. Her insides must look like a broken glass. But she keeps smiling and keeps skating."

—Jesse Jackson, speaking of Tonya Harding as quoted in Newsweek magazine

When the Tonya Harding scandal first broke, my roommate and I thought it was pretty funny. We watched David Letterman, Jay Leno and a host of other celebrities ridicule Harding to no end. It sure was funny stuff.

Well, after a few weeks of sarcastic joking between my roommate and me, we both decided to stand up for Tonya. At first, we did it as a joke, but after a few days of this, we started really believing in her. We realized she had been treated badly — very badly — for someone who did nothing wrong. We grew as human beings.

OK, I understand she withheld information for two weeks. But wouldn't you if your husband or wife beat someone up, and you knew about it? When it is someone you know, the situation changes, doesn't it?

Tonya went through those two long weeks with much internal struggle. That would be enough to destroy you and me. Yet, she kept going.

Then, the media stopped presses and hung out in front of her apartment. Her entire life changed. How would you feel? All poor Tonya knew how to do was to keep practicing and smiling.

On top of this already hellish life, the U.S. Olympic Committee had special meetings to decide if Tonya should be allowed to skate. So, the many years Tonya trained, losing out on a normal social life, would go down the tubes. Put yourself in her place. Would you want to lose everything around you in one month? That's a little stressful, isn't it?

So, why are we so quick to condemn her? Is it because we need an antagonist to counter Nancy Kerrigan's saccharin protagonist? Is it because we, as a country, are obsessed with scandal, and we needed Harding to fill Lorena Bobbitt's place?

Or is it more complex? Is this a nation of snobs, condemning the lower-class, abused person in favor of the wealthier, all-American girl? Our judgments were made on Tonya's appearance and social upbringing. So, we are really redefining our prejudices for a new decade. I wonder.

It would take Jesse Jackson, someone who has fought his whole life for a nonprejudiced society, to point this out. This is why Jackson is a leader. This is why we should look up to him. I guess we failed this time.

I think what upsets me the most is that what the country did to Tonya is getting pretty common. Our media make decisions for us. If it's on CNN, it must be right. The problem is CNN, and "Hard Copy" are starting to look like the same programs. Scandal sells.

Wednesday night, Tonya Harding placed 10th in the women's technical preview. How many of you were relieved? How many of you said, "That treats that bitch right!" What kind of person are you? Does anyone believe in the religious right of forgiveness or even innocence? I'm not going to clean someone else's doorstep if mine needs cleaning.

If Harding did know about it, she'll get her just punishment in due time. She didn't ruin the Olympics by hogging the spotlight. Who'll forget Bonnie Blair, Dan Jansen or Johann Koss? Who'll forget Kerrigan (with upcoming movies, TV specials and who knows what, courtesy of commercial giant Disney)? I won't.

I hope Tonya wins a medal tonight. You see, I like Tonya Harding. I like the way she skates. I like the way she smiles. She has overcome great odds to become a world-class athlete. What have I done?

Humanity denied to the homeless

She was young. Too young, I thought to myself, but she was probably no younger than any other first-year student at this university.

Perhaps she just seemed that way to me because she was speaking in a light and airy voice that made her opinions sound less like they came from an informed speaker and too much like they came from a little girl who was telling me what she wanted for Christmas.

Perhaps she seemed so young because of what she was saying.

Her opinions were obviously expressed straight from her heart but were tinged with an innocence that clashed against the steel edge of my hard-won experience.

The homeless could get out of their situation if they wanted to, she told me. I was homeless for three years — I was proof it could be done. Others obviously just weren't working hard enough.

Enraged would hardly describe the depth or breadth of the fury that rose up in me when I heard her say that. Nothing — not her statements about women belonging in the home nor that all American presidents should be white and male — angered me more than that one throw-away phrase.

I was, for a few minutes, speechless. A sight I am sure many people would pay to see. As it was, the little audience sitting around us got to see me turning three shades of purple. I am sure they found that quite amusing.

But no one could have known how those few phrases cut me to the quick. The homeless and hungry could save themselves if they wanted to. I was proof.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

I was proof.

How could I explain the sights that sprang to my mind of the old men and women, sitting, smoking and talking of the days when their families cared about what happened to them? Or the faces of the adolescents who, like me, had to be parents to their siblings 24 hours a day, while their parents looked for even the most menial jobs?

Bogged down with the changing state of the economy, unable to keep up housing payments and afford medical insurance, trying to make food stamps stretch to cover diapers — how could I explain the depth of the social problems homeless adults were facing? Problems that sucked more people our age in every day.

I wanted to stick their faces into the mind of a girl who had probably never missed a meal or gone without a coat. I wanted to make her understand the sentiment she expressed does more than hurt; it doesn't help.

I am not proof one person can save herself from the long and hard arms of destitution and hopelessness. I am not proof of the power of determination, of great inner strength, nor of intelligence. I am proof that chance exists. Period.

I slipped free because I was lucky. People took the time to try and change my descent. People like her deny the humanity of the homeless with their words. They must learn to realize that there is not a person on the street who, even if he's crazy enough to want to be there, deserves to live that kind of squalid and humiliating existence.

If I am to be living proof of anything, I am proof a warm bed and a full belly has become a privilege in this country, not a right. And I earned that privilege, not because I was any more worthy than anyone else, but because shit happens and sometimes when it does, people get lucky. I did.

Only God knows whether it was at the expense of a 5-year-old child, or a young mother or an old man. But not a day goes by that I don't wonder.

I didn't say this to this girl when she said what she did. I was angry, and I could not have changed her mind as angry as I was. For the rest of the night, however, I found myself looking at my body often to see if one of my limbs was missing.

It felt like it.

Vouchers let parents control quality of education

WILLIAM MCKEN

Since the turn of the century, the government has had a monopoly on education. For the same amount of time, the government education business has sold the consumers, the students, a shoddy product at the cost of the taxpayers.

Coming into this decade, the U.S. Department of Education stated 90 percent of school-aged children attended public schools. It seems the growth in attendance of public schools has increased as quickly as the quality of education has decreased.

Parents' options are narrowed down to home schooling and private schools.

I believe home schooling is by far the most effective form of education, granted the parent has the time, patience and financial resources.

Private schools become the only option for parents who want their children to receive a quality education but don't have time for home schooling. Because of financial constraints, these schools are difficult for many parents to afford.

The solution to the problem is a school voucher plan. The plan works by using taxpayer dollars, which would have been spent on the students' fees in public schools, and allowing parents to spend these funds at schools of their choice.

Although I disagree with the fact it has to be paid for with tax dollars — the economic sickness that plagues our government — I realize it is the only economically feasible solution to allow many middle- and low-income parents to pay for their children's schooling.

In 1991, figures showed an average of $5,237 was spent per pupil in U.S. public schools. This figure varies from state to state because of the different educational systems.

The problem is, like any government bureaucracy, public education is ineffective and inefficient in spending the money it receives. Money that comes from our tax dollars. Money the public has lost control over.

Vouchers would not only put control of tax dollars back in taxpayer hands, it would increase the level of education in the United States — something that has been described by many as being mediocre.

At the same time, it would decrease the cost of education to the public.

Voucher plans would put public schools in competition with private schools, meaning public schools would be forced to do the job better and cheaper, or they will fail.

Yes, education would be turned into a business. The only way businesses can succeed is by making money. They must sell products that are better than their competitors at competitive prices.

Logically, the schools that give a poor education will fail, and those where a student can receive a high-quality education will succeed.

This will also force the public-school system to tighten its budget while increasing its educational standards.

The National Education Association is against school vouchers because it does not want to see public schools fall to privatization. Ironically, Keith Geiger, president of the NEA, said 40-50 percent of all

Like any government bureaucracy, public education is ineffective and inefficient in spending the money it receives.

urban-area public school teachers send their children to private schools.

Voucher plans are growing at a consistent rate throughout the United States.

Milwaukee has already adopted such a system, and other states, including Kansas, have put it on their referendums. Kansas Rep. Kay O'Connor, R-Olathe, has designed a school-voucher plan that she is trying to pass through the Kansas Legislature.

Likewise, both Minneapolis and Washington, D.C., school boards have asked for public schools to be turned over to private firms.

Actually, a great deal of support for the voucher plan comes from low-income urban minorities who would like to see their children receive a better education than the one given in urban public schools.

Opponents of the plan claim increasing numbers of private schools will decrease the separation between church and state because the traditional view of private schools is seen as having a religious background.

Although some private schools will be religiously based, it does not mean this will hold true for all of them.

Entrepreneur Chris Whittle has designed a chain of profit-based private schools that have no religious background but plan to give any student a well-rounded, high-quality education.

Growth in privatization of education is not only good for students and parents, but it will allow for increases in teacher salaries, a profession that is highly underpaid. Also, it gives them the opportunity to work as professionals by enhancing their academic freedom.

They don't just speak their message.

They sing it.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference Mass Youth Choir will bring their message to campus 3:30 p.m. Sunday in the All Faiths Chapel. The performance is in celebration of Black History Month.

The group, comprised of 80 youths ages 11-18, was designed three years ago to sing at a yearly celebration in Kansas City, Mo., honoring Martin Luther King Jr.

However, the demand for the group has become so great that it performs throughout the year, Reggie Robinson, director of music, said.

The group, which is now looking for a financial sponsor, funds its travel by money-raising efforts.

The choir has performed for the Rev. Jesse Jackson and both Kansas and Missouri governors. It has also been featured on the Bobby Jones television show for the Gospel Explosion in Atlanta.

Choir membership is open to all races and denominations, and singing ability is not required, Robinson said.

"All you have to do is love the Lord," he said.

The members are enrolled in self-esteem and self-awareness classes. They also minister to youth shelters, the Salvation Army, nursing homes and prisons.

"We reach young people through the word of song and the word of God. We want to let young people know that God is real and can help you through anything," Robinson said.

Members are also educated on the handling of finance, tutoring, job search, university and college information, and financial assistance for their educational aspirations.

This is the first trip to Manhattan for the group, and it will join other groups from K-State in its performance.

Astronaut faces harassment suit

Astronaut Charles Gemar faces allegations of harassment brought on by a NASA contract worker.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA Astronaut Charles "Sam" Gemar, who is due to take off for space next week, is being sued by an aerospace engineer who said Gemar harassed and stalked her after she gave birth to his child two years ago.

Never before has an American astronaut faced such allegations or rocketed into space with a lawsuit pending back on Earth.

NASA contract worker Bernadette Cardenas, who filed the lawsuit in January, said everyone seems to be protecting Gemar. She said her claims of harassment have gone unheeded because Gemar is an astronaut.

Cardenas, who works on the space station project at Johnson Space Center in Houston, is suing Gemar and his wife, Charlene, also a NASA employee.

Cardenas, 35, said the Gemars repeatedly stalked her and made harassing and intimidating calls to her at home and work and that Charlene Gemar contacted her supervisors and employers in an apparent attempt to get her fired.

Cardenas said the harassment has been going on since late 1990, when Charlene Gemar learned of her affair with Sam Gemar.

Cardenas said she's not after money. She said she just wants the harassment to stop and for Gemar to waive parental rights over her 2-year-old son and provide a family medical history.

Cardenas went to court to force Gemar to submit to blood tests to establish paternity, but her motion was denied. She plans to appeal.

In case of "a catastrophic occurrence," such as a shuttle explosion, Cardenas has asked NASA to preserve Gemar's blood and tissue samples for paternity tests.

Columbia is due to lift off on a two-week science mission March 3.

"Our job is to train and fly this mission the best way we can, and that's where our minds are," John Casper, Gemar's commander, said in response to questions from reporters last week.

NASA flight director Phil Engelauf said the lawsuit has had no effect on mission preparation.

Gemar, 38, an Army lieutenant colonel who will be making his third space flight, will be in charge of truss-assembly and rat experiments.

NASA never considered pulling Gemar from the flight because the lawsuit has "nothing at all to do with his job," space agency spokeswoman Barbara Schwartz said.

BIG EIGHT

Up to 10: Texas A&M joins Baylor in Big Eight

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — Regents at tradition-rich Texas A&M voted Thursday to join Baylor and accept a merger offer from the Big Eight Conference, paving the way for the Aggies to sever a nearly 80-year affiliation with the Southwest Conference.

The governing boards at two other universities, Texas and Texas Tech, were expected to take similar action at meetings scheduled for Friday, moving the SWC, at least in its present form, another step closer to extinction.

"We are proud to have been asked and enthusiastic about joining a conference with these eight great universities," E. Dean Gage, A&M's interim president, said. "This new alignment not only offers new opportunities for all 12 universities in men's and women's intercollegiate athletics, but further establishes an even closer relationship in the areas of teaching, research and public service."

There was little discussion

Thursday involving the seven regents who participated in a telephone conference call at a special board meeting. A quick vote was taken with no one dissenting.

A&M athletic director Wally Groff said he had mixed emotions about the vote, saying while it was good for his school he was "sad for the schools not invited."

The unanimous decision, however, was not difficult, he said.

"If you're not moving forward, you're moving backward," Groff said. "We needed to move forward. It was really a decision about what's best for our athletic program."

Texas A&M, Baylor and Texas are charter members of the SWC, which organized in 1914. Texas Tech joined in 1956.

Baylor's decision to quit came Wednesday, just days after the Big Eight made its proposal wooing the four so-called "haves" of the SWC. The offer excluded Houston, Rice, Southern Methodist and Texas Christian, who have been dubbed the league's "have nots."

Kiss the Southwest Conference goodbye.

Baylor was the first school to accept the Big Eight Conference's offer to join after Baylor's Board of Regents voted on Wednesday to accept the Big Eight's offer.

Thursday, Texas A&M abandoned the ship that used to be the Southwest Conference. Texas and Texas Tech are expected to announce their decisions today.

That leaves Southern Methodist, Rice, Texas Christian and Houston to ponder their future in athletics.

Probably affected most by the Big Eight's expansion is Southern Methodist, which is in Dallas.

The school, with only 8,978 students, might be not be able to continue playing at the Division I-A level without the Southwest Conference.

According to an article in the Daily Campus, SMU's newspaper, the Mustangs might have to drop down to play Division III athletics.

"If a merger is to take place without SMU, it would definitely have an effect on us," Marshall Terry, SMU Facility Senate president, said.

"We would have to reconsider options from two years ago from the discussions of whether or not to stay in Division I-A."

"If SMU would have to drop down to Division III, for example, that would be really going down because there would be no scholarships available to students."

Two years ago, SMU was considering dropping down to Division III after serving a two-year penalty in football not allowing the school to play any games because of NCAA rules violations.

The reason SMU would drop down to Division III is because the school will lose its major money maker — the Cotton Bowl.

The SWC champion currently plays in the Cotton Bowl, but the NCAA is scheduled to meet next January to discuss a possible Division I-A playoff system. That would cost SMU $1.4 million.

Houston is in a little better situation than SMU because the school controls one of the largest TV markets in the country.

That's why Cougar basketball coach Alvin Brooks said he couldn't believe the Big Eight passed on his school.

"This is a bit of a surprise to me," Brooks said. "I thought that they would like our television market."

Brooks said Houston shouldn't have any problems finding a new home.

"We can realign with someone else," Brooks said, "given all of the TV homes in the Houston market that we can bring to the table. I think that we will have a lot to sell, and I don't think that this will keep us out in the cold."

The newest rumors involving Houston has them going to the Southeastern Conference, which already has 12 teams.

"It's been rumored. I know that there's talk going on about some options that we might have," Brooks said.

"Both the Big Eight and SEC are tough conferences, and I think that either would enhance your program. The SEC is obviously the much tougher league from top to bottom."

Rice and TCU are in a situation similar to SMU. Rice has an enrollment of only 2,600 students, and TCU has 6,500 students.

These two schools have also been rumored to drop down to Division III, according to the Rice Thresher newspaper.

New Mexico athletic director Rudy Davalos told the Associated Press that the Western Athletic Conference is interested in the four remaining schools, as well as Memphis State and Louisville.

This would make the WAC a 16-team league with two divisions, such as the expanded Big Eight may become.

"Yes, there's some definite interest," Davalos said.

"The WAC athletic directors met one time, via conference call, and discussed expanding the 10-team league."

"The four Southwest Conference schools were brought up."

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Cats face No. 12 Hawks

BRIAN ANDERSON

Collegian

The K-State and Kansas women's basketball teams play for the second time this season at 7 p.m. Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Jayhawks come to Manhattan with a 16-6 record overall — ranked No. 12 in the Associated Press poll — and are second in the Big Eight at 7-4. The Wildcats enter with a 12-12 record, 5-8 in the conference.

K-State appears to have a lock for the sixth seed in the Big Eight Tournament next weekend in Salina.

Kansas handed K-State a 77-50 loss on Jan. 30 in Lawrence's Allen Fieldhouse. The Jayhawks built a double-digit lead by the 11-minute mark of the first half, 20-9, and went on to a 41-18 lead at halftime.

Almost everything went in for the Hawks in the game as Kansas was 49 percent (21-of-54) from the field and 75 percent (24-of-32) from the free-throw line, compared to K-State's 31.7 percent (20-of-63) from the field and 41.7 percent (five-of-12) from the charity stripe.

K-State forward Shanelle Stires finished with a team-high 20 points and 14 rebounds, while Kansas center Lisa Tate scored 20 points to lead the Hawks. Guard Angela Aycock added 14 points and 11 rebounds.

The Cats have a 37-26 lead between the two schools — including a 16-8 margin in Manhattan. The Hawks have won seven of the last 10 games and have a five-game winning streak against the Cats.

K-State facing must-win to keep hopes alive

TREY JOHNSON

Intensity and speed will be the two key components in K-State's game against Nebraska Saturday in Lincoln, Neb.

Nebraska is currently one game ahead of K-State in the Big Eight Conference and with just three games remaining, the winner of this contest has the better chance of advancing to the NCAA Tournament.

"I think that both teams know they need to win," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "I think it is going to be intense no matter what because both teams need a win desperately. I am sure it is going to be a very competitive ballgame."

"(The Cornhuskers) can really run the floor, and they expect to score a lot of baskets out of that."

The Wildcats are on a three-game winning streak, having defeated two non-conference foes and Oklahoma. Their last game was a win against Missouri-Kansas City, 71-58, on Tuesday.

The win was not particularly impressive, though. The Cats tied with the Kangaroos on total rebounds at 28, a key area of K-State's game.

"That is a little bit of an embarrassment," Deryl Cunningham said. "That was my fault. I didn't get on the boards like I usually do. I'll just have to bounce back Saturday."

Cunningham was limited to just five rebounds.

Nebraska's most recent game was much more impressive. The Cornhuskers pulled an upset win against Kansas, 96-87, Wednesday. The win moved Nebraska into a tie with Oklahoma for fourth place in the Big Eight. Oklahoma lost Wednesday to Iowa State.

Earlier this season, the Cats lost to the Huskers, 76-68, in Manhattan.

"We let them dictate the whole ballgame for 40 minutes," Anthony Beane said. "They just had control of it. We just couldn't get it done. We just didn't suck it up and play harder like we normally do — like we are doing now. I think that is going to be a big key when we go down there."

Beane had 13 points against Nebraska earlier this season. He has put his mid-season shooting slump behind him and during his last six games has averaged 16 points and made 19 of 43 three-pointers.

"We've finally established that when we step out on the court, we are going to give it all and play hard," Beane said. "That was something that we needed to establish early that we didn't get. That is why that inconsistency was there. Now, everyone is playing comfortable and saying, 'We are going to play

The K-State track team will travel to Oklahoma City together but will not compete together.

Because the team was cited by the NCAA for paying student athletes last season, it will not be included in team totals at the Big Eight Indoor Championships today and Saturday.

However, members of the team are allowed to compete for individual and relay championships.

"It doesn't bother me at all," Francis O'Neill, who finished sixth in the 3,000-meter race last season, said. "I'm psyched and ready to go."

Coach Cliff Rovelto said some of the edge has been taken off because of the sanctions.

"I want our people to go out and get better," Rovelto said. "I want them to enjoy the opportunity to compete against some very good people."

Several of K-State's top finishers at last year's conference championships have been redshirted because of the sanctions, which has considerably weakened the team, Rovelto said.

Rovelto said K-State will be the site of next year's Big Eight Indoor Championships, and he didn't want his seniors to compete at their last conference meet without a chance to win.

Gwen Wentland, Jill Montgomery, Dante McGrew and Percell Gaskins all placed in the top three of their respective events at last season's championships, and all will not compete this year.

"I had to redshirt a lot of our best scorers from last year," Rovelto said.

However, Rovelto said the team is by no means without any talent returning to this year's championships.

Nicole Green has hit the NCAA provisional qualifying standards on more than one occasion in the 200-meter and the 400-meter.

Her 200-meter time of 24.18 is the best among Big Eight sprinters this season. She also ranks second in the conference in the 400-meter with a time of 55.00.

"I've competed against everybody who will be there," Green said. "There won't be any surprises."

Ed Broxterman and Itai Margalit placed second and third, respectively, in the high jump last season when the meet was at Iowa State.

Broxterman has cleared 7 feet or better at every meet so far this season. O'Neill, who will be competing in the 3,000-meter, said the competition in the distance events has grown tougher since last season.

"The guys are faster than last year," O'Neill said. "I feel a little less confident than last year because my times are coming on later."

Freshmen Karissa Owens and Angela Showalter are two newcomers who could find themselves among the conference's best.

Showalter will compete in the 55-meter hurdles.

Owens will compete in the 55-meter dash and the 200-meter. Owens is also a member of the mile relay team.

At the Sooner Indoor Invitational, Showalter placed second in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 8.33.

"My goal as a coach is to see how my athletes compare to other athletes in the conference and nationally," Rovelto said.

"Times don't tell you much if you don't know where they stack up."

K-State tennis fans will finally get a chance to see the Wildcat netters in action at home this season.

The K-State women's tennis team will be playing its first home tennis matches of the season as it takes on Louisiana State University at 1:30 p.m. Friday and Creighton at 10 a.m. Saturday.

K-State coach Steve Bietau said he believes this will be a good chance for Cat fans to see the squad compete.

"I think we are going to have a good team, and I know that LSU is strong," Bietau said. "I think that anybody who enjoys good tennis would enjoy seeing that."

Creighton doesn't carry the reputation that LSU does, but the team is still dangerous, Bietau said.

"Creighton's team historically hasn't been as strong, but they're well-coached, and I think they compete pretty well," he said.

Sophomore Masha Meidell said these will be important matches not only because they are at home but also because they give the team a chance to gain a lot of confidence for the rest of the season.

"It's the first match at home, and it's really important for our confidence to win both matches," Meidell said.

"I think it's going to be important for the rest of the season."

Getting to play at home will also give the team a chance to take a break from traveling and

It's a seller's market for beauty in Vermont

The next woman to enter the Mrs. Vermont beauty pageant has a great chance of winning. By default.

No one has signed up yet to compete in the pageant, which is slated for April 17. Not even prizes of a full-length fur coat and an all-expenses-paid trip to Las Vegas have proved an adequate lure.

"Women in Vermont are just not interested in pageants," said Tony Neri, who has run the Miss Vermont competition for 15 years. "They train them to become skiers."

Dr. Esther Rothblum, a psychology professor at the University of Vermont, said Vermonters tend to eschew the traditional gender stereotypes.

"Looking particularly feminine is not necessarily a big goal here," she said.

Let's go to Chicago and pick up a church

When the population at the St. Gregory Parish in Marysville, Kan., increased so much that its church began bursting at the seams, some parishioners began looking around for room to grow.

They found it — in Chicago, where an old Indiana limestone church sitting empty in a neighborhood full of gangs, graffiti and boarded-up buildings was scheduled to be torn down.

Now the church members and some community leaders want to pay up to $5 million to have the St. John of God Catholic Church shipped to Marysville, stone by stone.

"When I was first approached with the idea, I thought it was the most harebrained thing I'd ever heard," said the Rev. Joe Cramer, head of the St. Gregory the Great Parish. "But the more I hear about it, the less crazy it seems."

For the last time, kids, no cunnilingus in class

A boy in Dayton, Ohio, performed oral sex on a girl in front of several high-school classmates while their teacher was in the room, authorities said.

Student witnesses said the act occurred in October during a study hall in a ninth-grade English classroom at Patterson Career Center, James Williams, Dayton's school superintendent, said.

Five to 10 students stood around the couple while the teacher was at her desk listening to a radio, witnesses said.

Williams said witnesses told investigators about the public display, but Virginia Carter, the teacher who was in the room at the time, denied it happened.

Carter is on medical leave and has submitted her resignation.

You can see both of your opponent's faces — the opponent's real face and the character's face — on the screen in front of you.

For a quarter or 50 cents, you can take on a new persona, fight and kill someone, face someone new or be killed by them and walk away.

Less than five minutes later — give or take a few choice four-letter expletives — you're either the coolest, or you're dead.

This is the world of Mortal Kombat II, a video game in which your opponent can be half your age or twice your height and any shape, size or color. You'll try to defeat them no matter what they look like. Be assured that they will return the favor, with pleasure.

The game is the follow-up to Mortal Kombat, one of the most popular arcade games in recent years.

The original game had seven characters fighting through the Shaolin Tournament to defeat Goro, a half-man, half-dragon, and Shang Tsung, an evil sorcerer, both of whom have controlled the tournament for 500 years.

Each character has its own special-attack moves and purposes for being in the tournament.

The premise of Mortal Kombat II is that Shang Tsung was defeated in the first game. He returned to his home in the Outworld. Given one more chance by his master, Shao Kahn, to prove his worth, Shang Tsung is given his youth again and told to lure the warriors into the Outworld to perish. So begins the sequel.

Now, there are 12 characters in the tournament with Shao Kahn and Kintaro, Shao Kahn's protector, waiting for them in the end. There are five returning warriors and seven new ones, including Shang Tsung himself.

Like Mortal Kombat, all characters have their own talents and purposes for venturing through the dimensional portal to fight in the Outworld.

The characters include a wraith returning to avenge his death, a movie star who suspiciously resembles Jean-Claude

Van Damme, "twin" sisters who serve as Shao Kahn's personal assassins and a thunder god, among others.

With all the characters and all the moves, why do people play the game?

"I like the challenge," Loren Holman, freshman in mechanical engineering, said, while playing the game in the basement of the K-State Union.

"I didn't like it at first. The characters looked stupid," Holman said.

Holman said he started playing and gradually came to like it.

"I watched other people and talking to other people (for special move combinations). Some people get it off the net," he said, while working some of those combinations on an opponent.

The "net" is Internet, a nationwide computer network. A person can log on and find a lengthy file that explains the game in detail.

The file is compiled by several people across the United States and is filled with character background, moves and combinations, secret characters and rumors.

So, what's the big deal about this game? What gets players' and non-players' attention? Simply put, it's what the characters do.

Scorpion can harpoon you and drag you across the screen for more punishment. Raiden can teleport across the screen and shoot lightning from his hands. Kitana can slice and dice you with her metal fans. Sub-Zero will freeze you in your tracks. JAX can grab you out of mid-air for a nasty-sounding back-breaker. The carnage goes on.

After defeating a Kombatant, the player is given the chance to "finish" them off. This is where the blood flies, splatters, drips and generally ends up everywhere.

Fatalities range from transforming into a dragon and biting off the top half of the beaten warrior to draining the warrior's life force.

Three of the fighting stages have obstacles of destruction. You can spike them on the ceiling, knock them into a "Dead Pool" where their skeleton floats to the top, or send them falling into a pit where they die, cracking the bottom of the pit.

One finishing move is turning your opponent into a crying baby, which is appropriately called a babality. Yet another finishing move is an act of friendship, like giving your opponent a present or cake.

By now you may have guessed this game is considered quite violent. What keeps people plugging in quarter after quarter to rip somebody apart?

Lin Huff-Corzin, assistant professor of sociology, said it is a combination of getting a thrill from the violence and having to go further and further for that thrill.

"People are intrigued by it," Huff-Corzin said.

After all the recent media attention and controversy about the violence in the game, has Mortal Kombat II lost its appeal after a few months?

"It's still our most popular game," Andy Mielke, Kwik Shop employee and junior in Bible ministries at Manhattan Christian College, said.

He said if he had to describe the people who play in one word, that word would be "addicted." It is probably the sheer challenge of beating the machine, he said.

Mielke said most people come to Kwik Shop in the evenings from 9 p.m. to 1 or 2 a.m. and hang out for a couple of hours.

One thing that might keep people coming back for more is the different revisions of the game. The present Mortal Kombat II is the third version. Each revision added new moves and fatalities.

"It's our top game," David Allen, owner of Hutchinson Vending Co., said.

He said there is a big demand for Mortal Kombat II, and it is an expensive game — costing $4,000 wholesale.

"Everyone is trying to get one," Allen said.

This is just a glimpse into the Mortal Kombat world.

Immortality can be yours — if you have another quarter in your pocket.

Resident remembers 99 years of stories

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Not many people can recall events that happened prior to this century. Well, let's face it, not many people can recall events that happened this afternoon.

Helen Hood can go a few better.

You see, Hood was born May 17, 1894, right here in Manhattan. So that would make her 99 years old.

Hood is a very spry woman. She sat in her wheelchair with upright posture, making various gestures with her hands. Her hair was carefully pulled back on her head with a ribbon.

Hood has been treated kindly during her life. Her sly and surprising personality is one that can only be found in those supported by the nurturing love of friends and family.

Hood instigated the conversation, which took place on Valentine's Day at the Stoneybrook Retirement Community, by asking why anyone would want to do an article about her life.

"They told me you wanted to write about me," she said, daintily. "I don't know why."

Then she started from the beginning. Helen Hood grew up in Manhattan with the maiden name of Haines.

"I had two brothers, Cecil and Joe, and one sister, Edith," she said. Her father worked at the First Interstate Bank in Manhattan.

Hood saw some important history in her early years of growing up in Manhattan.

"My favorite President was Teddy Roosevelt. I remember when he gave a speech from the back of a train. I was there."

Helen also witnessed the laying of the cornerstone for the courthouse in downtown Manhattan.

She said she attended Poyntz Avenue School at the age of 6.

"It had nine grades, and then you went to college," she said.

After school, Hood spent about two years in further study before enrolling in Kansas State Agricultural College, now K-State, in 1909. She majored in Home Economics.

Going to college as a woman was no small feat in the early 1900s. The women's suffrage movement was not until the 1920s. However, K-State Agricultural College was at the forefront of offering education to women. In fact, many women K-State graduates helped to set up curriculums for women at other schools.

Hood took all of this with a grain of salt.

"We all went to college at K-State," she said. "My aunt Emma graduated in 1863. She was the oldest graduate around for many years."

K-State had about 1,000 students, mostly men, when she attended.

"We were just as smart as the men. Of course, they Soccer gives children level playing field

BRENT BROWN

Youth soccer leagues are becoming more popular in Manhattan.

"I think soccer is a game they can play regardless of their size or their speed," Karen Perry, recreation supervisor, said.

Manhattan Parks and Recreation conducts youth soccer leagues in the fall and spring, but Recreation Supervisor Mike Buchanan said the spring season draws the biggest crowd.

"The turnout is better in the spring because of the lack of other sports," he said.

The soccer program is made up primarily of elementary and middle school students. There are, however, leagues for high-school students who are interested, Perry said.

Last fall, there were 43 teams consisting of almost 700 children, not including the high-school students.

"This is the first year for our training leagues for our younger soccer players," Perry said.

"There are smaller fields and goals for the younger players that make the game a lot more competitive for them," she said.

These leagues, primarily for first graders, allows those inexperienced players to work on skills before they are thrown into a game situation, she said.

The referees are also encouraged to help the kids when they make a mistake and not just take the ball away, she said.

Anyone can coach a youth soccer team, Perry said.

"We have got a lot of parents and high-school students that have been through the recreational leagues before," she said.

Perry said coaching is also popular among college students.

"They just like the game and want to get involved," she said.

Robert Boyd, a parent and volunteer coach, said the college students are terrific with the kids.

"They look up to them like heroes," he said.

Boyd has been volunteer coaching for almost five years, and he said the kids are really into playing soccer.

"The kids are very competitive, and they really want to win," he said.

Youth league soccer season is almost underway, and volunteers are still needed, Buchanan said.

"Even if you have never coached, still come out," Perry said.

For more information, contact Buchanan or Perry at 587-2757.

Netters sit Kuregian to satisfy NCAA and gain some fan support.

There will be one change in the lineup for the netters on Saturday. Karina Kuregian, who is ranked No. 20 in the nation, will sit out to satisfy NCAA requirements.

The NCAA allows student athletes to compete in only 25 matches per season. Because she qualified for the Rolex Indoor Championships earlier this season, and K-State already had 25 matches scheduled, Kuregian will not play against Creighton in order to remain under the limit.

Having to move up from the No. 2 position to play in Kuregian's No. 1 singles spot doesn't have Meidell worried.

"I have good confidence in myself," Meidell said. "It won't be a problem for me psychologically to play No. 1."

The squad has had more than a week to rest after its last outing at the 5th Annual Coors Light Lady Lobo Invitational. The Cats fell to New Mexico and Texas Tech before beating Weber State on the final day of competition.

Despite the 1-2 record from the tournament, Bietau said he saw improvement from his team.

"I thought the whole team played better," Bietau said.

Huskers' quickness formidable foe for K-State hard and get it done."

K-State will need to come onto the floor strongly if it hopes to leave Lincoln with a win.

"Nebraska's quickness has always given everybody problems," Altman said. "They are the quickest team in the league and probably the fastest. I don't think anybody matches their quickness. Man-for-man, I don't think anybody matches their ability to run the floor."

"So, that obviously is a concern for us. It was in the first game, and, since they shot the ball so well (against KU), it probably becomes even more of a concern for us."

While Altman is preparing his team to take on Nebraska's Eric Piatkowski and Terrance Badgett, he is not slighting the abilities of the rest of the Cornhuskers.

"We have to be concerned about all their players," Altman said. "One thing Nebraska can do is score points. They are very offensive-minded, and all their guys are very comfortable shooting the ball."

"They are as good an offensive team as there is in the league. They can all score points. Defensively, it is a pretty big challenge for us — we've got to guard them all. Piatkowski is the one we need to start with, though," he said.

While the coaches and players are trying to concentrate on the most immediate games and not the ones in the future, as the season winds down, the slots available for the Big Dance are filling quickly.

"Three teams are in, and three teams are fighting to get in," Altman said.

Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma State will all be invited to play in the NCAA Tournament, and the selection committee will likely pick the fourth-place team from the Big Eight.

"Playing hard is the only way we are going to win," Beane said. "There is no other way."

Salaries double in 10 years

UCLA Anderson Graduate School of Management found salaries of women at the vice presidential level or above more than doubled to $187,000 in the past 10 years.

"Clearly, the glass ceiling has moved up, but we have not broken through it," Johnston said.

The U.S. Department of Labor's Glass Ceiling Commission told Labor Secretary Robert Reich that investigators in the department's Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs had found no evidence of discrimination in 36 Fortune 500 companies at or above the assistant vice presidential level.

"We are still fairly dumb," Leonard Biermann, OFCCP's acting director, told U.S. News & World Report. "We don't always see discrimination when it is right there before us."

The last main issue concerning women's workplace issues was the Family Leave Act, an act that makes it necessary for employers with 50 or more workers to provide up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave.

"The Family Leave Act breaks down barriers between family and work," Coyner said. "Workers don't have wives at home anymore."

Coyner said advances for women were difficult when Ronald Reagan and George Bush were in office.

"Clinton is not a revolution for women's problems," Coyner said. "But he won't stand in the way for change."

Roommates compete in college quiz bowl

SARAH HAPPEL

Four roommates will be feuding with other universities instead of themselves this weekend.

Camilla Forshay, Carrick Williams, Wesley Twombly and Paul Hough will be competing in the regional college bowl competition. It will start Friday at 7 p.m. and continue Saturday at 7 p.m. in the K-State Union.

The four have been friends for years, said Twombly, a senior in agricultural engineering and feed science and management.

"We met in the dorms," Twombly said. "We were always together at Goodnow. We spent a lot of time in Carrick's room because he had a single room."

"Nothing's really changed except now we all have our own showers," he said.

"I just got involved as an incidental thing. I just happened to be there when they needed an extra person."

Williams, senior in psychology and political science, said he and Hough, senior in architectural engineering, were both involved with knowledge bowl before college.

"Paul and I were in it in high school, and we joined up with two other people here," Williams said.

The students call their team Mostly Harmless.

"One of the things I really like is our name," Forshay, senior in psychology and French, said. "One moderator said, 'I don't think Mostly Harmless is mostly harmless.'"

Forshay, a 20-year-old from Overland Park and the only woman on the team, said the team takes college bowl seriously but has a lot of fun at the same time.

"Some people are really serious about it, but others aren't," she said. "We either have a victory dinner or a consolation dinner all the same."

The college bowl is a relaxed atmosphere, and the team isn't too competitive, Williams said.

Hough would rather go in calm because he said he tends to be less afraid of being wrong when the team gets behind.

The group said it hasn't actually had time to be nervous.

Hough and Twombly have had tests and papers to worry about, and Forshay and Williams have a wedding to plan. The two will be married June 11.

Although being on a team with a future spouse would give some people the jitters, Forshay said it doesn't really bother her.

"We're such good friends it doesn't matter," she said. "We're a real close and comfy team."

The group said the college bowl involves a lot of knowledge, but also a lot of luck.

"There was one question about adding six countries to the U.N. Security Council," he said.

"We just started naming countries off and got five out of six right."

"And the most impressive question we ever answered was when we had to name the six presidents, who have had more than one vice president. We actually got them all," Hough said.

The foursome finished third last year at regionals but is hoping for a first-place finish this year and a trip to nationals.

Friday's and Saturday's competition consists of two seven-minute rounds where a moderator asks a toss-up question for one person to answer. If the person gets it right, he or she gets a bonus question.

The bonus question can be discussed by the team and answered by the team captain.

"Regionals are a pool-play tournament," Williams said. "Twenty or so teams from colleges in Missouri, Oklahoma, Kansas and Nebraska will be coming."

"Some universities even have try-outs to get on the team, but we just go have fun for the weekend."

K-State, UFM offer self-defense classes

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Females of all ages have opportunities through K-State and the UFM to become trained in self-defense.

Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said the center offers a free women's self-defense course every month.

"We'll have two sections going for the rest of the semester," Davis said. "It consists of six one-hour sessions."

She said the sections for March and April have not started, and people who want to take the course should sign up as soon as possible.

This Saturday, UFM is offering a Sex Harassment Rape Prevention self-defense class for pre-teens and women.

Diana Tarver of Salina said she has been teaching the self-defense program for 10 years.

She started out in martial arts, but said she found many self-defense teachers thought martial arts was too long and complicated. Also, she said, females didn't feel secure learning it.

Tarver said she then started looking for a program that was more suitable, and she found the SHARP program, developed by Protect Training Inc., which trains SWAT teams and the Secret Service.

The pre-teen program is geared toward girl's pre-dating years, and it is only offered once a year because there isn't enough interest, Tarver said.

"It's a little shorter. It's hard for young women to focus for four hours," Tarver said. "We talk about what goes on at school — the teasing and bullying."

Teresa Weaver, education coordinator for UFM, said Tarver gives a pre-teen program in the afternoon and an adult program in the morning.

SELF-DEFENSE

The UFM self defense classes will be held at 5 p.m. on Tuesday, March 1; Thursday, March 3; Tuesday, March 8; Thursday, March 10; Tuesday, March 15 and Thursday, March 17 in Holton 206. For more information, contact Judy Davis at 532-6444. Pre-teen class are at 1 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 25 in the UFM building at 12th and Thurston streets. For more information, contact Linda Teener at 532-8763.

TED KADAU JR./Collegian

Several slots remain in the pre-teen class. All of the 30 slots in the women's class are full, but it is taught every semester.

Tarver said she feels good when females leave the self-defense classes feeling confident.

"It really works," Tarver said. "It's effective, and it doesn't take tons of training."

RODNEY KING CASE

Donations sought by convicted officer

Koon seeks money, says he was a scapegoat

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Even from his prison cell, Sgt. Stacey C. Koon is going after Rodney King.

In a letter-writing campaign seeking vindication and money, Koon warns that unless his conviction is overturned, "neither you nor your family will be safe from the likes of hardened criminals like Rodney King."

Koon and three other officers, all white, beat King, a black motorist, after a traffic stop in 1991. All four policemen were acquitted of state charges.

Koon and Officer Laurence Powell were convicted last year in federal court of violating King's civil rights.

Koon is serving a 30-month prison sentence.

Earlier this month, a police disciplinary panel ruled that Koon should be fired.

In the four-page letter, Koon portrays himself as a political scapegoat of black radicals and self-serving liberal politicians. He calls King a muscle-bound, 6-foot-4-inch brute and claims that Koon and Powell were sold out by weak politicians and a deceitful news media.

The letter asks for donations between $20 and $1,000. Anyone who sends $30 or more is promised a free copy of Koon's book, "Presumed Guilty," which sells for $22.95. For a $50 contribution, Koon says he'll try to autograph the book.

Koon said he needs the money for legal appeals, as well as to feed, educate and clothe each of his five children.

The mass mailing campaign was handled by a direct-mail distributor who bought mailing lists from magazines, police officer organizations and other potentially sympathetic groups.

The letter is accompanied by excerpts from the book and a form on which to send a message to Koon's wife, Mary.

'Trench Wearer' defends vanity

Dear Cassandra,

This is a response to a letter I read in last Thursday's issue from Trench Wearer, because I think it may be about me. I feel I need to defend myself a little because I match the description.

You said this trenchcoat man has a confident attitude because he is most likely extremely vain. Well, if simply knowing that you have been blessed with good looks makes you vain, then so be it; I am a vain person. But it is only because I have received compliments about my looks. I can't look in the mirror and tell if I am handsome, because I don't really know what makes men attractive. Secondly, I have seen this face every day of my life. It took me until just this past year to realize that my own sister is actually a very pretty girl. As for my "icy glance," I do like to play eye-contact games, but that's usually it.

By the way, Trench Wearer I am new to K-State this semester. I haven't met many people because I'm actually pretty quiet; so, feel free to say "hi" anytime.

Signed,
Trench Wearer

Dear Trench Wearer,

What is this — an advice column or the dating game? Why don't you two get together and talk? If you have trouble meeting each other, write me, and I will see to it that you find each other. Thanks are not necessary.

Comedian uses humor as outlet for message

JEFFREY BARRETT
Collegian

If you look closely at a Mercedes produced from the new plant in Alabama, you might see a dashboard with fur, a gun rack in the back and an inspection sticker from Kanisha and Bubba.

That's what Sapphira, a comedian who performed Thursday night in Union Station, said.

The 44-year-old comedian used race, gender and stories about growing up in the south to humor her audience.

She commented on how great it will be to have black and white hands working together to produce new Mercedeses with gun racks and fur.

Sapphira laughed as much as the audience did throughout her routine. At one point, while imitating a Patti Label performance, she kicked her shoes into the audience and started strolling around the stage, kicking her legs up.

Sapphira describes herself as very flamboyant. Before her show, she walked around in a large white bath robe with "Sapphira" scripted in red ink on it. Under the robe was a blue sequin dress.

Sapphira likes to be known as flamboyant. However, comedy is not the only reason she is at K-State.

She is pursuing her doctoral degree in theater through the Patricia Robert Harris fellowship.

Her dissertation title is "Women of color using the role of creative dramatics while enhancing the self esteem of women of color in the community."

"There are no black women faculty in the theater department, so I thought K-State might be the place," Sapphira said.

While working on her doctoral degree, she pursues her pastimes — acting and comedy.

"I grew up on a stage," Sapphira said. "My father was a house musician at the Apollo Theater in New York while I was a kid."

Sapphira said her years as a child and teenager were spent backstage as well as on stage.

Despite her flamboyance and humor, Sapphira wanted to convey a message.

"I entertain to make you laugh, to make you think," Sapphira said. She wants people to believe in themselves, she said.

Sapphira also said she feels very strongly about excelling in school.

"I've always pushed myself academically," she said. "I just got a TV last year because I was so into school."

As far as a boyfriend, Sapphira has none.

"I wish the Lord would just send me a man who has a car, a job and is HIV negative," Sapphira said.

Died Pretty offers softer alternative sound

KIM GIFT
Collegian

Died Pretty's latest album, "Trace," is a refreshing addition to the alternative music scene.

The fourth full-length album by these veterans to the music business features songs from the softer side of alternative music.

The album starts off with the song "Harness Up (Soul's On Fire)." It begins with a soft guitar sound, as many of the songs on the album do. It had those stuck-in-your-head-forever lyrics. I found myself singing "My head, my heart, my soul is on fire," over and over again hours later.

The band's slower songs, such as "Dreamaway," "The Rivers" and "Seize Your Ways," let the listener just sit back and absorb the music.

Traffic blockers

Jake Sigel, senior in chemical engineering, carries a block of snow across Anderson Avenue as his roommate, Bill Kewley, Manhattan resident, waits in an igloo Thursday evening on the front lawn of their house. Sigel was making the blocks by filling a cooler with snow and packing it in. The two had been working on the igloo since Thursday afternoon, preparing it for Sigel to sleep in as a bet made by another roommate.

didn't think so, but we were."

As part of her major, she served two luncheons and two formal dinners at the college. Hood was also an active member of the Ionian Society, a literary club.

And Hood said she remembers college life well.

"All the girls in Home Economics had to wear white aprons. One day, we marched into the chapel with our aprons over our regular dresses to impress someone, I guess. But I don't think we impressed anyone."

The campus that Hood remembers is still around.

"I remember Calvin and Fairchild Hall. People used to come just to walk inside Anderson because it was a very old building."

"K-State wasn't a bad place then. I was sorry that I didn't get to stay at one of the boarding houses. I stayed at home. The kids in the boarding houses met more people."

However, Hood said mostly everyone knew each other.

Imagine a college setting with a high-school capacity.

"I knew everyone, except some of the boys," she said.

Although K-State was a lot different then, one thing never changes.

"Our great ambition was to beat KU!" Hood graduated in 1913.

"We were the Lucky Thirteens," she said. "We had our commencement in Nichols Auditorium. I went an extra year so I could take some more subjects."

After college, Helen got a job teaching Home Economics.

"I was a failure. I lasted two months as a teacher."

Hood blames the kids.

"I don't think I had any control over them," she said.

After Hood's brief teaching career, she took a job as a hack bookkeeper for a newspaper in Boulder, Colo.

She stayed in Boulder from 1920 to 1932.

"I remember meeting Cary Nation. She didn't look that fierce," she said.

After Boulder, Helen moved to Texas and worked for three years.

Then, she moved to Nevada where she met Ray Hood. They married in 1942 in Reno.

Hood said she never regretted not having kids.

The couple moved to Tonapah, Nev., in 1944 and lived there until Ray's death.

So, being a Manhattan native, Hood moved back.

Her younger brother, Joe Haines, has been a local businessman in Manhattan for many years.

In May, Hood will be celebrating her 100th birthday.

"I never thought anything about it," she said.

Project encourages senior involvement

Many of the volunteers for Project Re-Generate are a part of the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, she said.

Laurie Bishop, director of RSVP, said the older citizens have been willing to get involved in the Re-Generate project.

"We have about 550 volunteers, and about 40 of them are involved with this program," Bishop said. "I have one group to develop questions to ask at the quiz bowl and another group who will participate in answering those questions."

Re-Generate is targeting children who may not be at the top of the class, but not at the bottom either.

"The kids in the middle are the ones who really don't receive much attention in the classroom," she said. "We're looking for the kids that fall through the cracks."

Through its intergenerational matching, Project Re-Generate aims to benefit both age groups, Bishop said.

"We are mainly a military and college community. For the students, this means many of them don't have grandparents nearby because their families travel a lot," Bishop said. "They (the seniors) act as grandparents for them and vice-versa."

Skaters highlight Olympic feuding

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LILLEHAMMER, Norway — A gold medal makes people react differently. Italy's Manuela Di Centa shrugged off her medal win. Winning prompted her teammate, Deborah Compagnoni, to cry for a dead friend. America's Cathy Turner nearly had to hire a lawyer.

Instead of figure skaters, it was speedskaters at the heart of a controversy Thursday. Turner defended her Olympic gold in a bitterly disputed contest, boosting the U.S. medal count into double figures and bringing charges that she was one ugly American.

Turner, a former Ice Capades skater, trailed silver medalist Zhang Yanmei of China until they bumped late in the race. No harm, no foul, Turner said. The contact decided the race, Zhang said.

The officials agreed with Turner. An incensed Zhang stormed from the medal stand Thursday night, pitching a bouquet of flowers across the rink, after her protest was rejected. Zhang was then hugged by Canadian skater Nathalie Lambert, who called Turner brutal and blamed the American for her quarter-final fall.

"If there was something wrong, I would have been disqualified," said Turner, whose teammate, Amy Peterson, finished third.

Turner, who won the 500-meter short track speedskating at its Albertville debut, repeated her medal winning effort. She now has four Olympic medals — a gold and a relay bronze here, and a gold and a relay silver from 1992.

There was another bizarre event at figure skating Thursday. Two of the top five skaters in the women's competition, Oksana Baiul and Tanja Szevchenko, collided during practice. Baiul needed three stitches after spiking herself with her skate.

The twin medals boosted the U.S. medals count to 11, matching its highest Winter Games total ever on foreign soil. The six gold medals are the Americans' most since 1980 in Lake Placid, N.Y. They also have three silver and two bronze.

Before the Turner flap, the Olympics temporarily got back to basics. Italy's Manuela Di Centa staked her claim as queen of Lillehammer, and teammate Deborah Compagnoni swept to an emotional gold medal.

Alberto Tomba arrived with the nickname and the fanfare, but it's Di Centa who goes home with all the medals — two gold, two silver and one bronze — after her first in the women's 30-kilometer cross-country ski race.

She is tops among all athletes in Lillehammer with her medal collection, the undisputed leader, although Di Centa says it's no big deal.

"I don't feel like a queen," she said. "I feel like a cross-country skier."

Compagnoni, skiing one day after Tomba failed to defend his Olympic giant slalom crown, made it a two-gold medal day for the Italians with a victory in the giant slalom.

In Albertville, Compagnoni blew out her left knee in the giant slalom in a horrifying fall, an image she carried with her down the slopes. But after coming back to win in Lillehammer, she dedicated her victory to Ulrike Maier, the Austrian skier killed in a downhill race on Jan. 29.

"This was her race," said a sobbing Compagnoni, who regained her composure after about one minute.

The U.S. hockey team, which won't get a medal for the fourth straight Games, lost to the Czech Republic, 5-3, in a consolation game.

The U.S. plays again Saturday, with seventh place in the Olympic tournament on the line.

Student funds lost in reserves

Stacy Dalton, business senator, said.

"There is a huge reserve of direct student money that is unused," Dalton said.

"We aren't receiving interest on it — the state of Kansas is."

However, Zweimiller said the reserves are used to keep the cost of services low.

"We're eating away at the reserves as it is. Last year, we lost $45,000 from reserves for costs, and we are projected to lose $51,000 this year."

The possible decrease in the fee could be compensated by a corresponding charge for office visits, Paul Bridges, arts and sciences senator on the Finance committee, said.

A charge in office visits could keep some students from using the health center, though, Rachel Smith, arts and sciences senator, said.

"If we decrease the health fee, we violate the philosophy of privilege fees, and that is to provide students with a free service," Smith said.

"Many students can't afford health care if there is any cost at all."

Dalton said the purpose of the bill was not to oppose Lafene but to come to a compromise that would work for both students and Lafene.

"I would like to see students that use Lafene the most bear some more of the cost and to take the some of the burden of the fee from students that don't use Lafene," Dalton said.

Sawyer Brown plays with energy, comedy

BROOKE PATTERSON

Collegian
Energy was high, the performers had the audience dancing in the aisles, laughter erupted from time to time, and oh yeah, the music was good, too.

Sawyer Brown, Clay Walker and Diamond Rio came to town last night, and played a 8,500-ticket sell-out at Bramlage Coliseum.

Sawyer Brown gave K-State a high-energy, comedy-packed show, with incredible music and the use of some quirky antics.

Mark Miller and the boys, among shouts, wails and screams, made their way on stage to the theme of "Bonanza." Miller, known for his unusual taste in costuming, lived up to the standard. He appeared in a black hat, white T-Shirt, plaid vest, white tuxedo coat, baggy jeans and black boots. Before the show was completed, Miller had donned three different hats.

The opening song created a rush of energy as the group played "The Boys and Me." From that point on, the crowd was at Miller's disposal.

Miller, a great musician and entertainer, had the audience at his disposal. With only a simple grin, he moved the crowd into an uproar. With his humorous one-liners and easygoing style, he kept the crowd on its feet — and laughing. At times, he seemed more of a comedian. After playing some of the groups more popular songs, Miller said, "Hey Dorothy, I do think we are back in Kansas."

Then, in an impression of a 1960s stoner he said, "We're goin' on a little trip and wondered if you'd like to come along."

The "Trip," done in riveting bluegrass/folk style included some music of the '60s.

On each side of the stage was a slipper slide, which Miller and lead guitarist Duncan Cameron used at many points. On the front of the stage was an escalator they used as a prop for dance moves and antics. Miller also danced, doing turns with kicks mixed in, and at times tried some hip hop moves. His energy is incredible and neverending. He is both spontaneous and charming.

In the midst of the encore, Miller donned a green John Deere hat and played. He then changed hats once again to play "Some Girls Do." Only then, the hat was a John Deere hat with ear flaps sticking straight out.

Miller said of the hat, "Some lady gave it to me in Boise — I've worn it at every concert since. She said, 'I know you probably won't use it.' I said, 'Are you kidding?' Elvis couldn't follow that hat."

Miller sometimes shared the spotlight with Cameron. The two would dance on the escalator and jump across stage together. Cameron said he loves to perform with Miller, but he doesn't attempt to keep up with him.

"The energy is contagious," he said. "Hopefully, I stay out of his way. That's my job."

All the members of Sawyer Brown said they thought the crowd was unbelievable.

"I give K-State a big four star on it all," Gregg "Hobie" Hubbard, keyboardist, said. "This crowd was on fire. It was a full house, and that's all we can ask for."

Although Sawyer Brown was the highlight of the show, opening act Clay Walker, with his dazzling looks, wide smile, sensuous dance moves and a smooth, sexy voice, also charmed the audience.

Eating out or dining in can be healthy, inexpensive

SERA L. TANK

Collegian
You're in a hurry to get to class, and you're starved. You could throw a sandwich together, grab an apple out of the refrigerator, or you could just grab a hamburger along the way.

If you have the money, you're likely to choose the hamburger.

The average American eats one out of every three meals away from home and spends almost half of every $1 earned toward food-service meals. Those meals include anything from beer at a bar, ordering pizza or eating at a restaurant, said Ann Marie de Jong, public affairs co-chair for the Kansas Dietetics Association.

"A lot of it is convenience," de Jong said. "People are looking for ways to save time, especially when school or work is the priority. They probably don't even realize how much they spend."

There are several other reasons students opt for restaurant food.

Amy Brennan, senior in apparel design, said when she goes out to eat, it isn't always for convenience.

"I like to spend time with my friends. It's a stress reliever. I like the atmosphere, and I like to get out of the house," Brennan said.

When people go out to eat, they don't necessarily eat a nutritious meal, de Jong said.

A helpful hint when eating out is to stay away from prepared salads like potato salad. She said the more basic the preparation of the food, the more nutritious the meal will be.

She also said to stay away from high-fat, greasy foods like French fries and hamburgers.

However, de Jong said, people shouldn't deprive themselves of foods they enjoy just because they may not be very healthy. Moderation is the key to a healthy diet, she said.

"I don't like to say that you should never eat something. Everything can be a part of a healthy diet, but students should try to stick with a low-fat, healthful diet whenever possible," she said.

Students also can eat healthy foods at home that are as inexpensive and convenient as ordering food, de Jong said.

"Most of the recipes that are out now contain less than eight ingredients and take less than 30 minutes to prepare," she said.

De Jong suggested pasta, sandwiches and fruit as fast, flavorful and nutritious meals and snacks students can eat at home.

"By cooking at home, you can control the amount of fat and nutrition that you are taking in," de Jong said.

Although she said healthy is the way to go, many students think healthy is too expensive and eat whatever they can afford.

"I'm not really a healthy eater," Randy Schwartz, junior in mechanical engineering, said. "I usually go for what is cheap, not healthy."

EATING OUT SMART

The average American eats one out of every three meals away from home and spends almost half of every $1 toward food-service meals.

- Don't deprive yourself of foods you enjoy. Moderation is the key.

HEALTH CONCERNS

STDs continue to plague students

RENEE MARTIN

Collegian

One night of passion can lead to a lifetime of infertility for students engaging in unprotected sex.

Nearly 12 million new cases of sexually transmitted diseases are diagnosed each year, with 8 million cases afflicting 18- to 25-year-olds.

Despite the overwhelming numbers, some students choose to ignore the looming threat of STDs, Cindy Burke, director of health education at Lafene Health Center, said.

"Most students are, in their eyes, invincible," she said. "They know about STDs, but I think they live in a state of oblivion that it won't happen to them."

To avoid becoming a statistic, students need to take responsibility for their actions, Burke said.

"If you are sexually active, always use a condom," she said. "However, they are not 100-percent effective. To be completely safe, abstain from sex until you are in a relationship that will be lasting."

People who ignore this warning risk contracting STDs that vary in their symptoms and treatments.

Chlamydia is currently the most common STD, with 4 million new cases diagnosed each year.

This bacterial disease is dangerous because people often don't realize they have it, Kathy Dickey, Riley County Health Department nursing supervisor, said.

"Chlamydia may be totally asymptomatic," she said. "If people do have symptoms, they can expect a clear, watery discharge, and females may have irregular periods or abdominal pain."

Other symptoms for women include pain during intercourse and the frequent urge to urinate. Both

Homosexuals seek full acceptance

The heightened visibility of homosexuals in politics and the entertainment industry has prompted the media to label this decade the "Gay Nineties."

Two local women said they think homosexuals are making progress, but they still have a long way to go before gaining the acceptance they want.

In January 1993, President Bill Clinton, who received an estimated 90 percent of the homosexual vote, directed the Department of Defense to stop asking recruits about their sexual orientation, implementing the "don't ask, don't tell" policy.

Many gay-rights activists said Clinton didn't go far enough. They said homosexuals should have the same right to live openly with their partners as heterosexuals do.

Deb Taylor, instructor in the English department, said everyone she knew was dissatisfied with the policy. She said the problem with discrimination against gays and lesbians in the military was getting put aside in favor of a denial that homosexuals exist and serve in the armed forces.

"In that respect, I guess you can say Clinton has failed miserably," Taylor said.

On the other hand, Taylor said, homosexuals are helped by knowing that the president stood up and said people should not be discriminated against on the basis of their sexuality.

Eileen Meyer, a retail store manager, spent 11 years in the military. She said she doesn't think Clinton failed in his promises to the gay

City tour shows how Manhattan will grow

Manhattan residents saw how the city will grow in the next few years on the Great City Bus Tour Saturday.

The city and the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 sponsored the event to show residents where the city and school district will be building in the next few years.

A $25.8-million bond issue passed in November, which allows the district to build a new elementary school, two new middle schools and make improvements to other buildings.

Sherry Wright, USD 383 director of communications, said the sites for the new schools were chosen in areas that are expected to grow.

"We are building schools in communities that are about to be," she said.

One middle school will be built in northeast Manhattan between Walters Drive and Marlatt Avenue. The other middle school will be built in northwest Manhattan, west of Browning Avenue.

Each school will cost about $7 million.

Wright said the school district is building on two of the 40-acre sites that were not under water during the flood of '93.

She said the sites give the schools room to grow.

Each school will have room for about 600 students and, with expansion, could eventually accommodate up to 900 students.

There will also be room on the land to build football, soccer and baseball fields on the middle-school sites.

In its effort to relieve overcrowding in the school dents will begin using the old middle school when the new middle schools are completed in fall 1996.

MOTHER KILLS HERSELF AFTER SLAYING 2 CHILDREN

PHILADELPHIA — A corrections officer telephoned her estranged husband and said she was going to kill their three children and commit suicide — and then began while he was still on the phone.

The husband called police after he heard a gunshot, said Philadelphia police representative Cpl. Joseph McQue.

Carmen Shahiyd killed her 15-year-old son, Theodore, and wounded her 9-year-old son, Mashi, with a rifle, McQue said.

Investigators said they believe the rifle jammed, and Shahiyd then used a .25-caliber handgun to kill her 8-year-old daughter, Tya, and herself.

"She called him and told him she was going to kill her children and then herself. Then, he heard a gunshot," McQue said. "It's like she went insane."

Shahiyd and Theodore were dead at the scene. Tya was pronounced dead from gunshot wounds to the chest at Temple University Hospital, said nursing supervisor Karen Steinke.

Mashi was in critical condition at St. Christopher's Hospital for Children, said hospital representative Linda Van Winkle.

TRAGEDY WITNESS TO PUSH CODE

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — The memory of twisted metal, broken glass and mangled bodies at the Hyatt Regency Crown Center in Kansas City, Mo., is something Rep. Bill Boucher, D-Kansas City, can never put out of his mind.

Those memories from 1981, when 114 people died and 200 others were injured, convinced him Missouri needs a statewide building code.

He's pushing such a code this session. Boucher said Missouri is one of seven states that have no statewide model code for structural safety.

Boucher was witness to the tragedy on July 17, 1981, when two 120-foot skywalks came crashing down on participants at a tea dance.

With his bill, cities and counties without a building code would have to adopt a nationally recognized code and enforce it themselves. Those already with a nationally recognized code would be exempt from the bill.

FORT RILEY BASE BEING CONSIDERED IN REDUCTIONS

FORT RILEY — Fort Riley may be facing its most serious threat since 1855, when cholera decimated the labor force that was building this historic cavalry post.

Civilian and military officials are dismissing as speculation a published report this week that the fort's 1st Infantry Division — the Big Red One — is among two divisions likely to be eliminated as part of military force reductions.

The Army is planning to cut back to 10 active-duty combat divisions following the Bottom-Up Review conducted by former Secretary of Defense Les Aspin. During much of the 1980s, the Army maintained 18 divisions, and as recently as three years ago, it still had 16. Since the end of the Gulf War, the Army has cut back from 933,000 troops to its current level of about 570,000. The Army now is down to 13 divisions on its way to meeting the previous target of 12 established in the Base Force plan developed by Gen. Colin Powell and approved by former President Bush.

The Army will reach that target this summer, a year ahead of schedule, when the 8th Infantry Division in Alaska is scheduled to be deactivated, Army representative Harvey Peritt, in Washington, said.

Construction of island in the works

Pedestrians crossing Manhattan Avenue may get assistance

TAWNYA ERNST

Collegian

K-State and the city of Manhattan are taking steps to provide for the construction of a pedestrian island at Manhattan Avenue and Vattier Street this summer.

The construction is in response to student concerns about pedestrian safety while crossing Manhattan Avenue, Jerry Carter, University architecture facilities planning director, said.

"We are working with the city to be able to get people across as safely as possible," he said.

A pedestrian count study by the city in September found that the intersection at Vattier Street and Manhattan Avenue would be the best place to put in a pedestrian island.

The city is going to widen Manhattan Avenue in order to provide an island and another left turn lane of traffic on Manhattan Avenue onto Vattier, Jack Messer, assistant director for engineering of Manhattan, said.

The University would deal with the removal and reconstruction of about 100 feet of the rock wall that runs along Manhattan Avenue and relocation of the sidewalk, Carter said.

The part of the wall that would be moved is that which is north of Vattier Street and Manhattan Avenue, Carter said. These changes are necessary to accommodate the wider road, he said.

With the widening of the road, a left turn lane for north-bound Manhattan Avenue traffic onto west-bound Vattier would be added.

However, Messer said the city was not intending to construct a protected left turn lane for south-bound Manhattan Avenue traffic onto east-bound Vattier.

Construction would begin sometime this summer, Messer said, and would probably be about a 60-day job, not taking into account the improvements the University would make. Preliminary cost estimates for the city's part in the improvements are about $60,000, Messer said.

Carter said the University construction probably wouldn't take more than a couple of months. The facilities staff has yet to get an estimate of what it will cost to move the wall, he said.

Veterinary student lands whale of a job

Brad Rosonke, fourth-year student in veterinary medicine, gives Buck, an injured black lab, a routine check-up. Rosonke will make the switch from land animals to sea animals when he leaves for Ohio to work at Sea World after graduation this spring.

MARK LEPPINGWELL
CollegianALIE BRESADOLA

Brad Rosonke has something many students would be envious of — a job waiting for him as soon as he graduates.

Not to mention the job is at Sea World.

Working with marine life wasn't always in the cards for him, Rosonke, senior in veterinary medicine, said.

"About five years ago, I went to visit my uncle in San Diego," he said. "I got a job at Sea World with park operations doing janitorial work, and I met the vets there. I wanted to help rehabilitate the beached animals."

During an externship at Sea World of Ohio, he was told about the opportunity to work there.

"They like to hire within," he said. "They knew I had experience at the San Diego Sea World and liked the background I had. After I was accepted to vet school, I just applied."

In addition to his externship in Ohio, Rosonke also had externships at the Oregon Coast Aquarium and at the Shedd Aquarium in Chicago, which is known for its fish and sharks.

Rosonke helps rehabilitate beached animals — such as sea lions, Harbor seals and walrus — for about two months. In San Diego, once the animal can survive on its own, it is released into the waters near the Coronado Islands by the Mexican border.

"It is really rewarding to see the animal swim off," he said. "Some of them are so hard to train because they get so used to being hand-fed. You could put a fish on its nose, and it still doesn't know it's food."

"It's hard work and can be frustrating, so it's great to see them swim off, but we don't really know how many survive," Rosonke said. "There are a lot of sharks in that area."

On the other hand, some of the animals are very easy to work with.

"The dolphins are very good at recognizing you," he said. "They like to have fun with the tours, too. When a tour comes by, the dolphins will splash them and then look up to see where they got the crowd. They love to get a reaction out of people."

The sea lions are a bit more difficult to work with. Rosonke said the common misconception about them is that people think they are cute and cuddly.

"They're not aggressive, but they do bite," he said. "I have a big gouge on my leg from one of them."

Rosonke has had many different experiences with marine life. He's seen everything from life to death.

Before a show in San Diego, two killer whales were "raking" each other with their teeth for dominance. One swung its tail and broke the other's jaw.

"We didn't know what was going on at first," Rosonke said. "All we saw was blood, and there were people screaming and kids crying. The whale hemorrhaged to death."

"It was good to see from a vet's standpoint, but it was bad to watch."

But two years later, he saw something wonderful — the birth of a killer whale.

Killer whales have always been popular, and they have been even more so following last summer's whale movie, "Free Willy."

"That whale has a lot of problems," Rosonke said of the film's star. He couldn't say what problems, but he said the whale has many diseases and lives in a tiny tank that hasn't always had chilled water.

Rosonke said he thought the movie made a good impression overall for Sea World and marine life, but that it was not a realistic portrayal of life in captivity.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

Drop PE for PC requirement

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Everyone from embalmers to guidance counselors needs computer knowledge.

Here's a radical curriculum change for the Diversity/Overlay Committee and the General Education Project to mull over:

Kill the physical-education requirement K-State students have to take and substitute a requirement that will prepare students for the real world — a computer-science course.

Let's be realistic. How many potential employers are going to conclude an interview by saying, "By the way, how many sit-ups can you do per minute?"

Go to any career workshop, and you'll hear how important computer skills are in just about any field. Everyone from embalmers to guidance counselors needs computer knowledge.

Physical fitness is also important, but how many students have missed the cereal commercials, Nike™ ads and infomercials that promote less fat and more exercise for good health?

Recreational Services estimates more than 2,000 students visit Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex every day. And most residence halls have some kind of exercise equipment.

Students who have good eating and exercise habits already do not need Principles of Physical Fitness. Students who don't will probably not have their lives changed by a graduate teaching assistant wielding the spreading calipers.

It is the University's mission to produce a well-rounded student. But there's little point in paying for a college education when students can't find jobs after college.

Since universities have taken over a large part of preparing people for careers, which used to be done by training programs and apprenticeships, they ought to worry more about students' qualifications and less about exercise regimens.

Perhaps the University could restructure the kinesiology department as it has done to so many others and train the GTAs now teaching Principles of Physical Fitness to program computerized exercise equipment.

Reality in the 1990s calls for more PC and less PE.

Pride a handy container for hate

There are lots of different ways to say you hate someone, especially when you want your hate to be an accepted social institution.

My friend Lucy surprised me by not using any euphemisms. She just came out and said it: "I hate the Irish."

I was kind of surprised. It's not often you hear comments as unsubtle as that.

"Gee, Lucy," I said, "you hate all Irish? Why is that?"

"Their people killed my people," she said. Lucy comes from a predominantly Scottish background, but her family has been in the Midwest, specifically Wichita, for three generations.

I asked her if she'd ever seen an Irish person kill a Scottish person.

"Nope, but it happened a lot."

And she holds a grudge, I guess. Lucy's parents are far more racist than Lucy. If you visit their house, you can't smoke, you can't wear shoes and you can't be black.

It is amazing Lucy is as reasonable as she is, considering her upbringing. She doesn't hate blacks, as her parents do.

But she is riddled with these basic assumptions about life that she has never had questioned until recently. Like many of us, she is a caricature of her parents.

She's been brought up to look down on anyone who isn't a white, Calvinist, Anglo-American and to hate whole groups of people for things that individuals did a long, long time ago.

My conversations with Lucy have led me to an unpleasant conclusion: Those who remember history are doomed to repeat it.

Like everyone else, I was told in junior high that those who forget history are doomed to repeat it, and that may be true. But there isn't a whole lot of percentage in remembering some things, either.

For example, let's look at the current war in Europe. The warring factions are people who have been at odds for a long time. Thrown together in what became Yugoslavia, these different peoples did not get along. There were feuds, wars, terroristic attacks — the whole shebang.

Then, when the Communists took over, they made no official recognition of racial or religious differences. As far as the government was concerned, they were no longer Serbs, Croats, etc... They were henceforth all Yugoslavians.

The people remembered, though, even though the government officially forgot.

And now, free to hack out their own destinies again, old feuds are revived. The hate was passed down through 1-1/2 generations, to flare up again in modern Europe.

The people wouldn't relinquish their history and are at war again.

A lot of people think it is very important to their personal identities to have a strong identification with their race and heritage.

I have no such identification. I know vaguely where my family came from, but I really don't care.

Perhaps I'm missing out on what Lucy calls "pride," a pride she is planning on passing along to her children. I don't feel as if I'm missing anything, but who knows?

What I do know is that Lucy's "pride" is a handy container for hate. Neither Lucy nor her parents have ever been maligned by an Irish person, and even if they had, the rest of the Irish aren't going to take on the guilt for that action.

But Lucy, and probably her children, will continue to hate the Irish as part of their Protestant, Scottish pride.

Eventually, I lied and told Lucy I'm half-Irish. I asked her if she hated half of me.

"Oh, I've known you for a long time. Of course I don't hate you."

Of course.

Not all women call abortion positive, as Collegian suggests

Dear Editor,

"Abortion repeals positive step for women in '93." This title of a story printed in the Feb. 24 issue of the Collegian infuriates me.

How dare the Collegian make such a blanket statement that abortion repeals are a positive step for all women! In this story, the abortion repeals mentioned are a positive step in the minds of pro-choicers and pro-choicers only — certainly not for women in general (as suggested by the title) and most definitely not for the aborted females.

It concerns me not what these people consider a positive step toward their cause, just as long as you don't try to associate it as positive for me just because I am a woman.

► HEALTH CARE

British system ahead of U.S., despite its drawbacks

Dear Editor,

I grew up in the British health-care system. Contrary to the picture Ms. Burtness painted, this is possible. I lived through the prenatal care in which allegedly one cannot have confidence, and I believe I am a proud statistic in an infant-mortality rate lower than that of the United States. (Perhaps the world's greatest health-care system has a few loopholes? But then it does provide "clean, colorful offices").

Ms. Burtness is right: Making sure everyone has access to health care does put an incredible burden on the system. This could be improved by reducing the percentage of the population the system serves. I wonder, should the British exclude the poor or deny access to public facilities to anyone with a savings account who could afford to pay elsewhere?

She's also right, there is a lot of waiting. Treatment is not instant if the condition is not life-threatening. You won't get your tonsils out tomorrow, I'm afraid. However, inconvenience seems a small price to pay for universal access with no hidden strings. If you are impatient or simply want to have it done tomorrow, you can always have private health insurance, which is much cheaper than here.

In fact, Ms. Burtness' health care was not free. It was paid for by the taxpayers of the United Kingdom. They do this on the principle that good health care is a privilege that in an affluent society should be extended to all irrespective of economic status or nationality.

► MICHAEL JORDAN

Give Mike a break; he's just following his dreams

Dear Editor,

I have a few comments in response to Nicole Poell's column "His Airness can shoot the hoops, but he can't hit the ball past the fence."

I have never been so angry in my life as I was when I read your column. Who are you to judge Michael Jordan when you've never been in his situation?

What do you know about his goals? Have you ever read his book or talked with him? I have lived in Chicago all my life and grew up with Jordan and the Bulls. Even though I am a woman, Jordan has been an important role model in my life. Jordan is an excellent athlete. He reached all his goals in basketball, and now he wants to try something different.

I have met two types of people at K-State. The first type likes the Bulls only because Jordan was on the team. The second hates Jordan because he is so good.

If a great athlete succeeds in one sport, doesn't he deserve a fair shot at another? Or is it just all the "unknown farm boys" who deserve the chance?

► DEATH PENALTY

I would be that someone who kills if it meant more safety

Dear Editor,

Wednesday, I read Lola Shrimplin's column on the death penalty. I personally hope Kansas does reinstate capital punishment.

She brought up the question of what type of capital punishment Kansas would use. I don't think that's important, but my suggestion would be to inflict the same damages the criminal caused.

In the case of the conflict Ms. Shrimplin mentions, he should be shot and paralyzed, then killed after he has ample time to realize what his victims went through.

Now, some people will argue that the Constitution protects citizens from cruel and unusual punishment. Where was the Constitution when this woman was being kidnapped, raped and killed? Why should the Constitution protect the rights of criminals when it doesn't protect law-abiding citizens?

The column ended with "who will do the killing? I'm fine with it as long as it's someone else. How about you?" For a safer world, I would be willing to be that someone else.

Sexual harassment a belittling experience that strips victims of rights

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Just when you thought columnists never admit to doing wrong, I confess.

This goes back to when I was a high-school student in New Jersey. Things were a lot different in 1987. I was pretty smart about a lot of things but not about sexual harassment. I learned after I could not make amends.

When I was a junior, a young lady entered high school as a freshman. She hung around with us upperclassmen because we were always witty and never boring.

I took things too far.

This young lady had the fortune or fate of being both naive to the world and well-endowed. She was very prudish, and I, in my youthful cynicism, found that ridiculous.

I constantly told her that one day she would be a nymphomaniac and would finally put her gifts to good use. Many of the "prudes" I knew in high school had gone off to college only to learn human breeding practice. I was sure this young lady was next.

During the two years that followed, I constantly teased her about her large breasts. Because she laughed along with all of us, I felt there was no wrong done. If her feelings were being hurt by what I said or did, it was her responsibility to say so. While it is true every person is responsible for his or her own feelings and needs, I did not consider that I was not creating an environment conducive to such healthy communication.

The way I treated her became more and more disrespectful. Besides the language I used around her, she was the butt of all my jokes. When I wasn't teasing her about her beautiful but underused body, she was my fall girl.

Once I walked up behind her and kissed her as she turned around. Months later I grabbed her ponytail and again forcibly kissed her. Both of these acts were done in the cafeteria in front of all of our friends and their roaring amusement. In a similar public display I even fondled her.

If you find this shocking, pat yourself on the back. You have some decency and respect for other people. If you find this amusing, you have yet to learn the lessons I learned. Maybe you will now.

This was purely a case of attention-and-acceptance-seeking on both our parts. I wanted to be well-respected, and, paradoxically, the only way I felt I could achieve that was to behave disrespectfully toward someone else. She wanted our attention and acceptance so much she endured nearly anything.

It worked. I was always the life of the lunchroom, or at least our corner of it, and she was always welcome to be around us. We were accepted for our entertainment value.

Someone should have told us what I was doing wasn't just mean or obnoxious; I proudly knew that already. We needed to be told I was violating her civil rights. As a person who has always championed personal liberties, I would have been shaken to my foundation had I realized I was a hypocrite.

Some of you may wonder what harm there is in such lewd jest. After all, fun is fun, boys will be boys, and she did put up with it. That was my rationale. It was a convenient justification for doing what my good Hoosier mother would have washed my mouth out with soap for had she known about it. I knew better; I just didn't know best.

Indeed, I think there really was some harm from what I did. The summer between graduation and college — for her, the summer between her sophomore and junior years — there was a huge shift in her behavior. While she and I never had intimate relations (nor did I want to), she began to have sex with a guy in our clique.

She was very glad to tell all of us about it. In her desperate attempt to clinch our acceptance before we all went off to college, she used her last ace card — her body. She eventually had sex with many of my friends. All she did was make herself seem cheap to us (and herself) and make me a prophet.

A prophet? Surely a person who wasn't smart enough to know what sexual harassment was couldn't predict the future. No, self-fulfilling prophecy is what this was. At an impressionable age I told her she would be a slut, and I abused her until it came true.

Leave this column with a greater awareness of the effect our behaviors have on each other. Mine were overt; hers were passive.

We men need to once again treat women how we treat our mothers, and women must have no tolerance for disrespect from others.

And, for what it's worth, I'm sorry.

DEAR CASSIE,

Lefty feels left out in righty world

Dear Cassandra,

I know you've received several letters about discrimination, and I'm sure you're tired of these complaints, but I'm writing about a different discrimination.

I'm left-handed, and I know other lefties can relate to my complaint. I just transferred to K-State at semester, and although I enjoy it here, I cannot believe the classrooms are not equipped with lefty desks. In all my classes, I'm forced to sit in desks designed for right-handed individuals. I must either turn myself completely sideways to use the desks or transform my left leg into a desktop, which makes my leg go to sleep.

With all the emphasis on equality in America, why not accommodate for us lefties? There are more of us than people think.

Sincerely,
Lefty in a Right-Handed World

Dear Lefty,

I feel your pain. Most items are not designed with left-handed people in mind. But unfortunately, there are much more serious matters lefties should be interested in.

I read a study several years ago stating that left-handed people also appear to die about five years sooner than right-handed people. The report stated that left-handed people react wrongfully in accidents, swerving into traffic instead of away from it.

U.S. SETS MEDAL RECORD

At the conclusion of the 1994 Winter Olympic Games, the United States had won 13 medals: six golds, five silvers and two bronzes.

This is the highest medal count for the United States in the Winter Olympics. Bonnie Blair, with two golds, Dan Jansen, with one gold, and Tommy Moe, with one gold, were among the medal winners for the United States.

Cats fall to floor as D collapses

TREY JOHNSON
Collegian

LINCOLN, Neb. — Swept. By Nebraska.

The Wildcats lost, for the second time this season, to the Cornhuskers, this time an 86-77 loss in Lincoln, Neb., on Saturday.

The defense, Coach Dana Altman's major game component, did not make it on the bus up to Lincoln with the Cats.

"Defensively that was an embarrassment," Altman said. "It was not the effort we had in mind. Nebraska played a good game. They got done what they needed to do," he said.

"We scored enough points to win that game, but defensively, my gosh, I can't believe that was our team," he said.

The Cats hung close during the entire game and led by one point twice, early in the first half.

But in the end, they were unable to stop Nebraska from making the transition baskets. While the Huskers raced down the court off of missed shots by the Cats, K-State seemed stuck in its offensive posture, unable to move quick enough to halt the lay-up.

"I want to give them the credit because they played well, and they beat us — but I am so disappointed with our defensive effort right now that it is hard for me to think straight," Altman said.

"Continually watching them drive the ball to the basket — it was really disappointing," he said.

One of the Cats' key players did not play up to par.

Askia Jones had just 10 points and shot zero for eight from the three-point arc.

Zero for eight.

"That first half, he had a bunch of open shots, and he just didn't knock them down," Altman said. "The second half he didn't shoot quite as much, but the first half he had a lot of open looks, and he just wasn't shooting the ball."

The Cats ended up shooting just 44 percent. Jones' flat play both offensively and defensively hurt the Cats.

"I'm sure you all saw I was open the first half and even in the second half," Jones said. "All my shots were good shots, and there was no defense on me. I was missing shots left and right."

K-State has survived shooting slumps by Jones before and still garnered a win. The difference against the Huskers was the Cats' defensive breakdown.

"Our defense just broke down," Deryl Cunningham said. "Our team defense was terrible, and our man-to-man defense was terrible. We didn't have one person — including myself — that stepped up on defense, shut somebody down and took over defensively."

"We just never got tough and said, 'That's it. That's all they're getting.' They did the dirty work more than us," he said.

Cunningham had his ninth double-double of the season with 14 rebounds and 14 points.

"Our defense keeps us in the game," Cunningham said. "No matter how badly we played offensively this year, if we played defense, we've been right there to the end."

The loss drops the Cats to 17-9 overall and 4-8 in the Big Eight. With the win, Nebraska improves to 16-8 and 6-6.

Those numbers are becoming just academic at this point. What really matters, with the NCAA Tournament just a few weeks away, is whether the Cats can pull off a bid to the Big Dance.

In a year in which it looks as if the NCAA will take just the top four teams from the Big Eight, K-State is sitting in sixth. Nebraska, now firmly in fourth place, has dealt the Cats two defeats. It seems unlikely that the selection committee would pick K-State instead of Nebraska.

As the game in Lincoln ended, the fans began chanting "NIT, NIT, NIT," pointing their fingers toward the K-State bench, in reference to the National Invitational Tournament.

While the Cats have had their backs to the wall before, only two games remain in the regular season.

"Yeah, we know we need to win, and they needed to win — it is no big secret," Altman said. "Yeah, we are going to have to go and win two and make a lot happen in the tournament. The best we can do is sixth. We have Missouri at home and Iowa State on the road. And neither one of those is an easy game."

▲ Bruce Chubick holds the ball while Deryl Cunningham scrambles for it. Cunningham had his ninth double-double of the season in the 86-77 loss.

COLUMN

K-State on the ropes for NCAA

LINCOLN, Neb. — As the final minute ran down, the announcement of K-State's 1993-94 basketball fate rang out unanimously, made by more than 14,000 Nebraska fans.

"NIT, NIT, NIT."

With an 86-77 loss to the Cornhuskers, the Wildcats blew a chance to move into a three-way tie for fourth place in the Big Eight, and with it, they may have lost their last realistic chance of making the NCAA Tournament.

And a team that has prided itself in the past on outworking its opponent didn't show up in a must-win game.

"Defensively, that was an embarrassment," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "It wasn't the effort that we had in mind. We're a better defensive team than that."

But not on Saturday. The Nebraska offense, which caused the arena floor to vibrate like the approach of a herd of buffalo, ran by the Cats.

K-State gave up 10 buckets right around the basket in the second half, five of them on lay-ups. That was after giving up 12 buckets and six lay-ups in the first half.

"I'm just so disappointed with our defensive effort that it's hard for me to think straight," Altman said.

"We shot the ball well enough. We scored enough points to win that game, but defensively — my gosh, I just can't believe that was our team."

And the Cats' lack of effort left the players, who quietly filed out of the locker room 20 minutes later to sign autographs for Husker fans, running out of answers.

"We just didn't play defense," guard Anthony Beane said. "The reason why — I don't know."

"Before the game, our players had that look in their eye, and I thought we were going to come out and play hard."

But they didn't, especially on the defensive end.

"Nobody played one-on-one defense at all," center Deryl Cunningham said. "Nobody stood up and stopped anybody, and I'm including myself."

"It just seemed like they wanted it more than us today."

And that's a sad summarization for a team that had high expectations for this year, and rightfully so.

After a 7-7 record last season, K-State looked to be stronger this year after it seemingly plugged the holes left by graduation.

And with a senior-dominated squad, K-State's four-win Big Eight regular season can only be described in the collective mind as a massive underachievement.

With its win, Nebraska swept the season series from K-State, which it has done only one other time in the last 10 years.

"You would think that we'd play a little bit better against them," Cunningham said. "They're more our size, and you'd think that the match-ups would be a little better."

"But both times that they've played us, they've torn us apart. We've been saying that we have to win for the longest, but you can't win if you don't play hard."

And the Wildcats have just about run out of opportunities. Missouri is looking to complete its sweep of the Cats Wednesday night.

That will be followed by a trip to Iowa State, where the Cyclones have finally begun to right their own sinking ship.

And with a six-seed likely for K-State in the Big Eight Tournament in two weeks, the Wildcats are heading toward a death-draw of KU in the first round.

But the problem isn't the schedule or their seed — it has been the Cats all along.

Netters win against Creighton to even out loss to Louisiana State

CRAIG PINKERTON

The K-State women's tennis team picked up its first home victory of the season as it downed Creighton on Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

The Wildcats shut the Blue Jays out 9-0 to make up for a 6-3 loss at the hands of Louisiana State on Friday. The win on Saturday moved the Cats' record to 3-4 in the season.

Wildcat Coach Steve Bietau said he was happy with the progress his squad made during the weekend. "I think it was a productive weekend. In the Creighton match, I thought we did a good job of taking care of business," Bietau said.

Masha Meidell, who was playing in the No. 1 spot for the first time for K-State, made quick work of Nelly Pardo of LSU, winning 6-3, 6-1. On Saturday, Meidell defeated Cheryl Meyer of Creighton 6-2, 6-1.

In doubles, Meidell teamed up with Alexandra Thome to beat Meyer and Jean Fougereon of Creighton, but they fell to LSU's No. 1 doubles team of Cymantha Owen and Pardo 6-1, 6-4.

Thome picked up a hard-fought victory in the No. 2 spot on Saturday. The freshman from Costa Rica outlasted Leslie Whiting of Creighton to win 7-5, 7-5.

Martine Shrubsole came back from a three-set loss to Kristy Llewellyn of LSU to knock off Traci Miller of Creighton 3-6, 6-3, 6-4.

On Saturday, Shrubsole teamed up with Nicole Lagerstrom to beat Creighton's Kristen Baird and Elizabeth McBurney 6-2, 6-2 in doubles. This was the first match for Lagerstrom since recovering from an illness.

Karen Nicholson and Summer Ruckman were the only two netters to pick up a pair of singles wins during the weekend. On Saturday, the pair teamed up to beat Creighton's Whiting and Miller 6-2, 6-1 in the No. 2 doubles position.

A late addition to the roster on Friday, Brooke Brundidge played some of the best tennis of her collegiate career in the two matches.

Friday, Brundidge said she was pleased with her play despite falling to LSU's Margaret Sale in a hard-fought match, 6-7 (8-6), 6-2, 6-3.

"It really felt good to play a match that I knew counted for the whole team," Brundidge said.

The difference between the LSU match and the match against Creighton was obvious for freshman Karen Nicholson.

"Friday was a different match. I had ideas of what I wanted to do, but I wasn't clear," Nicholson said. "Today, I knew what I wanted to do."

After suffering a Friday afternoon blowout against the Arkansas Razorbacks, it looked like the Wildcat baseball team was in for a long weekend.

The Cats got rocked by the Hog hitters in Friday's contest, with the Razorbacks pounding out 21 hits to beat K-State 22-4.

Cats' starter Rob Merriman suffered his first loss of the season, giving up seven hits and eight runs in three and 1/3 innings pitched.

His relievers didn't fare much better, as David Johnson and Shane Hicks each allowed seven Razorback runs in the remaining innings.

Arkansas pitcher Scott Cunningham, now 1-1 on the year, pitched six solid innings as he allowed just four K-State hits before leaving the mound.

The Cats' Chris Hess and Scott Poepard were a few of the K-State batters to have any luck offensively, each going 2-for-2 at the plate.

K-State regrouped in time for Saturday's contest, as the Cats pulled off an 11-10 win for starter Jon Albrecht.

Albrecht, who moves to 2-0 on the year, lasted six innings while giving up just four Razorback runs.

With the Cats sitting on a comfortable 11-6 lead in the bottom of the ninth, Arkansas gave K-State reliever Kevin Wicker a scare, staging a four-run rally to fall just short of another victory.

K-State second baseman Poepard had another good day at the plate, knocking out three hits in six appearances at the plate.

Sophomore Dave Hendrix was 3-for-5 with three RBIs, while shortstop Todd Fereday had a 2-for-4 outing.

Despite outitting the Razorbacks 7-5 in Sunday's third and final game, the Cats managed just one run in the Hogs' 4-1 win.

Razorback southpaw Richie Workman picked up his first collegiate win, pitching seven strong innings while holding the Cats to three hits.

K-State starter Jon Oiseth made it through four innings, allowing two runs on two hits before Adam Novak and Eric Yanz split the relief duties. With the loss, Oiseth moves to 1-1 on the year.

Nebraska wins team titles

K-State athletes compete individually, score high marks

WESS HUDELSON

Nebraska swept both the men's and the women's team titles at the Big Eight Track and Field Championships on Saturday.

Double winners Kwani Stewart and Shanelle Porter led the women to their 15th straight title.

Combined with their 14-straight outdoor titles, the Nebraska women have won 29-straight conference titles.

The Nebraska women finished with 175 points. Kansas and Oklahoma tied for second with 88 points apiece.

"Shanelle's performance, far and away, was best of the meet," K-State Coach Cliff Rovelto said. "She was the outstanding performer of the meet as far as I'm concerned."

Porter captured conference titles in the 200-meter, the 400-meter and as a member of the Cornhuskers' mile-relay team.

K-State did not compete as a team in the meet because of NCAA sanctions. The sanctions were levied for illegally paying athletes.

K-State's Nicole Green was given the unenviable task of chasing Porter in the 200-meter and the 400-meter.

Green finished second in both races behind Porter, who is the defending NCAA 400-meter champion.

However, there was no shame in second. As of Saturday, Porter's and Green's times of 53.74 and 53.79 in the 400-meter ranked them first and second in the nation.

"Nicole really had a good meet," Rovelto said. "The times she has will easily qualify her for the national meet."

The only returning Big Eight Champion for the men was Travis Livingston in the 55-meter hurdles.

Livingston failed to defend his Big Eight title when he finished second behind Nebraska's Isaac Carson, who won the event in a time of 7.37 seconds.

K-State's high-jumping duo of Ed Broxterman and Itai Margalit tied for third in the high jump with leaps of 6 feet, 11 inches.

The event marked the first time this season in which Broxterman did not clear 7' or higher.

Margalit added a third-place finish in the triple jump with a jump of 49'7".

"Usually, the conference meet is all about scoring points for the team," Rovelto said.

"If that were the case for us this year, then Itai contributed more than anyone."

Perhaps the biggest surprise of the day came when Lesley Wells captured K-State's only Big Eight title in the 1,000-meter.

Rovelto said Wells ran an outstanding race, but her winning time of 2:55.02 was a full 10 seconds slower than the Big Eight record.

"I went into the race trying to think positive," Wells said. "I told myself I was as good as anyone else on the line, and there are no more excuses."

Linda Shea repeated her second-place performance from a year ago in the 600-meter with a time of 1:24.01.

The accomplishment was greater than it appears, Rovelto said, because the only time she runs on a track is at meets.

Due to a stress fracture in her lower leg, Shea does all of her training in a swimming pool.

"I felt all of the women competed very well at this meet," Rovelto said. Francis O'Neill placed third in the 3,000-meters with a time of 8:07.6.

However, his chances of qualifying for the NCAA Championships are uncertain, Rovelto said.

The top 12 runners in the nation will qualify for the meet. O'Neill has been ranked 11th for most of the season, Rovelto said.

Freshmen Karissa Owens and Angela Showalter both produced third-place finishes in their first conference championships.

"I was nervous, but not much more than usual," Showalter said.

"I felt like I ran well." Showalter's times in the preliminaries and the finals were her two fastest of the year.

Members of the team who are close to qualifying times and distances will have one more chance next Saturday at the Nebraska Last Chance Meet.

Rovelto said the team will know for sure who will participate in the NCAA Championships either next Sunday or Monday.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Cats chewed by Hawks

BRIAN ANDERSON

Nationally ranked Kansas used a 26-4 run late in the first half and early in the second half to beat K-State 65-54 Saturday night in Bramlage Coliseum.

The No. 13 Jayhawks (20-4, 11-3 in the Big Eight Conference) led 28-27 with 5:30 left in the first half when Kansas reeled off 13 points during the next three minutes. After a 41-28 halftime score, the Hawks started a 13-3 run in the second half.

Kansas coach Marian Washington said her team's pressing defense helped the Hawks open the game.

"I thought we had a lot of mistakes early, but they were shooting well," Washington said. "When I went to a player-to-player defense, we played better and forced them to rush their shots."

"I think we got into the passing lanes and rebounded well. We worked hard to push the ball, and we were able to get a couple quick baskets."

Shanele Stires, who led K-State with 17 points, said the Wildcats (12-13 overall, 5-9 in the conference) couldn't keep up with Kansas.

"We played into their style of game, and we hurried our shots," Stires said. "We know we are capable of stopping a run. Most of their shots were lay-ups, and that's a breakdown in defense, while we were shooting 18 to 20 feet away."

Kansas shot 12 of 18 from less than 10 feet from the hoop in the first half and eight of 13 in the second half.

Angela Aycock, who led the Hawks with 17 points, said she knew her team played well on both ends of the floor. Aycock was eight of 16 for the game.

"We ran the ball efficiently," Aycock said. "It was a good shooting night for the team. Our defense stepped up and made things happen for us."

"I was going through a zone. It doesn't happen that often."

Defensively, Aycock held Shawnda DeCamp to just three of 17 from the field and 14 points for the game.

"Her team set some hard picks on me," Aycock said. "Our quickness on defense recovered, and we were able to get a hand in her face."

Washington said her team worked to shut down DeCamp.

"We wanted DeCamp to work hard, though we trailed her in the first half," Washington said. "In the second half, she went to the hole and got a couple of fouls."

K-State coach Brian Agler said K-State's 31.5 percent shooting (17 of 54) hurt.

"I looked at the stat sheet, and I thought we were doing the things we needed to do, but we could not score," Agler said. "We definitely hit a drought."

Agler said stopping Kansas was difficult.

"They were out gambling and rushing our shots," Agler said. "They got the (defensive) rebounds, outlet the ball and had a fast break. We tried to slow them down, but we didn't make the shots."

"Plus, the fact we gave up 41 points in the first half put us into a hole."

Agler said his team does not fear playing the Jayhawks.

"They think they can beat KU. I think we can beat KU, and I hope to play them in the tournament," Agler said.

The time has finally arrived to settle the dispute about who is No. 1 in intramural basketball.

The intramural office has released the 1994 basketball tournament brackets, and the post-season tournament is underway.

All league winners from the six divisions — independent, fraternity, co-rec, residence halls, 6-foot and under and women — have advanced to the post-season tournament.

Playoffs started Sunday with the co-rec and independent divisions starting off the tournament. Action will continue daily until there is a winner, with the all-University final being 8 p.m., Monday, March 7, at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"The teams will play just about every day until it's over," Bryan Skinner, assistant intramural director, said. "If everything goes all right, we should be finished by next Monday."

The winners of the fraternity, residence halls, 6-foot and under and independents will advance to the all-University finals.

Entering the tournament, there appears to be several teams with a good chance of winning the all-University championship. The top-ranked team entering the tourney is Ehlo, a team from the independent division.

Tips for break heighten safety

RENEE MARTIN

Teaching students life-saving tips to ensure a safer spring break is the goal of Lafene Health Center's week-long promotion that begins today.

The events will follow the "It's Cool to be a Lifesaver" theme and encourage students to use positive health behaviors during spring break, March 21-27.

"The overall idea of the week is to help students learn behaviors that can be lifesaving to them or help them be a lifesaver to someone else," Kelley Fink, health educator, said.

"Many times, these measures are simple, but students don't think of them."

Some preventive measures include getting cars checked for problems, securing homes before leaving on trips, updating immunization records, drinking responsibly and practicing safe sex.

This is the fifth year Lafene has sponsored activities to promote a safer spring break.

Reita Currie, health educator, said this year's events will address more safety issues than in the past.

"We began the events to encourage students to practice safe sex over spring break," Currie said.

"We have gradually broadened our focus to include all health behaviors and not just focus on sexual behavior."

Traveling tips will be given to students, but the week's activities will also include information for those without travel plans.

"We are not just focusing on individuals who go away for spring break but also for those who stay home and work," Fink said.

"We are trying to inform everyone that there are alternatives to spending a night drinking alcohol."

"We are bringing in people from off campus and the community to come and promote safety," she said.

The representatives will include Pathfinder employees, Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students members, HIV/AIDS peer educa-

SAFETY WEEK

Lafene Health Center's week-long promotion of positive health behaviors begins today and lasts through Friday.

Monday and Tuesday tables will be set up in the K-State Union from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Pamphlets about positive health behaviors will be distributed and videos will be shown.

Wednesday-The beach party will take place from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in Union Plaza. There will be booths and games offered, and representatives from various off-campus organizations will provide safety tips.

That evening, a video about HIV and AIDS will be shown in the campus dining centers, and the HIV/AIDS peer educators will answer questions.

Wednesday and Thursday- Condomograms will be sold from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. in the campus dining centers. The condomograms include Lifesavers™ condom and information about sexually transmitted diseases. They cost 50 cents each.

tors and K-State Police officials. The organizations will provide students information about different safety issues.

Fink said she hopes the week's activities will raise student awareness about positive health behaviors.

"Sometimes, students get so caught up in the excitement of spring break that they don't realize the consequences of their actions," she said.

"We hope students will learn lessons this week so they don't have to learn the hard way."

Museum.

If you are picturing a stuffy old building filled with pictures, objects and people from another time, think again.

In April, Manhattan will have a children's museum with a concept different from one that holds historical records.

The Wonder Workshop, to be housed in the new Manhattan Arts Center, was designed to create multicultural and educational opportunities for children, adolescents and families through exhibits, activities and performances, according to information from the Manhattan Arts Council.

The museum is for the entire community, Richard Pitts, member of the Board of Directors for the Wonder Workshop, said.

From children to grandparents, Pitts said he would like to see everyone involved.

"We want to have a strong sense of community," he said.

The idea for the children's museum originated from several city residents, said Cindy Pitts, a Manhattan resident who has been with the program from the start.

She said no one person could take credit for the program and that it was a community-wide project.

"We're forever indebted to a lot of people, from the civic theater, the arts council and citizens in the community. A lot of people have been there with open arms even when we've made mistakes."

Plans for the workshop began to take shape in 1989, Richard Pitts said. During the next five years, it picked up speed. Staff and students at area schools have taken part to help bring the museum about, he said.

The theme of the museum is Columns of Culture. It will have a variety of hands-on exhibits, ranging from the subjects of science to multiculturalism, Cindy Pitts said.

Students have taken a large part in preparing for the museum, she said.

"A lot of the exhibits have been built by students," she said. "Students in a woodworking shop at Manhattan High School have helped out."

"We're really excited about the effort the kids have put forth," Richard Pitts said.

Not all the workshop programs will be located at the arts center.

One branch of the workshop is a drama group that explores current social issues through its performances.

The Growing Minds Drama Group has taken off at Amanda Arnold Elementary School. The group provides a chance for the students to get together and have fun — and to learn, as well.

The drama portion of the workshop has helped some students who have had trouble in school, Carol Grace, a parent of one of the students involved, said.

Grace helps choreograph the dances and skits.

"One of the important things they learn is self-esteem," Grace said. "It lets them have respect for themselves and for other people."

The program not only helps keep students out of trouble, but it also makes them want to go farther with education, she said.

The time she has spent with the students has been important to her, she said.

Gay stereotyping is prevalent

military community. "I have a lot of faith in him," Meyer said. "It's the first step. Hopefully, he'll get another chance to retake this issue."

Meyer is a 1987 distinguished military graduate from K-State's ROTC program. She served in the Persian Gulf War and earned many U.S. Army commendation medals and ribbons.

Meyer said most of the people she served with knew or suspected she was a lesbian, but they ignored the fact.

She said many of the commanders commented that they liked having lesbians in the Army because they were single, didn't have children, would go anywhere and were stronger than other women.

The sexism behind these stereotypes was prevalent in the Army, as was sexual harassment, said Meyer, who prosecuted one man and broke another's arm for harassing her.

She said she's never been sexually harassed by another woman.

She laughs when she hears testimony from men who say they would be afraid to shower or sit in a foxhole with homosexuals.

"There's a big misconception of how we treat each other," Meyer said. "It's not a big come-on all the time. It's not a big part of my life. It's just one part. I have other things on my mind."

Meyer, who left the Army after the Gulf War, said there were many homosexuals in the Army, and they were overlooked until the Army needed a reason to expel them.

Clinton has not only supported gay rights in the military but also recently sent a letter to the Gay and Lesbian Victory Fund supporting its battle against anti-gay initiatives like the one passed in Colorado in November 1992.

"These things are popping up everywhere," Taylor said. "People are trying very hard to make sure that gay people are discriminated against."

When people say homosexuals want special rights, not equal rights, it is the most offensive thing they can say, Taylor said.

"I don't need special rights," she said. "I don't need any sort of hand-out. I do not need to know that some person isn't going to discriminate against me."

Taylor said she thinks Fred Phelps and his anti-homosexual campaign is finally becoming a tired issue with people.

"I think the best thing people can do now is ignore him," she said. "I'm not saying he'll go away, but if we pay attention to him, we give him the floor to put forth his issue."

Taylor said homophobes like Phelps aren't the only kind out there.

"What I hate to see is when homophobic people see him, they go, 'See, I'm not as bad as he is.' But they'll still be homophobic. Don't think because you're not carrying a 'God hates Fags' sign that you're OK. Subtle discrimination can be even worse."

Taylor said she believes Christian religious organizations are responsible for perpetuating homophobia. Though many pastors are sympathetic and accepting of homosexuals, that acceptance does not always extend to the congregation, she said.

Gays and lesbians have spiritual needs like everyone else, Taylor said. She said she hates the fact that she'll never be able to go to a church in Manhattan.

"I have so many friends who want to go to church, and they have no place to go," she said.

Taylor said she thinks the future of eliminating homophobia lies in the education system. That is why she is helping to organize a bisexual, gay and lesbian conference, "Taking Pride in Our 10 Percent," March 5 in the K-State Union.

She said now is a good time to take advantage of the supportive attitude at K-State.

"On our campus, we have a president who I have heard is not judgemental. We have a very accepting student body president in Ed Skoog. It's good to know K-State cannot fire me because I'm gay."

Taylor said educating K-State about gays and lesbians is important because homosexuals need to be comfortable with their community.

"I don't want to move to the coast," she said. "I don't want to move to San Francisco. I want to live in Manhattan, and I want to live comfortably. I can do that if I have a community where sexual preference doesn't matter."

Taylor said she feels lucky that she can be comfortable being gay at K-State.

"No one does not talk to me here because I'm gay," she said. "I'll talk to really interesting people who see me as a human first, a woman second and gay third."

Ignoring STDs may lead to infertility.

men and women may experience pain or burning during urination. However, symptoms appear in less than 50 percent of the cases or are so mild that they often go unnoticed.

"It's not uncommon for us to diagnose students who didn't even know they had contracted the disease," Burke said.

"When students have an annual Pap smear, we routinely do tests to rule out all STDs because the symptoms can go undetected."

If left untreated, chlamydia can lead to scarring of the fallopian tubes, which causes infertility in women.

In men, the bacteria can affect the prostate gland or inflame the sperm ducts, which also leads to infertility.

Violence continues after mosque massacre

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israel's Cabinet ordered some Jewish extremists disarmed and up to 1,000 Palestinian prisoners freed in an effort Sunday to smother Arab fury over the Hebron mosque massacre.

The violence did not abate. At least three Palestinians died as clashes between Arabs and Israeli troops spread across the occupied lands and the Jewish state itself, leaving the Middle East peace process still in jeopardy.

PLO chairman Yasser Arafat said the Israeli government crackdown on Jewish extremists opposed to peace talks was hollow and superficial.

"These are empty decisions which have no relation with the seriousness of the crime or with the basis of resolving it," Arafat said from his headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia.

He said Israeli troops were involved in the bloodbath at the mosque Friday, a claim Israel has denied.

The government said a lone Jewish settler attacked the victims with an assault rifle while they prayed.

The Arab League voted Sunday night to ask the U.N. Security Council to investigate the massacre.

Its 22 members said the United States and Russia should provide protection for Palestinians in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank.

Despite criticisms of Israel's moves, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said he hoped talks with the Palestine Liberation Organization would resume.

In Tunis, Arafat assembled the PLO leadership Sunday to decide whether to respond to an invitation by President Clinton to resume peace talks in Washington on Wednesday. The Israelis have said they will go.

The Palestinians are demanding the removal of the 120,000 Jewish settlers in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, using the outcry over the massacre to force an issue Israel wants to defer until later in the peace process.

The army sealed off the occupied zones, with a population of 1 million Palestinians, for an indefinite period.

The military said the operation, launched late Saturday, was to prevent Arab attacks in Israel and anti-Arab attacks by Israelis.

But it blocked 80,000 Palestinians from their jobs in Israel.

Hundreds of young people also rioted in Jaffa, Nazareth and other Arab towns inside Israel, setting vehicles on fire and blocking streets.

Brady law limits gun sales; dealers experience difficulty

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The federal Brady law took effect Monday, turning firearms dealers in 32 states into a first line of defense to keep felons from buying handguns.

The dealers, who enjoyed brisk sales in anticipation, were quick to criticize the cost, complexity and comprehensiveness of newly required, expanded or reinforced background checks. In many cases, law enforcement authorities agreed the barrier is riddled with holes.

The mechanism varies around the country. Some gun dealers call a state agency toll-free, others have to pay, some will fax or mail in forms.

Some states, such as Colorado and South Carolina, are promising instant background checks — if state workers can keep up with the phone calls. The alternative is for gun shops to wait five days for a background check by the chief law enforcement official in the area where the buyer lives.

Gun dealers said Monday they lacked information about how to contact designated agencies outside their area.

"Determining the proper jurisdiction is a big problem for us. If we do it wrong, we violate the law," Bill Carter Sr., owner of Carter's Country gun stores in Houston, said.

"Once we make a sale to someone from another county we have to make calls and see who we send the forms to," said Brandy Johnson, owner of B&J Outfitters in Montgomery, Ala.

If the dealer gets a quick response, there's no need to wait five days, but the wait actually could be longer.

However it's done, Denver Woodcock, manager of Riley's Sport Shop and Shooting Range in Hooksett, N.H., doubts it will keep guns out of criminals' hands.

"Is a felon going to come in and identify himself with a driver's license? He'd have to be stupid," said Woodcock.

States that already have background checks report they have stopped thousands of criminals from getting guns.

The sales slowdown Monday was a sharp contrast with preceding weeks, when eager buyers lined up to beat the Brady law.

Legislation is pending in some state to bypass or improve upon the Brady law.

Purchase of handguns delayed due to increased complexities

AMY ZIEGLER

Gun dealers and pawn shops in Manhattan experienced life under the newly implemented Brady Bill on Monday.

The bill has increased the waiting period in Riley County from two to five days on the purchase of handguns.

"We've always had a two-day waiting period, and I don't think five days will make any difference," Don Morton, owner of Don Morton Sports, said.

The customers were required to complete one federal form before the bill, but with the Brady Bill in effect, they will be responsible for an additional form.

Gun dealers save the federal form and send it or fax it to the sheriff's department in the county where the purchaser lives.

"It's three times the amount of paperwork, and all it's doing is penalizing the honest citizen," Mike Weisbender, owner of Ole Mike Shooters Supply and Tackle, said. "I had to buy a fax machine to do business because a mail period could turn the five-day waiting period into 10 or 11 days."

The sheriff uses the information to do a background check on the individual by running the purchaser's name through the national crime information computer.

The dealer is notified by the sheriff's department within five working days to either permit or prohibit the sale of the handgun. If the dealer is not given permission to sell the handgun, the sheriff department is required by law to explain the reasons behind the decision based on the criminal record.

The dealer can waive the duration of the waiting period if the department clears the sale of the handgun in less than five days.

Riley County Police Department Director Alvin Johnson said two-thirds of the state is nowhere near being able to do a complete check.

"The Brady Bill assumes that every county and every state has connections to the NCIC (National Crime Information Center)," Johnson said.

"The bill may impact frequent crime in the metropolitan areas, but not the small communities."

"The Brady Bill will place an additional burden on the department without any increased staffing or funding. Whatever time we spend in enforcing the Brady Bill will give us less time to work with other things."

MOSQUE MASSACRE

Israeli appeal asks for return to talks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, his government reeling from Arab rage over the mosque massacre, appealed Monday for Arabs to return to peace talks.

As Rabin made the appeal, he rejected PLO demands to dismantle Jewish settlements.

Two Palestinians were killed in clashes with soldiers in the occupied territories Monday, bringing the Arab death toll since Friday to 64, including the 39 killed when a Jewish gunman opened fire at worshippers in a mosque in Hebron.

Israel on Sunday began cracking down on Jewish extremists and announced plans to release up to 1,000 Palestinian prisoners, but PLO chairman Yasser Arafat said those measures were not enough and demanded that all Jewish settlements in the occupied territories be eliminated.

In a speech to Israel's parliament, the Knesset, Rabin entreated the PLO to be less adamant.

"We can see the finish line. Another effort, some more goodwill by you, the Palestinians, and by us, and we will. There is no other way," he said.

"We invite you to return to the negotiating table because after the blood, the tears, perhaps the near future bears what we wanted and dreamed of so much — to put an end to 100 years of war and terror and to begin living like all other peoples," Rabin said.

But he declared that Israel will make no compromises on its security.

"This terrible murder in Hebron and the sentiments of mourning and sadness won't move us from our positions in principle which touch on the security of Israel and its citizens, including Jewish settlers," Rabin said.

Before Rabin's address, deputy foreign minister Yossi Beilin termed the Arab walkout as "worrisome."

"The next step should be the intervention of the Americans," he said.

WASHBURN UNIVERSITY

Senate prepares to consider Washburn inclusion bill

JULIE LONG
Collegian

Municipal universities could become obsolete if a bill bringing Washburn University into the Kansas Board of Regents is passed.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee introduced a bill Feb. 15 that would bring Washburn University into the regents system in three years.

Under the bill, the state board would assume control of the university July 1, 1997. The Washburn board would then serve as a liaison with the state board during a one-year transition period.

David Monical, executive assistant to Washburn President Hugh Thompson, said there were many benefits to bringing Washburn into the regents system.

"I think most of the benefits would accrue to the students and the state system as a whole," Monical said.

Pat Birkbeck, Washburn Student Association President, said, "For the most part, the student body is in favor of it."

The biggest benefit to the students is that tuition would be frozen, Birkbeck said.

"We would not see continued tuition increases," he said.

One of the biggest student concerns is the issue of graduate teaching assistants. The students are worried they will have GTAs teaching their classes, Monical said.

The students have been assured that won't happen. Some resident graduate programs may be phased out, he said.

"We'll leave that to ones who do it best — K-State and KU," Monical said.

He said he thought the Partnership for Excellence and the inclusion of Washburn would pass.

"I really think this is a really important session," Monical said. "I think there are some compelling arguments for the Legislature to look at."

BILL HEARINGS

The Senate Ways and Means Committee will have hearings on the Washburn bill at 11 a.m. today in Topeka.

"The state and its state universities are willing to accept financial responsibility for getting and keeping quality faculty. They should be commended for that," he said.

"If these things can be brought together, all of us will be much better off," Monical said.

Washburn will lose a little autonomy, but the advantages far outweigh that, Birkbeck said.

"We feel like this is the best opportunity and the best proposal to include Washburn into the regents system," he said. "I just think it's an excellent proposal."

Student Body President Ed Skoog said he had different feelings on the inclusion of Washburn into the regents system.

"As a Topekan, I think it's a good idea," he said. "It's overdue."

"As a student, I don't see what K-State has to do with it. As student body president, I see the tenuous relationship evolved by chance and opportunity," he said.

If it takes Washburn to get the partnership passed, it's good, Skoog said.

"Everyone knows it's inevitable," he said.

This proposal would make for a smooth transition and is the cheapest in the long run, Skoog said.

The Partnership for Excellence would use a combination of tuition increases and state tax money to improve pay for faculty salaries.

Bobbitt, Fisher distract attention from Clinton, Reno

BRIEFLY

J.R. PRATHER

The Amy Fishers of the world managed to upstage the Hillary Clintons in what was, for pop culture, the year of the woman.

The year of the woman in 1993, from a pop culture perspective, works on a sort of loony calendar.

It began with the airing of three versions of the Amy Fisher/Joey Buttafuoco story in the first week of January: her story, on NBC; his story, on CBS; and a reporter's hastily slapped-together version starring Drew Barrymore on ABC.

It ended on Jan. 6, 1994, with the assault on skater Nancy Kerrigan and the subsequent implication of rival-skater Tonya Harding.

In between was the long, hot summer of Lorena Bobbitt.

These women managed to squeeze out Attorney General Janet Reno, Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders and conceivably, Hillary Rodham Clinton as the most talked about women of 1993.

Did Amy have a love affair with Joey? Can she identify his testicular moles?

Was Lorena really insane when she maliciously wounded John Wayne Bobbitt? Did their domestic fracas and fricassee inspire a wave of crimes against genitalia? Or have victims just overcome their embarrassment enough to realize the commercial potential?

Did Tonya Harding know her ex-husband and bodyguard planned to bushwhack Nancy Kerrigan? Or was that crazy German who stabbed Monica Seles behind the whole thing, hoping Steffi Graf would take up ice skating?

The lukewarm speculations behind Clinton's role in Whitewater-gate pale in comparison.

The women who gained powerful positions in politics inadvertently earned some pop status themselves, however.

Reno is the "Woman Who Wasted Waco." Elders is the Condom Queen. Clinton cut her hair.

It would be a mistake if people thought the media-concocted "Year of the Woman" meant women could now be taken seriously. The media do not even take themselves seriously anymore.

Bill may deter AIDS testing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate Public Health and Welfare Committee narrowly voted Monday to report adversely a bill that would have required the reporting by name and address of those who test positive for HIV, the virus that carries AIDS.

Sen. Sandy Praeger, R-Lawrence, the committee chairwoman, led opposition to the bill and cast the vote that broke a 4-4 tie to adopt the motion, virtually killing the bill.

Praeger said she believes the bill probably would hinder and not help in the battle against AIDS because it would inhibit people from having themselves tested for the virus.

Praeger and some other committee members said until there is acceptance by the federal Centers for Disease Control of a method for identifying those who test positive for the virus by number rather than by name, reporting of voluntary AIDS testing results likely would be counterproductive.

"The fear is that if we have name identification, we won't get people to take the test," said Praeger. "The important thing is for the person to know personally they have it, then education comes into play."

She said those who test positive must be educated about how they can avoid infecting others.

By-name reporting "has a negative impact on people wanting to be tested, if they think there is any chance they'll be identified (publicly)," Praeger said.

AMERICAN JETS SHOOT DOWN 4 SERBIAN PLANES

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Two American F-16 fighter jets shot down four Bosnian Serb planes that violated the U.N. no-fly zone over Bosnia Monday and apparently tried to bomb a key munitions factory for Bosnia's Muslim-led government.

It was the first time warplanes flying under NATO command had fired on planes since the no-fly zone was declared in October 1992. It also marked the first military action by the alliance in its 44-year history.

The action came a week after Bosnian Serbs finished withdrawing their artillery from around Sarajevo under threat of NATO air attacks.

U.N. peacekeepers reported a "significant increase" in Serb sniper fire around the besieged city, raising concerns about Sarajevo's cease-fire.

Bosnian Serb officials denied their planes were in the air. But a Serb source confirmed four Serb aircraft were shot down.

The United Nations canceled relief flights into Sarajevo and most land convoys in Bosnia, apparently fearing retaliatory attacks by Bosnian Serb militiamen.

MENENDEZ LAWYERS QUESTIONABLE FOR RETRIAL

LOS ANGELES — The retrial of Erik and Lyle Menendez was left in limbo Monday as two defense lawyers asked to leave the case, and a judge postponed a decision on where the trial will be held.

Attorneys Jill Lansing and Michael Burt, representing Lyle Menendez, filed motions under seal asking to be relieved as his counsel in the second trial. They cited personal reasons.

Superior Court Judge Stanley Weisberg sent the case to Presiding Superior Court Judge Cecil Mills for a March 9 hearing on the attorney matters.

Weisberg also scheduled another hearing March 16 for setting of a trial date.

Erik Menendez, 23, and his brother Lyle, 26, were charged with murder in the slayings of their entertainment executive father, Jose, and mother, Kitty, in their Beverly Hills mansion on Aug. 20, 1989.

During the first trial, the brothers testified that they endured a lifetime of sexual and psychological abuse by their parents and killed only after they became convinced their parents planned to murder them.

PEACEKEEPING AUTHORITY UNCERTAIN IN BOSNIA

WASHINGTON — A positive reaction in Congress Monday to the air action over Bosnia masks a simmering debate about who has authority when U.S. forces fight for the United Nations.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said the downing of Serb jets by two U.S. fighters flying for NATO had strong congressional support. Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., said the shutdown "is indicative of the strong chain of command that we have established" through NATO.

But how that chain of command works if the U.S. involvement goes beyond a few warplanes is a question that has bothered the Clinton administration for the past year.

Lawmakers are demanding to know who will control U.S. forces in Bosnia, should foreign leaders order them into battle, and who is to be held responsible if things go wrong.

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said that President Bush "worked with the U.N. and NATO, but we were sort of first among equals." Now, he complained, "we're just one of the equals."

POLITICIANS FIGHT COLLEGE SPEAKER

TRENTON, N.J. — New Jersey's political establishment turned out in force Monday to denounce bigotry in anticipation of a speech by a controversial member of the Nation of Islam.

Khalid Abdul Muhammad, former national spokesman for the group, was invited to appear at Trenton State College on Monday, his first public speaking engagement in New Jersey since his Nov. 29 speech attacking Jews, Catholics, homosexuals and some black leaders.

Politicians from Republican Gov. Christie Whitman to Democratic U.S. Sen. Bill Bradley attended panel discussions, made speeches and attended prayer vigils to counter Muhammad's presence.

BOBBITT FREED FROM HOSPITAL

MANASSAS, Va. — A beaming Lorena Bobbitt was ruled no longer a threat and released after five weeks in a state mental hospital for cutting off her husband's penis.

Bobbitt was acquitted by reason of insanity Jan. 21 for mutilating her husband and ordered to undergo psychiatric evaluation.

At a news conference after the 25-minute hearing, Bobbitt also made a plea for battered women to get help.

"I realize there are many abused women in this country. I would like to in some way help them, encourage them to reach out for help. I would like them to call the closest hot line," she said.

Starting a business, CEO status of your own company by the age of 25, financial independence by the age of 30. Ah, the good life.

The majority of college students and college graduates will work for someone else. Yet, there are those students and graduates who make that brave roll of the dice to start their own company and be their own boss.

David Burchfield, 30, co-founder of The Little Apple Brewing Co. and former K-State graduate student, said he started

Statistics reveal Kansas in top 15 high-crime areas

TONYA FOSTER

Wint Winter, Republican candidate for attorney general, said Kansas is the 15th-most dangerous place to live in the United States.

"As I look around and see statistics in crime, it frightens me," Winter said. "Kansas has the worst change in murder rate in the United States."

"Three out of 10 of us has a relative who has been a victim of violence."

Winter, who is against the death penalty, said he does not believe in the attitudes from the 1960s and '70s that all criminals can be rehabilitated.

"For many people, we have to accept there is no cure," Winter said. "Targeting defenders, we have to capacitate rather than rehabilitate."

Winter said he thinks the break-up of the family is the cause of violence. He said society is raising a different generation. Complying with societal norms is a lost concept to the new generation.

"We need a full-court press to change policy clear across the board," Winter said. "The attorney general should lead in the change. If you like the way things are today, don't vote for me."

Winter said he is calling for more immediate consequences for juvenile offenders. He said he believes the Youth Center At Topeka should be the responsibility of the Department of Corrections rather than operated by social workers.

"With respect to juvenile defenders, we must try them as adults," Winter said. "We must try boot camp."

He said there must be a new attitude about child abuse and sex crimes in that the defenders must be made to pay.

"No dismissal, no diversion," Winter said. "Those people must be tagged."

Child abuse is a cowardly crime, he said. About 80 percent of the inmates in the penitentiary were abused as children, he said. This breeds violence.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Middle East a bloody mess

The leaders announcing they have signed a peace agreement doesn't do much to stop the senseless slaughter of innocent worshippers.

The Middle East has reclaimed its image of blood and carnage.

In the premature celebrations of peace talks between PLO leader Yasser Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, everyone seemed to forget some of the people who don't want the Palestinians to have autonomy.

The talks are again at a standstill because of a crazed gunman who entered a mosque in Hebron, killing 39 people.

The gunman, Baruch Goldstein, immigrated from America and became a follower of another American extremist, Rabbi Meir Kahane.

He was bludgeoned to death by Muslims after the attack.

Anyone who didn't see this coming long ago hasn't been watching what's been going on in the Middle East.

Among the threatening groups is the Kach movement, which is the militant movement founded by Rabbi Meir Kahane.

Kach members are threatened by the idea the Palestinians, who were shoved off their land when Israel was created, could be allowed to govern themselves, thereby becoming a threat to Israel.

It is essential the peace process go forward, but even more so that peace actually be brought to Israel and the occupied territories. The leaders announcing they have signed a peace agreement doesn't do much to stop the senseless slaughter of innocent worshippers.

Especially if the Palestinians carry through with their threat of revenge on the Israeli people.

The problem is the Israeli people as a whole didn't do this thing. The person who did is already dead.

With any hope, Rabin and Arafat will recognize attacks such as the one in Hebron are the work of militant minorities and not those of the majority, who do want peace in the bullet-riddled land.

Or else, all the goodwill gestures of a lasting peace will halt with one hate-filled gesture, ensuring that the fighting will go on for some time to come.

University split after plus/minus debate

K-State has its own version of the ongoing Clinton-Dole dispute.

Ours is just as intense a war of words, but it is between the students and faculty/administration over several issues.

Yes, I am aware there has always been tension between the student body and Anderson Hall, but recently, this tension reached a fever pitch over the plus/minus grading system and the faculty salary increases, namely the Partnership for Excellence plan.

Originally, Student Senate's Legislative Affairs Committee came out with a resolution to oppose the partnership. During the time the resolution was in Senate, you could hear the groaning and mumbling of the administration that if Senate came out against the partnership, it might not pass in the Kansas Legislature because it did not have the united support of the students and the administration.

The final vote on the resolution had 26 student senators voting yes, 26 student senators voting no, one faculty senator, who also votes in Student Senate as a faculty representative, voting no and the administration's senator voting no. The resolution failed by two votes, and this left several students bitter about the entire situation because the margin of victory was provided by the two non-student votes on Student Senate.

Offended by the new grading system, a student revolt was beginning. It was spearheaded by Student Senate's Academic Affairs Committee, which was told by members of Faculty Senate that if it got a petition going with enough student signatures, Faculty Senate would reconsider the plus/minus issue. So, they started a petition drive and within a month received about 4,000 signatures, or 20 percent of the student body — an incredible amount for a petition movement by anyone's standards.

Still, with 4,000 student signatures against the new grading system, a faculty member made a remark he didn't care if the opposition had 4,000 or 20,000 signatures; the plus/minus grading system was going into effect.

Fortunately, this statement proved to be wrong, and Faculty Senate agreed to revisit the plus/minus grading system.

Now, a new element was added to this situation. The partnership was once again in the spotlight because Gov. Joan Finney and the Kansas Board of Regents combined the partnership and Washburn University into one plan. Either both pass, or they both fail.

Adding Washburn to the plan angered several student senators, and they were beginning to reconsider their position on the partnership. Unfortunately, some members of the faculty said that because students were considering coming out against this plan, they were trying to blackmail the faculty. There were also several accusations of name-calling on both sides.

Eventually, we all have to think, who does run this University? Is it the students who it was set up to educate? Is it the administration? Or is it the faculty?

I think it is a combination of all three. And when one of them tries to leave one of the others out of a significant decision, that affects the entire campus. That's when friction, bitterness and hatred among them begins.

Which brings us to today. The plus/minus is back in a committee, with little hope of returning this year, and the Partnership for Excellence plan has a good chance of passing the Legislature.

In the end, both sides seem to have gotten what they wanted all along. The only casualty in the war of words seems to be the relationship between the students and the administration/faculty.

Vouchers not the answer to so-called education woes

Dear Editor,

I'd like to give a rebuttal to William McKeen's column on Feb. 25. First, McKeen states that since the turn of the century the government has had a monopoly on education. This is simply not true. American schools have always had significant local community involvement and competition from private schools.

As far as the deterioration of education in America, perhaps you should reread the articles you claim to have read in your column.

The two Kappan articles say nothing about how the voucher system would benefit American education. In fact, they were very much against them and their effect on education. So, did you really get your ideas from television?

The articles make reference to the Sandia Report. Sandia is a national laboratory associated with the Department of Energy. They performed a study on U.S. education in an effort to support former President Bush's America 2000 plan, which attempted to address the poor state of American education and its effect on lowering America's competitiveness overseas.

Sandia discovered that the truism you hear about American education are not true. We have one of the best educational systems in the world, period.

The wonderful aspect about American public schools is that we attempt to give everyone an education, rather than try to weed out the worst students before they attempt to go to college.

So, Mr. McKeen, while we're at it, let's privatize the military. After all, the best defense money can buy (we already have the best Congress money can buy). Perhaps, a company can give you more bang for the buck. Let's see their advertisements and then make a decision. While we're at it, let's privatize the police.

Our schools may not be perfect, but at least students learn in a more democratic environment than they will in a private school. As a nation, we face complex problems, and unlike television, there are no simple answers.

WORKPLACE

Sexual harassment charge misused at great cost

Dear Editor,

John Meirowsky's Feb. 25 article on sexual harassment and discrimination in the workplace left me wondering. Kelly Johnston and Sandra Coyner seem to think recent court rulings on sexual harassment should make it easier for women to come forward and prove incidents.

While I agree women and men should have no fear to come forward with grievances, the thought of applying individual court rulings to every case is a little unsettling.

The article cited a great example of the misuse of the sexual-harassment charge, Anita Hill's report of alleged sexual harassment by Clarence Thomas. This case was nothing more than a political witch hunt by the Democratic Party to keep a black conservative off the Supreme Court. This case reminds us that the accusation of harassment doesn't mean harassment took place.

There needs to be a set of procedures and requirements developed that businesses and individuals can follow in order to ensure both the accused and accuser are given a fair chance to present their case. Just ask 'man in Indiana whose 6-year-old child was suspended from school for sexual harassment by a teacher who observed the student kiss a classmate on the back of her head if this kid was given due process.

Six-year-olds don't even know the meaning of sexual harassment, and if 6-year-old affection is part of the definition, neither do I. It's time to take a step back and make sure we are proceeding into this delicate matter correctly and fairly.

Finally, two questions for Sandra Coyner. I am curious how Ronald Reagan and George Bush make it "difficult" for women to advance? And what "change" will Hillary, I mean Bill, Clinton not stand in the way for?

MUSLIM MASACRE

Killings by Jewish radical signify Muslim abuse

Dear Editor,

The Muslim community of Manhattan strongly condemns the killing perpetrated by a Jewish settler in the West Bank against Palestinians praying in the Al-Ibrahimi Mosque.

We are asking all the citizens of Manhattan and of the United States at large, everyone who has a human heart, to protest such acts of atrocity. Palestinians are humans, too, or are they being killed just because they are Muslims?

Muslims are American, Asian, African — they are of diverse nationalities and backgrounds.

Should anyone be killed just for what he or she believes in? Apparently, yes.

For the past few years, this has been a good enough reason to be killed. The examples are many: Bosnia-Herzegovina, Kashmir (India), Palestine. And this is perpetrated right in front of the eyes of the world. And what is being done? What?

The Muslim Community Association of Manhattan stands for human rights — all mankind deserves equal treatment. Everyone is free to choose what he or she believes in. No acts of aggression, whether physical, verbal or written, can be committed against any ethnic or religious group.

There is no other planet where one could dump an entire people or nation; so, let us be human and come to know each other to share our humanity and discuss our differences.

Emotions without the use of reason will only lead to more violence. Let us remember that we all are one human race.

PE vs. PC

Take a computer class, but don't drop PE requirement

Dear Editor,

After reading the editorial "Drop PE for PC requirement," I felt the urge to write.

Our bodies have a mental and a physical side, both of which we should try to improve. Most of us take 120-150 hours of college courses to improve mentally. Is it too much to ask to take a one-hour course to improve ourselves physically?

The fact that a physical-education class is mandatory may cause a few extremely out-of-shape students to take the class even though they normally wouldn't. In actuality, a few people may get nothing out of the class. However, I would hope a majority of students would have an open mind and make an attempt to improve themselves physically.

A few years down the road, after you've gained that freshman 15, you may wish to get fit but won't have the basic knowledge to get started on an exercise program — something PE 101 could have given you.

You stated that taking the personal computer course may help a student get a job. You're right — so, take it as an elective ... I did.

DEATH PENALTY

Comfy cells and color TV not enough punishment

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to Lola Shrimplin's column in which she says the death penalty is not logical. I personally believe the death penalty could help solve some of the crime problems in this country if reinstated.

But, I have another idea I think would cut crime. And if, like Ms. Shrimplin, you want criminals to suffer, then you got it.

Prisons are heated in the winter, air conditioned in the summer, quite spacious, equipped with color television, exercise facilities and libraries.

Please ... we are trying to make people not want to be in prisons. They're living better locked up than they could ever dream of in society.

I guess I would go along with life imprisonment if the prisons were tougher. They should be so bad that no one would ever want to come back after being in one.

Oh, that's right, we are a civilized society and should not do anything to hurt another person. Never mind many of the societies we call uncivilized have some of the lowest crime rates in the world.

Wake up, America! This so-called civilized point of view is not working. And when something does not work, you get something new.

History month gives opportunity to address women's interests

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Five events have been scheduled for National Women's History Month with the help of the Women's Resource Center and other University departments.

The center has tried to schedule events in observance of the month every year she has been on campus, Judy Davis, director of the center, said. The events begin today.

"I see the month as providing us an occasion to devote special time and energy to special women's issues," she said.

Some people have the luxury of addressing women's issues every day, but Women's History Month gives others the opportunity to set aside time to address the issues as well, she said.

"We hope it is invigorating, stimulating and, of course, educational," Davis said.

To start the month, Black Student Union is sponsoring Doretha Jordon, editor of the Kansas State Globe, today.

Dr. Anne Wigglesworth, a Manhattan physician, will speak

Thursday about politics in eastern Europe and how it affects women's lives.

Other topics, including women's adjustments to abortion, the value of women's narratives in criminal cases and the portrayal of sex crimes by the media, will be discussed throughout the month.

A production, "What About Black Womyn?" by Living the Dream Inc., will be March 17.

WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH

TUESDAY, MARCH 1

Doretha Jordon, editor of the Kansas State Globe, speaks on African-American women in the media at 7:30 p.m. in Union Little Theatre.

THURSDAY, MARCH 3

Dr. Anne Wigglesworth speaks on women as physicians and patients and women's health at noon in Union 206.

Johnson accepts dean position

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

K-State has a new dean of the College of Agriculture.

University officials announced Monday that Interim Dean Marc Johnson accepted the position as permanent dean.

Johnson served as interim dean for about 18 months, Gerry Posler, chair of the dean search committee and agronomy department head, said.

"Marc knows Kansas and the K-State system," Posler said. "People feel comfortable with the way things have been conducted in his role as interim dean."

Hiring someone already heavily involved in the system has its advantages, he said.

"An internal candidate can move quickly," Posler said.

"This kind of person knows the situation, knows the people involved and can make faster progress."

Johnson should be able to use his inside information to get his administration functioning quickly, Richard Hahn, head of the grain science and industry department, said.

"Marc is very aware of the status of the School of Agriculture, so he should be able to get things up and running quickly," Hahn said. "I find it a very positive development."

Johnson's strengths, besides his intimate knowledge of K-State his ability to delegate the appropriate amount of authority, his openness and his energy and enthusiasm, Posler said.

"You could say the same things about the other candidates," he said. "It was just a matter of degree."

Gun dealers say bill won't stop crime

The Brady Bill was designed to check a purchaser's history for mental deficiencies, dishonorable discharge from the military, renouncing citizenship, possession of drugs or conviction of a felony.

Johnson said the RCPD doesn't have the capability to do thorough background searches targeted by the implementation of the Brady Bill because of the scarcity of sources and lack of complete information.

"We can only do a limited criminal record check," Johnson said. "The majority of our records are limited to criminal matters that happened locally that we have recorded and added onto over the years."

Johnson said the Brady Bill has the potential to cut the crime rates only in big cities.

"I don't expect the Brady Bill to be of a great benefit to the Manhattan and Riley county communities," Johnson said. "There are many things under the Brady Bill that can't be done here."

The gun shop owners had different views about the effect of the bill on their sales.

Bruce Michal, owner of the Manhattan Pawn Shop, said the bill won't hurt his business as much as the local police department.

The bill won't solve the crime problem, he said, but does offer some advantages to the community.

"If the bill will save one person's life, it's probably worth it."

ESPY AWARDS GIVEN

Charles Barkley, Barry Bonds and Mario Lemieux each won two ESPYs Monday night at ESPN's second annual American Sports Awards show.

Barkley, Phoenix Suns' forward, won awards for NBA performer of the year and outstanding performance by an athlete. Bonds, San Francisco's outfielder and the NL's MVP, won awards for baseball and male athlete of the year. Lemieux, of the Pittsburgh Penguins, won NHL and comeback athlete of the year.

Cats to play No. 1 Shockers

"They're going to come in a little hungry since they have a little bad taste in their mouth. But so do we. We're anxious to get back into the fire."

DAVID CHADD
K-State assistant coach

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

Good news for the K-State baseball team — Wichita State can be beat.

The Shockers, ranked No. 1 by Collegiate Baseball, got jolted Sunday afternoon, losing to South Alabama, 8-4, in the championship game of the Coca-Cola Classic in Mobile, Ala.

Although K-State didn't necessarily shine this weekend either, dropping two of three games against Arkansas, the Cats are looking to step it up against the Shockers.

"Obviously, we didn't reach our expectations this weekend," said K-State assistant coach David Chadd, who played for the Shockers from 1989-91.

"We didn't play as well as we possibly could. We made a few mistakes, but that's the way you learn."

"I think the guys are anxious for the game. Wichita State is known for its baseball dynasty, and I hope our guys are looking forward to it. We just want to go out there and, hopefully, all the hard work we've been doing will pay off."

It'll take a lot of hard work to beat this Wichita State team. The Shockers, who finished runner-up in last year's College World Series, return 21 letter-winners, including all-America relief pitcher Jaime Bluma and second-team all-America Joey Jackson.

The Shockers opened their season with a 12-2 win against Northwestern University Saturday at the Alabama tournament, but they struggled offensively against the Jaguars in Sunday's contest.

The Shockers had only seven hits on the day, with two apiece coming from shortstop Jason Adams and first baseman Chris Anderson.

Lack of a sufficient offense may be one weakness the Cats could exploit, as Shocker coach Gene Stephenson lost two heavy hitters from last year's squad — Darren Dreifort and

K-STATE AT WSU

The K-State Wildcats take on the Wichita State Shockers at 7 tonight in Wichita.

The Shockers will then travel to Manhattan Wednesday to play the Cats at Frank Myers Field at 7 p.m.

Toby Smith.

Taking a look at the Cats' lineup, senior third baseman Jay Kopriwa has been a consistent force at the plate for K-State, hitting safely in all seven games so far.

Also looking to contribute are sophomore Dave Hendrix, who went 3-for-5 with three RBIs in Saturday's victory, and newcomer second baseman Scott Poepard, who had a 6-for-11 weekend.

Pitching-wise for K-State, Jon Albrecht is sitting at 2-0 after a strong performance in Saturday's game, going six innings while allowing four Razorback runs.

Both Rob Merriman and Jon Oiseth suffered their first losses of the season in Fayetteville, with Merriman moving to 2-1 and Oiseth to 1-1 on the year.

While the Cats know what kind of team they're up against, Poepard says a K-State win is within their grasp.

"It's going to be tough, but if we can put some games together and play well, which I don't think we did all weekend against Arkansas, I think we can beat them," he said.

"But it's going to come down to the pitchers throwing strikes and the defense playing well and just hitting the ball. We're just going to have to go out and play our best."

Chadd said that while Wichita State is looking to get back on track, the Cats are also ready for a win.

"They're going to come in a little hungry since they have a little bad taste in their mouth," he said.

"But so do we. We're anxious to get back into the fire."

Rob Merriman throws a pitch during the Cats' opening game against Peru State. The Wildcats face the Shockers for the first time this season tonight.

JAYHAWKS TROUNCE BULLDOGS 112-36

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Senior Lisa Tate scored 21 points and pulled down seven rebounds Monday night as No. 12 Kansas overwhelmed North Carolina-Asheville, 112-36.

The Jayhawks converted 36 Bulldog turnovers into 52 points and tied school records with 29 assists and 26 steals.

Kansas (21-4) raced to a 50-12 halftime lead on the strength of a 23-2 run.

The Jayhawks also got good production from their other seniors in their last regular-season game at Allen Fieldhouse.

Ericka Muncy scored nine points, grabbed four rebounds and had a career-high 10 assists.

Reserve guard Michelle Leathers, starting her first game of the year, scored a season-high eight points.

Amanda Frazier scored eight points to lead North Carolina-Asheville (6-19), while Christina Moore had seven.

Only two of the Jayhawks' 50 field goals came from outside the paint: a jumper by Kristel Thalmann and a three-point shot by Leathers.

Kansas next plays Missouri in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament on Saturday in Salina, Kan.

NCAA

Officials meet with BCA

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OVERLAND PARK — The Black Coaches Association and the NCAA will speak Tuesday night, their first full discussion since the BCA threatened to disrupt the college basketball season.

They will be joined on a two-hour conference call by three federal mediators who will have no authority to resolve any disputes. The issues the BCA has raised, including freshman eligibility standards and scholarship cuts, can be decided only by vote of NCAA schools at their annual meeting.

"From my perspective, I would like to have face-to-face interaction," NCAA secretary-treasurer Prentice Gautt said.

"But evidently, that could not happen this time. So we took the next-best avenue ... I think it is the beginning of open dialogue and real communications."

During the NCAA convention in January, the BCA threatened to lead a boycott of college games after Division I schools voted not to restore a 14th scholarship to men's basketball.

The threat was withdrawn after the Black Political Caucus took an interest and the Justice Department offered to serve as mediator.

The call is scheduled for 6 to 8 p.m. EST Tuesday.

It is not clear if there will be a public statement following the conference call.

BIG EIGHT

Coaches alter opinions on decision for conference expansion

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The hot topic for discussion by the Big Eight Conference basketball coaches during their weekly teleconference Monday was the recent addition of four Southwest Conference schools.

The addition of Texas, Texas A&M, Baylor and Texas Tech is set to take effect in 1996, and from what the coaches said, it seems they have changed their minds about the additions.

This is a contradiction of the message they sent last season when the coaches voted 8-0 against a possible merger with the Southwest Conference schools.

"Personally, I think there are a lot of positives," Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said. "It doubles the population of the Big Eight, and more players will want to play now in the Big Eight."

"We can now tell recruits in Texas that we will play at least three or four times a year in their home state."

Kansas coach Roy Williams said he didn't think the new addition of the four Texas schools will hurt the Jayhawks' recruiting in the Longhorn state.

"I think that it will make recruiting even easier, because we are going to take them back home."

Nebraska coach Danny Nee said he was excited when he heard about the Big Eight's move to add the four SWC schools.

"I'm glad the Big Eight is being proactive," Nee said. "It's one of the most progressive things that could have happened to the conference. I think it's going to be really solid for basketball and all of our other sports."

The coaches said they hoped not to ruin the established rivalries by adding the four teams. This could happen, since the league is considering splitting into north and south divisions.

Colorado coach Joe Harrington offered a solution that wouldn't destroy the competition between the Big Three (Nebraska, Oklahoma and Colorado).

"It's my opinion that we should split it up four Big Eight schools a side, and then two Southwest Conference teams," Harrington said. "I think that you need to put Nebraska, Colorado and Oklahoma all on one side, because those are big football rivalries that have been going on for a long time."

"Then if you do that, you will have to have Oklahoma State on that side to keep the Oklahoma-Oklahoma State basketball rivalry intact. Those four teams along with two Southwest Conference teams."

Harrington said the other division could involve all of the other teams in the Big Eight.

"At least that way you would keep the Kansas-K-State rivalry together. It's going to be done by what's best for the whole league — not what one person thinks," Harrington said.

Finally, after two Missouri players captured the honor two weeks in a row, Nebraska forward Eric Piatkowski was selected the Big Eight player of the week.

Last week, in two Cornhusker wins against Kansas and K-State, the 6-foot-7 senior averaged 29 points.

Piatkowski led the Huskers in scoring both games, and with the wins, Nebraska practically sewed up a post-season berth in the NCAA Tournament.

COLUMN

League change lacking in the details

The deed is done, and the die has been cast. The most stable league in the past 87 years has just undertaken a dramatic change in its structure.

The Big Eight Conference sent invitations to Baylor, Texas Tech, Texas A&M and Texas to join in a league expansion.

All four unanimously accepted.

The Big Eight is no more. What should the conference be called? The Big 12, Big West or Big Midwest? One of the names suggested was the Conference of Really, Really Flat States. I don't know.

Luckily, there are two years to go before the proposed change will go into effect; so, there is time to iron out the name.

There are a lot of other details to be worked out as well. General questions that have popped up during the past week range from what will the schedule look like, to bowl prospects to the bottom line — money.

In all likelihood, the conference will be divided into two divisions. Probably the split will be north and south, although Colorado basketball coach Joe Harrington would like to see an east-west split. This would greatly improve his basketball schedule by ridding him of two powerhouses — Kansas and Missouri.

This league division is not set in stone, so don't make any travel plans. Football has been the driving force in the expansion decision, so let's take a look at what the schedule might look like. With Oklahoma and Oklahoma State in the southern division, K-State would play all five of its opponents in the league during the season (rotating home and away).

The remaining games of the season would be taken up by two different scenarios. No. 1, the Wildcats would then play two of the southern-division teams, rotating with the other teams each year. This would leave four non-conference games for each northern team.

No. 2, the Cats would take on three southern-division teams, with the rest of schedule filled out by non-conference games. This obviously means a large rotation schedule to face an opponent both away and at home.

At the end of the season, a league championship game between the north and the south would take place. The TV folks are chomping at the bit for this.

What about the bowl games?

The Big Eight is scheduled to renegotiate its contract with the Orange Bowl in the near future, so there could be changes in the air.

How about the Fiesta Bowl? Imagine cruising down to Tempe, Ariz., for the Fiesta Bowl, taking in K-State trouncing some team (let me dream) and then hitting the Copper Bowl on the way home to watch another conference team play. Sounds inviting. Tempe is a lot closer than Miami, Fla., and just as warm.

The past few years, a Big Eight team has gone down to Florida for the Orange Bowl and lost to either Miami or Florida State. Heading to the Fiesta, the Cats would face a number of possible coalition bowl members.

Now that the decision has been made to expand the Big Eight and add the other four teams, it makes sense to look at the motivation behind the decision.

Money.

The Big Eight looked at the TV contracts that existed. It saw the break-up of the College Football Association's contract and realized the potential and danger that existed.

If the expansion had not taken place now, it might be K-State left out in the cold sometime in the next couple of years when some other conference came calling for the Big Eight big names. K-State, while it has had a good year overall athletically, does not have the power draw of KU or Nebraska.

By combining into an expanded league at this time, K-State has protected, to a large extent, its future.

It is tough to tell how long the future may be, though. Rumors are that officials from the Big Eight have been talking to Brigham Young, Tulane and New Mexico.

How does the Big Mega Conference sound for a name?

House to debate license plates

COLLEGIAN STAFF

A bill that would make personalized college license plates available is scheduled to be debated in the Kansas House this week.

Rep. Don Rezac, D-Emmett, sponsor of the bill, said the license plates will cost no more than $100 and no less than $25.

The proceeds will not just go toward academic scholarships, as originally written in the bill, but will also go to the college foundations for academic achievement or excellence, he said.

"I hope the majority of the money will go towards scholarships," Rezac said.

Rezac said the bill was amended in the House Transportation Committee to make it more politically acceptable.

The foundations will be responsible for promotion and the handling of the license plates, he said.

Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, co-sponsor of the bill, said the license plates will be sold through a voucher system.

People who want a license plate will send money to the college of their choice.

The college will send a voucher to the person who wants the license plate.

The buyer will send the voucher to the local county treasurer, who will send it to the Department of Motor Vehicles.

"I think it's a good idea," Glasscock said. "It remains to be seen how much money it will raise."

Rezac said all Board of Regents and State Board of Education colleges can participate, but there has to be an order of no less than 500 plates before the Department of Motor Vehicles will issue the license plates.

Bill Stallard, resident of Wamego and K-State alumnus, is the person behind the the license-plate idea.

Stallard said he first heard of the idea when he was in Montana.

"Mainly, this started three years ago when I was visiting a friend in Montana," Stallard said. "I saw a Montana State University license plate that had their emblem on it."

The plate cost $22.50, and $20 of it went to scholarships, Stallard

said.

Missouri, Arizona, Indiana and Florida have similar license-plate programs.

The University of Florida raised more than $1 million in the 1993 fiscal year through its license-plate program, he said.

Stallard said he testified for the bill, and he said the only opposition came from the Kansas Department of Motor Vehicles.

Stallard said the license-plate program will not be supported with tax dollars.

Hijackers force plane to Spain

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADRID, Spain — Three Algerian policemen hijacked a domestic flight with 131 people aboard Monday and forced it to land in southern Spain. They surrendered hours later but were denied political asylum.

It wasn't clear whether the hijackers were fleeing political violence in Algeria, where Muslim radicals have targeted soldiers, police, intellectuals and foreigners in a two-year campaign against the army-backed regime.

The Air Algerie plane was en route from Oran, in western Algeria, to Annaba, near the Tunisian border, when the three forced the crew to divert the jet across the Mediterranean to the southern Spanish town of Alicante.

The Boeing 727 landed without seeking permission from air traffic controllers, and paramilitary Civil Guards surrounded it, authorities said.

The hijackers released eight women, two men and two children unharmed, then surrendered several hours later. There were no reported injuries during the hijacking.

The hijackers carried handguns throughout the five-hour ordeal that was prolonged by language problems between Spanish negotiators and the Arabic- and French-speaking hijackers, Alfonso Calve, civil governor of the Alicante region said. Calve said the three policemen would remain in custody pending an investigation and would not be granted the political asylum they had requested.

Authorities said the hijackers were between 28 and 30 years old, but they provided no further information on them, nor did they indicate a motive.

The hijacking came a day after Algerian police said they killed Mourad Si Ahmed, head of the Armed Islamic Group.

The group is thought to be responsible for the deaths of at least 28 foreigners in Algeria and dozens of police officers since Islamic radicals two years ago rebelled against the military-backed junta.

At least 3,000 people have died in the conflict, which was sparked by army army coup that robbed fundamentalists of an imminent election victory.

The violence has made already difficult living conditions in Algeria worse. Long lines for visas form daily at foreign embassies.

Parking garage debate continues

TAWNYA ERNST Collegian

Students will have to wait a little longer for a solution to the parking problem.

There has been more discussion about a parking garage on campus, Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, said.

He said Memorial Stadium has been considered as the site for a parking garage. But, he said he wanted to stress that the parking garage was still a concept and that plans were not concrete.

"We've had discussions but no specific proposal," Rawson said. "We have been studying the adjoining street to see how it would handle additional traffic load if we were to build a parking garage."

"Something would have to be done with Anderson Avenue,"

Rawson said. "We have been talking with the city about the addition of a turn lane, which would have to be done before any work could start."

Within the next several weeks, Rawson said, the Council on Traffic, Parking and Police Operations is going to talk with private consulting companies and developers about the parking garage.

If a garage were constructed, it would probably be several levels to accommodate at least 600 or 700 parking stalls, Rawson said.

"The roughest estimate we have right now is that it would be about $6 million just to construct, and this doesn't include operating costs and maintenance," Rawson said. "It's an expensive undertaking."

Funding would probably come from revenue bonds, Rawson said, that would be paid back in part through parking fees and fines.

Ed Skoog, student body president, said plans were all speculation now, but the need for a solution to the parking problem is real.

"We know the old stadium is not the best place for it, but a garage would need to be in the vicinity of the Union," Skoog said.

"We need to get the annexation idea hammered out with the city before we do anything," he said. "The campus is trying to solve the parking problem, but it's not going to be solved fast."

Classy Cats' funding may alter fee

CARON CITRO
Collegian

Prompted by a change of funding for the Classy Cats, a committee has been formed to review the athletic fee.

The Classy Cats' funding was changed from the KSU Marching Band to the athletic department early this fiscal year, which started July 1.

The athletic fee contract was originally due for review next year, but the bill stipulates that any failure to abide by the contract specifications would result in an automatic review.

David Frese, student body vice president, said the review could change the way the money is divided — depending on what the committee recommends.

"Student Senate and the band need to decide how to finance the Classy Cats," he said.

The original intent was to finance the Classy Cats as part of the band, Frese said.

"Early last summer, we dealt with the squad together with the band," Max Urlick, athletic director, said.

Student Senate also considered Classy Cats and the band to be a unit when the athletic fee was increased to $17 in November 1992.

"That was how it was intended, but it wasn't spelled out," Urlick said.

Urlick said there was some confusion about the budget because both he and Frank Tracz, director of bands, were new.

The original bill passed by Student Senate stated that the marching band had a budget considerably lower than any other Big Eight Conference school. In an effort to increase its budget, the band was allocated 13 percent of the athletic fee.

This year's projected total funds from the athletic fee is $612,000, Jack Key, chief financial officer for department of Intercollegiate Athletics, said. The band's share of that is $79,560.

"When Tracz came, he was led to believe his band budget would be $79,560," Key said.

There were meetings to discuss the dispersal of funds, Key said.

"Ultimately, it was decided that to be fair, Tracz should have the whole $79,560," Key said.

Tracz said, "There was some misunderstanding because the dollars weren't adding up, but things have been resolved."

As a result, the athletic department will fund the Classy Cats this fiscal year.

"We had to come up with some additional money from our budget for the cheerleaders and Classy Cats," he said.

Key said the cheerleaders received $16,826 and the Classy Cats received $4,000.

"A lot of people felt like the $4,000 was coming out of the band's money," Key said. "The band would not have gotten $4,000 more if the athletic department hadn't given it to the Classy Cats."

Meanwhile, Tracz has announced auditions for next year's new dance team.

"We have 80 to 100 women and a few men interested, and we just hired a new coach, Barbara Leiker," Tracz said.

Jeanette Johnson, Classy Cats captain and senior in psychology and business, said she doesn't think the new dance team is a threat.

"He wants his own drill team, which is different from a pom squad," she said. "He doesn't understand that there's a difference."

Margaret Turner, the adviser for the Classy Cats, said, "A lot of Big Eight schools have both a dance line and a pom squad."

But Urlick and Key both said they feel two dance teams at K-State is too much to ask.

Key said he assumes the cost for a new dance team will come out of the band's budget, not the athletic department's budget.

"Whatever dance group K-State has will be under the band," he said. "But I can't see having two. Two groups just don't make a whole lot of sense."

Tracz said the music department, the athletic department and the University are in total agreement that there will only be one dance group.

Turner said, "I'd hate to see the pom squad dissolved at this point."

Frese said a mediation committee is being formed to investigate the situation and determine whether the Classy Cats were wrongly dismissed.

Tracz said the dismissal was an academic issue and the new dance team is really just a leadership change.

Urlick said, "If the Classy Cats falls under the band, the director should be able to have control over the group."

Turner, who has been adviser for four years, was paid for the position for the first time this year. Key said the only difference that might occur is that Turner won't be involved.

"It is my hope some current members would try out for the new group," Key said.

Entrepreneurs climb stairway to success but it can help a business that is struggling and might need that little boost to turn the business around.

"They helped me beyond belief," Burchfield said. "I probably wouldn't be here today if it had not been for the SBDC."

K-State students have another opportunity to advance their ideas by joining the Association of College Entrepreneurs. This club is dedicated to the advancement of college entrepreneurs through meetings, networking, contacts and conferences throughout the United States.

"I got involved with the ACE group, and it has really helped," Brent Peterson, senior in marketing, said.

"It helped my window-tinting business gain recognition and helped me with insights into running a better business," he said.

An entrepreneur must have some essential characteristics: motivation, imagination, skills, persistence and money. This last factor is the critical ingredient.

"It took several trips to banks and potential investors before we had the needed venture capital,"

Burchfield said.

Start-up costs of a business can vary greatly; so, the myth that a person has to be born rich is false. Many small businesses have been started with less than $1,000, some with as little as only a few hundred dollars. Apple Computers got its start in the garage of its founders as nothing more than an idea with great potential, Birch said.

So, what about all those college students who have that itch to become their own boss and leave school early?

"If your business is unsuccessful, you can fall back upon your education and try for a job," Burchfield said. "If your business fails, and an education was never really important, you could be in trouble."

Peterson said he agreed. "I'm not sure what I'll be doing down the road, but I'll have my college education, and that alone can be a great benefit to me and my business," Peterson said.

UN inspires student to raise money for flags

CHRISTI WRIGHT
Collegian

The April 11 kick-off ceremony for International Week 1994 will feature flags from every country in the world.

Kouassi Kouakou, graduate student in grain science, has been raising money for the purchase of flags by asking local businesses and Student Governing Association for donations.

Kouakou is president of the International Coordinating Council, a group that represents international students.

To obtain the flags, he said he needed to raise nearly $6,000. He received $5,500 in donations from area businesses and another $570 from SGA.

SGA voted to give Kouakou the $500 and an additional $70 for the flag of Puerto Rico, Michele Meier, College of Business senator, said.

Kouakou said getting the flags has been a dream of his for four years.

"I want to show people what K-State is all about," Kouakou said. "There are many graduates that are foreign. When parents come to K-

State from another country to see their son or daughter graduate, I want them to see these flags."

Kouakou said he got started collecting the flags when he visited New York City in 1992.

"I went to the United Nations building and saw all the beautiful flags and asked the people to help by donating flags," Kouakou said. The United Nations was unable to fund the donation, so Kouakou drove to Washington, D.C., to visit the foreign embassies.

"I spent three days visiting the embassies and telling my story about how I wanted to get the flags for a display at K-State," Kouakou said.

The embassies were unable to fund the donations.

"I only got one big flag from the Ivory Coast, which is my home country," he said.

When Kouakou returned to K-State, he said he asked President Jon Wefald if the University could purchase the flags.

He said he was told there was no money in the budget to finance the flags.

"I just decided to go around to the local businesses to ask for the money," Kouakou said. "Everyone loved the idea and wanted to take part in it, and the money started flowing in."

When the goal is reached, Kouakou will place the order for the flags with the All Nations Flags Company Inc., in Kansas City, Mo.

"I haven't actually ordered them yet, but I called to warn the company of my big order," Kouakou said.

The cost of each flag varies depending on the demand and design. Kouakou said the French flag will cost $21, while the flag from Iraq will cost $141. Each flag will be 3 feet by 5 feet and will come with an 8-foot pole and floor stand.

Kouakou said the International Coordinating Council is also ordering a flag for itself, the state of Kansas, the United Nations and the United States. The Chamber of Commerce is donating a Manhattan flag.

Kouakou said several people, including Gov. Joan Finney and Manhattan Mayor Roger Maughmer, will be present to speak.

Murder trial continues for pro-life activist

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PENSACOLA, Fla. — A jail guard overheard an activist admit he killed an abortion clinic doctor and heard him say it was worth it even if he spends his life in jail, a prosecutor said Monday.

The defense, however, named another anti-abortion activist as the man who killed the physician.

As the murder trial of Michael F. Griffin got under way, assistant state attorney James Murray told jurors that the guard will testify Griffin spoke with his wife by phone the day after the killing last year.

The Escambia County Jail guard heard Griffin say he killed Dr. David Gunn because of his personal conviction, and if he spent the rest of his life behind bars, it would be worth it, Murray said.

Defense attorney Robert Kerrigan, in his opening remarks, said one witness would testify that it wasn't Griffin who shot Gunn during an anti-abortion demonstration at Gunn's clinic, but another protester.

Griffin, 32, a Christian fundamentalist, is accused of shooting Gunn, 47, of Eufala, Ala., three times in the back last March 10.

The physician was shot as he arrived for work at Pensacola Women's Medical Services while an anti-abortion demonstration was being held on the opposite side of the clinic.

Griffin's lawyers argued the killing was not premeditated and thus the charge against Griffin should be reduced from first-degree murder to second-degree.

The mandatory sentence for first-degree murder is life in prison without parole for at least 25 years. The prosecution agreed not to seek the death penalty.

The judge ruled out an insanity defense after Griffin refused to be examined by a state mental health expert.

'Reality Bites' captures cynicism, sarcasm of Generation X college graduates

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

"Reality Bites" is the 1990s version of "The Big Chill."

The film follows the lives of four recent college graduates who are struggling in the real world to become progressively independent and more mature.

The 20-something generation is depicted in this film as denim-drenched, caustic-witted rebels who aspire to a lifestyle that is much different from the flashy, mock aristocracy of the yuppies — their parents.

"Reality Bites" is intelligent and very true in its portrayal of Generation X. Director Ben Stiller, who also co-stars, has created a piece of anthropology.

For Winona Ryder, the role of Lelaina in "Reality Bites" is perfect. She gets to wear trendy clothing, poke fun at mainstream society and smoke a whole lot of cigarettes.

Lelaina is sarcastic and unsatisfied with life; this is the generalization of the lost generation.

Case in point: When referring to her boss, who is the host of a morning talk show in Houston, she says, "He's so cheesy, I can't watch him without crackers."

"Reality Bites" is full of such sparkling ridicule and cynicism. In fact, it motivates the viewer to become unmotivated, in the realization that everyone that age is just as pissed off. That is the charm of this film.

But as familiar as the characters' premises, conversations and dilemmas are, their spontaneity comes across rehearsed and cliché at times. The witty one-liners are unrealistically impromptu, and the end is predictable. This is all that is wrong with the film, however.

In 30 years, when the members of Generation X are in their 50s and look back on this film, they will see themselves clearly and absolutely.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveau

Female friend causes much angst for 'Sleepless in Manhattan'

Dear Cassandra,

I have a situation. I haven't had a girlfriend since the sixth grade, but that's not my dilemma. Here's where you can help me.

Lately, I've been growing close to a female friend whom I just met at the beginning of the year. I'm having feelings I've not had for a long time, and I think she feels the same way toward me. The problem is she is still seeing her boyfriend, who is a senior in high school. When he visits her here at school, she kicks me out into the hall like a dog. When he leaves, it's like he never existed. I feel like she needs to make a decision because it seems as though she's leading one of us on. Also, I think my roommate is getting tired of staying up late while she and I discuss our relationship.

Please help me. I haven't felt like this about someone for many years. I need your input because I don't want to lose what I have here.

Signed,
Sleepless in Manhattan

Dear Sleepless,

She apparently still has some feelings toward this guy. As long as she has a commitment to her boyfriend, you will have to be friends. If it is too difficult to be friends with her, then distance yourself.

Eventually, she may change her mind, but it's her choice. The only thing you can control is whether to stay friends or give up and move on.

Abigail Williams, front, played by Aggie Callison, and Betty Parris, left, played by Amanda Sneed, sing during the opera "The Crucible."

Witch trial provides story for 'Crucible'

SARAH HAPPEL
Collegian

K-State Opera Theatre will show "The Crucible" beginning at 8 p.m. March 3-5 and continuing March 10-12 in Nichols Theatre.

"The Crucible" is based on the play by Arthur Miller, and the music is written by Robert Ward.

The opera is about the Puritan purge of witchcraft in old Salem and focuses on a young farmer, his wife and a young servant girl who causes the wife's arrest for witchcraft.

Aggie Callison, senior in music and theater, plays the villain of "The Crucible."

"I play Abigail, who's trying to break up the marriage of John Putnam and Elizabeth," Callison said.

"It's my first bad-guy part, and it's kind of fun because she keeps accusing different people of different things."

Putnam takes the girl to court to admit the lie but finds himself, like his wife, also accused of witchcraft.

The musical director for the opera is Jerry Langenkamp, professor of music, and the stage director is Charlotte MacFarland, assistant professor of theater.

"The play is one of my favorites," MacFarland said.

"I've directed it twice — once in high school in the late '60s and then for the Manhattan Civic Theater in the early '70s."

"The Crucible" demonstrates how small children's lies build until 19 men and women go to the gallows, accused of being possessed by the Devil.

"The music is very, very difficult," MacFarland said.

"Basically, they sing the dialogue to each other. It's about as hard as they get."

Students started working with the music last semester.

"We started learning the music a week before Christmas vacation," Callison said.

"That sounds like a lot of time, but it really isn't. I don't know if people will realize how difficult this play really is. It's really over people's heads."

MacFarland said the cast has worked for three weeks solid.

"We started Jan. 26 and work every day from 6:45 p.m. to 10 p.m. It will be a good eight or nine weeks working on it by the time we're finished."

Although MacFarland said she is hoping for a large turnout, she expects a smaller crowd for this production.

"People love to see the opera, but it's more unusual to see an opera in a smaller theater," MacFarland said.

"People don't know the music from it. It isn't glitzy. It doesn't have the flowy costumes. The characters are Puritans."

Nevertheless, MacFarland said she encourages students to see "The Crucible."

"The commitment is strong, and the talent is very good," MacFarland said.

Inspiring women highlight 1993

Adventures of the Alleged Texas Cheerleader-Murdering Mom" starring Holly Hunter. That's all well and good, but it beat out a PBS documentary on the Great Depression (probably because of the catchier title).

In between coverage of earthquakes, fires, trade-center bombings and floods, reporters found time to run for weeks after Heidi Fleiss, Hollywood madam and eight-hour wonder at most.

In 1993, women were still criticized for taking themselves too seriously. Women's fashion magazines were barked with angry letters saying supermodel Kate Moss, whom Time called the "world's new dominant beauty," and her underfed waif look, set impossible standards for women.

Harper's Bazaar published an article in June defending Moss' "ectomorphic body type" as a natural look and pooh-poohed the idea that magazine models inspire anorexia and bulimia.

"She's just thin. Get over it," was the message conveyed.

The message was somewhat justified by the voluptuous presence of ex-brat Barrymore and the deep cleavage of Roseanne Arnold on magazine racks everywhere.

As with any year, there were triumphs as well as tragedies for women.

Oprah Winfrey became the second-highest paid entertainer in the world, lost 60 pounds and got engaged to the love of her life.

Those things aren't nearly as remarkable as her self-revelations about her childhood, her career and her struggle for self-esteem. Oprah inspires because she is everywoman.

Princess Diana of Wales finally put her overly exposed foot down and went into semi-retirement from public life a year after making Prince Charles the most eligible, legally separated man in the world.

Susan Powter, feminist fitness guru, stopped her insanity before she got to the Lorena Bobbitt stage. She got back at her cheating first husband by losing pounds and making millions with her infomercials, videos and a best-selling book. Her look may be underfed, but it's definitely not waifish.

More women characters came out as lesbians and bisexuals on TV shows such as "Roseanne" and "L.A. Law," trying to push the reality envelope in an industry that thought single-motherhood was a radical concept for Americans to swallow.

Finally, some women just got smart in the '90s.

Whoopi Goldberg dropped Ted Danson, who rivals Tom Arnold for goofiness. Darryl Hannah saw the writing on the Kennedy compound and broke her engagement to John-John Kennedy Jr.

And pretty woman Julia Roberts married a pretty good guy, Lyle Lovett, in her bare feet, proving to men everywhere that good hair isn't everything in a relationship.

Speaking of which, will 1994 ad campaigns foster a trend of women as big Rogaine™ consumers?

The grass always looks greener on Kate Moss' head.

Center offers energy outlet for Manhattan youth

JODI WOLTERS
Collegian

Manhattan youth have a place all their own to go on Friday and Saturday nights, and they will soon have a place to go after school Monday through Thursday — the Manhattan Youth Center.

"If the kids didn't have there to go, they would be at the mall harassing people, running around in the streets causing problems," Veronica Chavez, sophomore in social work and center employee, said. "It allows them to release a lot of their energy."

"It is an experience that everyone should get to know. It is nice to know you can make someone happy and they in turn make you happy."

The youth center, which is in the Community Center, 120 N. Fourth St., is an alternative outlet for youth.

"We try to provide a safe environment, alcohol and drug-free, for youth ages 6 to 18," Chris Horsley, program director and senior in psychology, said.

The youth center has been helping young people for at least 20 years. The center provides a wide variety of games, as well as free drinks and snacks.

The youth program will be using another building soon so it can be open during the week.

The center is open from 4 to 10 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays, but starting March 1, it plans to be open from 3 to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday. The center plans to offer tutoring from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. during the week.

The youth are required to pay a $5 fee once a year to cover operational costs.

"Each kid has a card or record that tells the year and date which they started coming to the youth center, and that is the date which they pay the fee on," Chavez said.

Horsley said attendance at the center has grown from 75 to 225 members since last winter. On the center's top night, 156 youth attended, he said.

With all those young people, the center relies on K-State students for volunteers.

"It is great," Chavez said. "It takes my weekends, but I look forward to it."

"I enjoy it."

Gov. Joan Finney made a $34 million budget recommendation to the Legislature for the Partnership of Excellence and the inclusion of Washburn into the regents system.

The two plans were separate proposals, but Finney linked the two as a part of her recommendation and has said she would not consider the plans separately.

Presently, Washburn is supported by $6.3 million in state aid and a special 18-mill Topeka property-tax levy.

According to the bill, the mill levy would be frozen at 18 mills after July 1997. Fifteen mills would be used for operating expenses, and three mills would pay for Washburn's capital improvements. The mill levy would continue indefinitely to support Washburn.

Working it Out

Shape Up for Spring Break!

Wildcat Workouts & Waterworks will focus on helping you look and feel better for Spring Break.

Wildcat Workout presents:

A Multicultural Movement Celebration

Celebrate the health and wealth of Multicultural Movement. Join in this special Workout Celebration of Diversity, March 11, when all afternoon sessions will be combined at 5:30 p.m. Demonstrations will be presented by different campus organizations.

Pool Action:

Thinking of lifeguarding or teaching swimming this summer? Start preparing now by improving your strokes and increasing your endurance during Recreational Services swimming hours. For Lifeguard Training, WSI, and LGL courses in March and May, contact UFM at 539-8763.

Exercise, Diet and Optimism!

There is evidence that optimists not only have larger circles of friends; they enjoy better health, as well. An optimistic outlook may have an impact on our health by giving us a healthier stress response. Stress giving you that out-of-control, overwhelmed feeling causes the kind of response that feels bad. Too much of this kind of stress is related to illness, such as heart disease, ulcers, headaches and so forth. Another reason optimists may have better health is they take better care of themselves. They also expect their exercise and diet efforts to pay off, which helps them stick to their resolutions.

An optimistic attitude can be cultivated with practice. Take control of those things that increase your stress resistance and make you feel good - regular exercise, a healthful diet, adequate rest and recreation. Challenge negative thoughts and replace them with positive ones. Finding the humor in stressful situations helps you feel more in control. Look for things to appreciate in your everyday life. Take a problem-solving approach to stress, and cultivate your ability to find the silver lining in the clouds of change.

TODAY IS...

The fourth annual National Sportsmanship Day sponsored by the Institute for International Sport. This day gives participants an opportunity to reflect on their sportsmanship and encourages everyone to be a good sport! It is a celebration of sports, ethics and fair play. BE A GOOD SPORT!

You Asked It!

Q: Can you tell me more about the new circuit training aerobic sessions offered?

A: The sessions combine sets of low impact aerobics, step aerobics, strength training, muscle toning and stretching. These exercises increase strength, endurance and flexibility. Circuit training is offered on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 11:45 a.m., 3:15 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. Physical fitness is not a single entity. Strength, cardiovascular fitness and flexibility are all three components of fitness.

Our Favorite Workout!

Kristie and Michelle Stirewalt, both sophomores in Nutrition and Exercise Science, work out six days a week. Their hour exercise program consists of using the stairmaster, biking and lifting weights. They find it easier to trade off the stairmaster and bike and then lift weights together.

"Our class schedule is exactly the same and it is convenient to go to the Rec together. We enjoy each others' company and have fun," Kristie said. "We both exercise not only to keep in shape but to feel better and relieve stress," Michelle said.

Group discusses overlay logistics

TED ELLET
Collegian

Opponents and supporters of the diversity-overlay proposal expressed their opinions about the issue during a meeting of the Academic Affairs Committee of Faculty Senate on Tuesday afternoon.

The diversity overlay is a proposal which, if adopted, will require undergraduate students to enroll in at least three hours of a class that increases cultural understanding.

Members of the committee and several visitors gathered to discuss logistics of the diversity-overlay proposal.

"We've only had two meetings on this thing," Bill Schapaugh, chair of Academic Affairs and professor of agronomy, said. "But we've come a long way in getting people's feelings about it."

"There are some major issues that need to be discussed to make this a workable proposal for Faculty Senate."

Marsha Frey, professor of history, came to the meeting to express her disapproval of the diversity-overlay proposal.

"The main problem of the proposal is it stresses the divisions among us," Frey said. "It is a big mistake to stress what separates us rather than what unites us."

"We are still a melting pot. Sex and race is irrelevant. This proposal would be a giant step backwards for us."

But several other visitors to the meeting said they believed the diversity-overlay proposal would lead to a positive outcome.

"I believe that providing a tiny step, which is all the diversity overlay will do, is better than doing nothing at all," Anne Butler, director of the Women's Studies Program and assistant professor of education, said.

"This proposal is just to acknowledge our differences and to understand what it is about our

Israel releases prisoners

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HEBRON, Occupied West Bank — Israel released more than 500 Palestinian prisoners Tuesday to coax the PLO back to peace talks suspended after the Hebron mosque massacre and said another 500 will be freed by the weekend.

Palestinians scoffed at the gesture.

"I think the Israelis are releasing us now to make the Palestinians happy," freed prisoner Wael Salameh, 38, said when he arrived in Hebron, where dozens of Muslim worshippers were slain by a Jewish settler Friday. "This is not a real step for peace."

That was the PLO line, too. Samir Ghosheh, a member of the PLO's ruling Executive Committee, dismissed the release as irrelevant to the "real issue of providing protection for our people."

He called it cosmetic surgery to dampen the violence that has swept the occupied territories and parts of Israel since Friday's massacre.

The PLO won't resume peace talks with Israel unless certain guarantees are provided to protect Palestinians living under occupation, he said.

But, amid intense diplomatic maneuvering, there were signs that these may now be forthcoming.

Israeli sources were optimistic the suspended talks will resume following Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's offer of a package of concessions that go partway toward meeting PLO demands.

Western and Arab diplomats in Tunis, Tunisia, the PLO's headquarters, said Israel's concessions, offered this week, include strengthening a Palestinian police force being deployed under the Sept. 13 PLO-Israeli peace accord.

Beer sales in Union possible

TONY ISLER
Collegian

Many new facilities, programs and services could be offered with the expansion and renovation of the K-State Union, including the sale of beer.

Students, faculty and administrators gathered Tuesday night to view a draft of the proposed Union referendum. What began as a discussion of the referendum ended with the talk of beer being sold in the Union.

"It is a possibility that the Union Governing Board will look into," Beth Trimmer, UGB president and senior in social science, said.

"Other universities in Kansas offer 3.2 percent beer on campus, and it is something that can happen here at K-State."

"The UGB must look at the advantages as well as the disadvantages to the sale of beer before it can be seriously considered," Trimmer said.

In addition to talk of beer being sold, the group viewed the proposed referendum and made a few changes to how it might actually read on the April ballot.

The group was also given a list of proposed marketing strategies for the campaign. These strategies are aimed directly at the students and will be carried out using a variety of communication strategies.

"We intend to use press releases, visitations, slide shows, table tents and many other promotional strategies in targeting the students," Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said.

"This campaign for the Union referendum must be student-driven in order for it to pass."

Passing of the referendum in April would not only make the Union larger, but it would also be renovated and have the interior enhanced. This could bring in vendors such as Taco Bell, Pizza

'94 Telefund donations surpass record

JILL DUBOIS

Some organizations might be upset at the prospect of a $25,000-$28,000 phone bill, but since the bill will be paid off with a record-breaking $805,366 raised during the KSU Foundation Telefund, it can probably be overlooked.

The phone bill can be attributed to student volunteers who called 70,000 alumni for donations from Feb. 1-28 during Telefund, which ended Monday night.

The drive raised money for the University with calls made in the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Telefund's 1993 total was about $713,000, and this year the Foundation hoped to collect even more, Gordon Dowell, director of Telefund, said.

"This has surpassed all expectations," he said. "Our goal is to always do better than the previous year."

Telefund has raised more than $6.1 million in its 14 years in existence, he said.

"No one could go to another university and put this program together overnight," Dowell said.

"K-State currently ranks seventh nationally in percent of alumni who support their alma mater and first in the Big Eight."

"Many universities envy our program," he

MUSLIMS, CROATS NEGOTIATE WITHOUT SERBS

WASHINGTON — Bosnian Muslims and Croats worked on the final details Tuesday of a U.S.-brokered agreement, aiming to establish a federation that could move Bosnia a significant step closer to peace.

Croatian Foreign Minister Mate Granic said that he and Muslim officials "are just now in the final stages of negotiations."

The agreement would bring together two of the three parties in a bloody two-year ethnic conflict that has cost the lives of more than 200,000 people.

Missing from the equation are the Bosnian Serbs who have gained military control of 70 percent of the former Yugoslav republic.

Granic and Bosnian Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic, a Muslim, have been negotiating in Washington over the past three days.

Throughout the discussions in the U.S. capital, Secretary of State Warren Christopher and other administration officials steered clear of sounding overly optimistic.

RUSSIANS PERSUADE SERBS TO OPEN AIRFIELD

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Nudged by their Slavic brethren in Russia, Bosnian Serbs sought to disarm NATO firepower Tuesday by agreeing to open Tuzla's airport to aid flights.

An airlift to the Muslim city in northern Bosnia like the one that's helping feed Sarajevo could provide food and humanitarian assistance to hundreds of thousands of people.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic, who had opposed opening the airport because he believed arms could be smuggled to the Muslims controlling it, made the concession following talks in Moscow with Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev.

Washington was pleased. "I think the Russians are trying to further the peace process," White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers, said. "I think they're trying to be helpful."

NATO had threatened to open Tuzla's airport by force. Bosnian Serbs got a taste of NATO's resolve Monday when U.S. F-16 planes shot down four Bosnian Serb fighter jets violating the U.N. no-fly zone.

It was the first time in NATO's 44-year history that the alliance had engaged in combat.

SENATE DEBATES CHANGES IN DEATH PENALTY BILL

The Senate Judiciary Committee Tuesday reaffirmed the contents of a death penalty bill, just hours before the start of a scheduled debate in the Senate.

Sen. Jerry Moran, R-Hays, the committee chairman, called a brief meeting to address complaints by some lawmakers that the bill before the Senate was not an accurate reflection of the committee's actions last Thursday.

Democratic opponents contended the bill reported to the Senate on Monday is materially different from the one the committee approved last Thursday.

Specifically, a provision in the measure discussed by the committee would allow the death penalty to be imposed for killing a child under the age of 12 during a kidnapping.

The age in the bill is now 14.

"It's technically incorrect," Sen. Paul Felecciano, D-Wichita, said. "We can't debate this bill."

Moran said that age difference was made to bring the bill in line with existing sodomy statutes.

Sen. Richard Rock, D-Arkansas City, who amended the bill to insert the present proposal, said opponents to the bill are just looking for reasons to scuttle it. Rock said the changes in his view are not significant.

Supporters said the vote remained too close to call. Sen. Mark Parkinson, R-Olathe, one of the principal supporters, said he believes that as of late Monday there were 20 votes in favor and 18 against, with two senators undecided or refusing to say how they will vote.

HOUSE REJECTS ADMISSIONS

TOPEKA — The House rejected a proposal to set admissions standards at state universities — again.

During debate on a bill that would consolidate state scholarship programs, Rep. Delbert Gross, D-Hays, proposed an amendment to impose "qualified admissions" standards on Kansas students.

The proposal, voted down twice by the House last session, would take effect in the fall of 1997 and would end the state's 79-year-old policy of allowing all Kansas high school graduates to attend the six State Board of Regents universities.

Supporters argued passage of the proposal would force students to become better prepared for college.

EVIDENCE POINTS TO POLITICIANS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — In a criminal case that has touched on President Clinton, there is evidence that bogus loans were funneled to "highly important political figures" through a business run by a municipal judge, a lawyer said Tuesday.

The lawyer, Randolph Satterfield, did not identify the political figures, and special prosecutor Robert Fiske — who is investigating the Whitewater real-estate venture involving the Clintons — declined to comment.

In a pre-trial court hearing, Satterfield said some companies and people listed as getting loans from the company owned by David Hale in the 1980s didn't actually receive the money — but nonetheless signed business documents stating that they did.

Doretha Jordon, editor of the Kansas State Globe, spoke to Black Student Union about black women in the media during her presentation in Union Little Theatre Tuesday evening.

Firm beliefs key to success, speaker says

A Women's History Month speaker had four pointers for women trying to stay firm in their beliefs.

Doretha Jordon, editor of the Kansas State Globe, an African-American newspaper based in Kansas City, Kan., spoke in the K-State Union Little Theatre Tuesday night.

She listed four criteria for having strong beliefs she said she got from her minister as food for thought.

"Know what you believe," said Jordon, who is also a syndicated columnist for the Minority Press Association. "Know why you believe it. Know how to explain it and know how to define it."

To be successful, you must be firm in those things, she said.

"A person who does not know why he believes what he says he believes is confused," Jordon said. "A person who does not know how to defend what he believes is a phony."

Jordon also talked about her faith in God.

"Whatever you want, you ask God, and he gives it," she said. "You ask, but you also have to put forth some effort."

Just because women pray for something doesn't mean they can sit back and wait for the miracles to happen.

"Women must stand their own ground and prepare themselves for challenges," she said. "No matter what you are, you are a woman—wonderful and unique."

Jordon also touched on two basic types of attitudes people have.

The "here I am" attitude is one people have when they are ready to accept challenges, she said.

The "there you are" attitude happens when people don't have confidence in themselves.

"Remember, you will fall into one of the two categories," Jordon said.

Students pay tax if KSU annexed

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Students may soon hear an extra "ching" at campus cash registers if the city goes through with plans to annex K-State.

The city took another step Tuesday night toward annexing the K-State campus by scheduling public hearings on the issue for May 3.

If K-State is annexed, all sales on campus would be subject to a 1 percent city sales tax. Student fees and housing would be exempt.

The annexation would raise about $400,000 in additional revenue for the city of Manhattan. About $100,000 of that would come from sales taxes. The rest would be raised through franchise fees and increased state reimbursement from gasoline and sales taxes.

The University would keep its police department and be responsible for maintaining streets and sidewalks on campus.

K-State would save about

CITY COMMISSION

$100,000 that it pays the city each year for fire protection.

The money raised through the annexation would be split between the city and the University. K-State's share of the tax money would be placed in a special account, which would be used for joint projects with the city.

Ron Fehr, assistant city manager, said the city has been discussing the annexation with the University for several months. He said both entities have agreed that this project should be moved ahead.

James Pearson, city manager, told the commission last month that the city is working to have the annexation finalized by June.

Couple can't believe luck of winning trip to Branson

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Do not say you never win anything because the least expected and the unusual may come true.

Jerome Hess, freshman in business, and his fiancée, Emily Ells, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, had luck on their side.

Both had won a trip to Branson, Mo., after signing up for the trip two and a half weeks ago from the Rainbow Company at a lawn and garden show in Salina. The trip for two includes three days and two nights in a four-star hotel in Branson.

Hess said the good news hit him hard and that he had a difficult time believing it. He said he woke up Monday and thought it was going to be his lucky day, but he thinks the luck carried over to the next day.

"I went nuts on the phone when she called me," Hess said. "I can't believe it."

Hess said he learned about the trip that he had won and went to tell Ells.

Only 45 minutes later, he got the same news back at him — his fiancée had won a trip for two as well.

"I couldn't believe it," Hess said. "I thought she was lying."

Ells said that since the couple is getting married in July 1995 and the trips are good until December 1995, they might go to Branson on their honeymoon.

But Hess has other ideas. "I'm not going to Branson on my honeymoon," Hess said. "I don't like country music that much."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

It's time for alcohol in the Union

Since students fund the Union, it seems logical they would be at least as important as all the alumni.

Alcohol in the Union.

It could happen. The K-State Union is one of the buildings on campus that is approved for the consumption of alcohol.

That means the Union is allowed to serve alcoholic beverages with more than 3.2 percent alcohol.

The K-State Alcohol and Cereal Malt Beverage policy states that alcohol may be served only at luncheons, dinners or receptions that honor individuals and that occur in connection with official University events and/or fund-raising activities for University programs.

If there's a possibility someone will donate big money to the University, he or she gets to drink the hard stuff.

The residence halls allow 3.2 percent or below alcohol to residents who are of age. The Union should do the same.

If the Union were to offer beer sales, the increased revenue would offset the costs of added insurance. Drinking of such beverages could be limited to the Stateroom and the Union Station, if necessary. Obtaining beer would be closely regulated by the management in both those areas.

Student Senate could take a step toward allowing students the same luxury as alumni if it votes Thursday to include the alcohol addendum to the Union expansion proposal.

Since students fund the Union and bring at least as much money to this University as fund-raising activities, it seems logical they would be at least as important as alumni.

And when you think of it that way, beer in the Union isn't so strange an idea after all.

Lewerenz talks of heritage, not history

Dear Editor,

In a column, "White history not good enough," Dan Lewerenz makes a number of fantastic assertions about history that should not go unchallenged.

The idea that American Indians gave birth to the federal system is becoming one of the great legends of the popular press. There simply is no evidence of any connection between the political organization or ideas of any Native American tribes and the framing or theory of the Constitution.

The same problem crops up in Lewerenz's unquestioning use of Afrocentric theories about the origins of Western political and social thought. None of the statements he makes in this connection have any causal relationship to each other.

He disregards the fact no one seriously claims that Western political thought began in Europe; even the most elementary Western Civilization course acknowledges what Will Durant called "Our Oriental Heritage."

Nor has it yet been established that Egypt was "populated by black Africans."

Lewerenz is interested in heritage, not history. A heritage is an affirming and comforting admixture of fact and fiction all rolled into mythology — a very different thing from history.

► YEAR OF THE WOMAN

Abortion, lesbianism not 'women's' issues

Dear Editor,

When the "Year of the woman" became the catch phrase of 1993, it represented the gains women, as a class, were making in entering such important fields as politics.

The Collegian is justified in writing about Hillary Clinton and Janet Reno. I question, though, how abortion and lesbianism can be put under the umbrella of "Year of the woman."

This tactic, as Vickie Clements expressed concern about (Readers Write, Feb. 28), gives the impression that abortion and lesbianism help move all women to a better position in society. Based on some of the topics you have addressed, a more appropriate title for your series is "Year of change."

If unquestioning acceptance of abortions and homosexuality are part of any "Year of the woman," I hope last year was the last one.

Don't take Prozac to loosen up; drink beer if that's your problem

"Doctor please some more of these outside the door
she took four more ..."
Rolling Stones

Oh, yeah, I love Prozac. Prozac is my friend. It made me what I am today. If it weren't for Prozac, I'd still be punching walls and misunderstanding everything everyone said.

So, imagine my surprise when I discovered Prozac is a common drug used when people want to be more outgoing, want to work harder and want to be more uninhibited.

I thought that was what beer was for.

If you want to lose your inhibitions, go to any bar and drink yourself silly. It's cheaper than Prozac ($50 for a month's supply at one pill a day), and you'll get the fulfilling feeling of waking up with someone you don't know.

How's that for uninhibited?

If that's what you're wanting, I'm sorry to tell you this, but Prozac won't do the trick.

What it will do is make you feel more alert, calmer and more in control.

It will also make it so that you can't feel anything extreme. By this, I mean sadness, joy, elation or despair.

At least that's what it did to me.

And I haven't taken it for a year.

I'm just now beginning to feel again, and let me tell you one thing, re-entry isn't all it's cracked up to be. I had forgotten how erratic it can be.

See, I got used to not feeling anything. It was a lot easier. It's better on the outside looking in.

Then, I began to wonder where I stopped and the drug began. Everyone commented on how cheerful I was — how I hadn't been that way in years.

How good it was to have the old Lola back.

What they didn't understand was that the "old Lola" wasn't back. I was the chemically enhanced me. Newer and more improved, able to talk for hours on end about absolutely nothing.

(Any comparison to my columns is purely accidental.)

Everyone was glad to have the more cheerful me around.

Well, I can't be the voice of doom if I'm constantly cheerful, now can I? It's just not me.

It irritates me the way people are "supposed" to be takes precedence over the way we are. We're all different. That's humanity, and if you want to create a "Brave New World" of genetic super beings, then count me out.

We as a race have moved past the days of taking "magic mushrooms" to see pretty colors and heroin to achieve orgasm to the "nth" degree.

Now, doctors are prescribing anti-depressant medicine to create a better, more efficient work force.

People are taking Prozac because they want to be less inhibited or they have "dysthymia," otherwise known as chronic discontent.

Excuse me? Chronic discontent?

So, if I get upset because someone walks out in front of me in front of Goodnow Hall, I should just pop a pill to resist the impulse to make them dive for the sidewalk.

Right. I think I can exercise self-restraint.

Here's a little advice before you go looking for this mood-altering "miracle drug."

Stop whining about chronic discontent. If you're actually depressed, then you might need this drug. If you're upset because someone is sitting at your table at the Union, get a life.

Someday, you too can tell the grandkids you had to go a day without being emotionally stable.

Kind of pales in comparison to the grandparents' tales of walking 5 miles in the snow to school, doesn't it?

Uphill both ways, kids. Uphill both ways.

Diversity overlay will prove ineffective

After months of debating the diversity-overlay proposal, supporters and opponents have failed to answer a fundamental question. Will the overlay be effective?

The framers of the proposal claim the overlay is needed to prepare students to function more effectively in a diverse society. Students want to know how to function in the real world, they argue, and those who have no experience in diversity are at a disadvantage in the job market.

Until now, the claim that the diversity overlay will succeed in its goals has gone unchallenged.

The diversity-overlay committee has offered almost no evidence proving the proposal's effectiveness (such as empirical studies demonstrating the success of similar proposals). It has simply assumed it will work.

My argument against the proposal can be summed up in two words.

So what?

So what if the requirement passes Faculty Senate? How and why will it help students function in a diverse society?

The factors that determine how a person will function in a diverse society are their values, beliefs and ethics, not superficial information about culture. Learning about other cultures can help only if a person is already motivated to learn about others. This need is met by an array of electives.

The ability to function in a diverse society ultimately depends on a person's relational skills. A person who loves others will succeed. A person who only loves himself will fail. If you want to be effective in our diverse society, go make an international friend or befriend your neighbor in the dorm. There's plenty of diversity for everyone. Learn relational skills for yourself — don't ask the faculty to impose a requirement on the entire student body.

Whether we have a diversity-overlay requirement or not doesn't really matter because it is powerless to affect our ability to function in a diverse society, good or bad.

Clearly, the positive effect the overlay will have on students is not potent enough to warrant its implementation as a requirement. Conversely, the overlay is not so much destructive as it is ineffective.

I fear the campus has loaned its faith to a bankrupt idea.

Supporters claim there is strength in diversity; so, this requirement would have a positive effect. One has to ignore history to argue this point. Diversity invariably leads to conflict.

Last week's massacre at a mosque in Hebron, in which an Israelite killed almost 40 Palestinians, bears witness to the strength in diversity.

Strength lies in unity. In a diverse community, unity will be more powerful and compelling than unity in a homogeneous community. Caring for people who are different from you is a far greater challenge.

There is no strength implicit in diversity; rather, its strength occurs in the context of something larger and more meaningful — a spirit of unity.

No one in history has unified diverse people more effectively than Jesus Christ.

The story of the woman at the well in the gospel of John demonstrates how Christ dealt with culture.

Jesus was passing through a Samaritan town when he stopped at a well to rest. When a Samaritan woman came to draw from the well, Jesus asked her for a drink. Surprised, she asked him, "You are a Jew, and I am a Samaritan woman. How can you ask me for a drink?" (Jews did not associate with Samaritans.) Christ ignored this cultural boundary and proceeded to teach the woman about eternal life.

Throughout his ministry, Christ had no regard for nationality, ethnicity or social status. He transcended all cultural barriers and loved others unconditionally.

In Galatians 3:28, the apostle Paul writes, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, slave nor free, male nor female, for you are all one in Christ Jesus."

Those who follow Christ today enjoy this same unity that overcomes cultural barriers.

I have experienced this unity in Christ with friends from Mexico, Australia, Japan, England, Ecuador, Bulgaria and China. Our conversations do not revolve around our cultural differences but our unifying faith in Christ.

For the campus to understand what this means, followers of Christ must demonstrate this unity by reaching out to diverse groups instead of being isolated in our religious clubs.

Christ loved the people religious leaders told him not to love: the outcasts, the poor, lepers, prostitutes, tax-collectors, Gentiles and Samaritans — the "sinners" of his day.

There is no reason why we can't set the pace on diversity issues and show the campus what actually works.

I can't ignore that many horrible and divisive things such as the Crusades have been done in the name of Christ.

Yet, what is done in the name of Christ is often radically opposed to the Spirit of Christ.

Wildcats look to end Tigers' reign; final game for 4 seniors at home

TREY JOHNSON

Collegian

Tonight is it. Tonight marks the final home game for the Wildcats in the 1994 season.

K-State faces Missouri at 7 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum.

With some luck, the Cats will break the Tigers' 1993-94 12-game winning streak in the Big Eight and score some points toward a postseason NCAA tournament bid.

Coach Dana Altman is looking to the game as important, but he has not pinned all his hopes on it.

"We have to win two or three games somewhere down the line," Altman said. "These two and one in the tournament — or three in the tournament — or Iowa state and two in the tournament. I think we need three games — well, two or three games, anyway."

"We really aren't talking that much about it as a team. I think we really just need to worry about Missouri. We have to get one before we get two."

As the season ends, K-State takes a respectable 17-9 overall record into its final two games. On the bad side, the conference record is just 4-8, placing the team in sixth place in the Big Eight.

"I know it has been disappointing for the team, and it has been disappointing for the coaching staff, also," Altman said.

The Cats lost to the Huskers on Saturday, 86-77, in Lincoln. In the win, Nebraska scored almost 50 percent of its points in the paint. Altman and his players considered a breakdown on defense as the reason for the loss.

"We'll bounce back, and we'll be ready to play," Altman said. "Our basketball team will compete and will fight and be ready to go."

K-State has been practicing every day since the loss in Nebraska, and Altman said the Cats will not suffer from a let-down.

"They're a good group of young men, and they've got some goals and want to accomplish some things," Altman said. "So, they bounce back and listen pretty well. They know what is ahead of them and know it is going to be a tough game."

The Cats must be in top form if they hope to bring down the Tigers. Missouri has already tied up the league championship and is ranked No. 6 in the Associated Press rankings.

"I think they have played as well in the conference season as any team that I've ever seen since I've been at Kansas State — and as well as any team during the season," Altman said.

"I think their depth is really good. I think their leadership is good. I think they have more goals than just the conference championship — which they already have. I think they will be a team that can go a long way," he said.

While the Tigers have dominated this season, K-State has been the team to pull the Tigers' tail while in Manhattan.

Missouri has been ranked three times coming into Bramlage and has lost each time. The last time the Tigers were in town, the Cats defeated them 78-67. That loss was the last by the Tigers to a Big Eight team. Missouri has won 16-straight games against conference foes since then.

K-State has won the last two matches in Manhattan but will need to play a solid game to continue the run.

"We have to make it happen against Missouri to keep that streak going," Altman said. "We are going to have to have an outstanding effort from all our team and make it click all night."

Earlier this season, the Cats lost in Columbia, 63-43, in their Big Eight season opener.

The physical play by the Tigers has helped them dominate their games all season. Altman said the Tigers' style of play will be a fac-

"I think it is going to be a physical game, and I think our players will be ready for it," Altman said. "When we went to Missouri, we weren't ready for their physical nature."

The game against Missouri also marks the last home game for four K-State seniors: Anthony Beane, Deryl Cunningham, Askia Jones and Ron Lucas.

"It is a group that I am going to hate see go," Altman said. "We've had two junior-college transfers, Anthony Beane and Ron Lucas, who added a lot to our program, a five-year guy, Ski Jones, who has been through a lot here at Kansas State and will probably leave as our third all-time leading scorer, and Deryl Cunningham, who has been around for four years."

"I've always felt D.C. had the talent to do a number of things for us," he said.

"They have been a solid group and one that I think represented Kansas State very well," he said.

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Leonard Coleman was unanimously elected National League president on Tuesday and will immediately replace Bill White.

Drought, flood focus of event

KRISTEN WELBORN
Collegian

A conference focusing on the use of water and Kansas' recent wet and dry spells will begin today in the Union Big 8 Room.

The theme for this year's Water and the Future of Kansas conference is "Kansas: Land of Drought and Flood."

The theme was partly chosen because while floods have plagued parts of Kansas during the past year, other areas in the state were drought stricken, Donald Erickson, Cooperative Extension Service agriculture economist, said.

"There's been a lot of talk on the recent floods," Erickson said. "People want to know how to work land that's been flooded."

The conference will also focus on the quantity and quality of the water in the state, Janice Nikkel, conference coordinator, said. Farmers interested in pollution control, rural water departments and professionals in water design will be attending the conference, Erickson said.

Students and faculty interested in learning more about Kansas' water situation can also attend.

Other topics will include the history of Kansas river flows, aquifers and future disaster programs.

The conference will begin with registration at 9 a.m. and continue Thursday until noon, Erickson said.

The conference is sponsored by Extension, Kansas Water Resources

Research Institute, the College of Agriculture and the Division of Continuing Education.

A crowd of 200-250 people attended last year's convention, and as many or more people are expected to attend this year's conference, Erickson said.

DROUGHT AND FLOOD

Registration for the "Kansas: Land of Drought and Flood" conference will be from 9 to 10 a.m. today outside of the Big 8 room.

Topics of the conference will include the history of Kansas river flows, aquifers and future disaster programs.

Student to vie for Miss Kansas

MEREDITH REILLY
Collegian

After winning the second pageant she ever entered, Amy Graber, sophomore in elementary education, has the opportunity to compete for the title of Miss Kansas in June.

"In order to compete in the state pageant, I had to compete in the regional pageant," Graber said. "I won the Miss Arkansas Valley title."

The regional pageant took place in November in Belle Plaine, south of Wichita.

It was Graber's hairdresser who originally recommended that she enter a regional competition.

"My hairdresser does the director of the Miss Cheney pageant's hair," Graber said. "She was asking my hairdresser one day if she knew of any girls who would be good for the contest. My hairdresser gave her my name."

Miss Cheney was Graber's first pageant. She was first runner-up in that competition, which led to her entering the Miss Arkansas Valley pageant.

"Different representatives from different pageants were there to talk to some of the girls after that competition," she said.

The representative of the Miss Arkansas Valley pageant encouraged her to enter her second pageant.

Joann Anderson, executive director of the Miss Arkansas Valley Pageant, said she got Graber's name from the person who directed the Miss Cheney pageant.

Anderson said she called Graber and encouraged her to enter the Miss Arkansas Valley pageant.

She is now helping Graber prepare for the state pageant.

"I am in charge of Amy. We meet and make decisions together," Anderson said. "I use my best experience to guide her in what decisions she makes."

Graber said she used to think she wouldn't compete in such a contest.

"I was a little hesitant at first because I always thought pageants were based primarily on looks and beauty, but it's really not that way at all.

"Forty percent of your score is based on talent, and that's part of what attracted me to compete."

Graber said singing "I Will Always Love You," written by Dolly Parton and performed by Whitney Houston, helped her win Miss Arkansas Valley.

However, for the state pageant, she has not decided what she will be singing. Anderson is helping her select what she will perform.

Fraser,

I've been thinking about what you said . . . and I'll do it! Meet me by Wesley Medical Center table at the Human Ecology Career Fair on Friday, KS Ballroom, 9-2.

Reporter says protecting source crucial

KRISTEN WELBORN
Collegian

Protecting source confidentiality is essential to guaranteeing journalists' First Amendment right to freedom of speech, a Wichita Eagle reporter and 1988 K-State graduate said Tuesday in the K-State Union Cottonwood Room.

Judy Lundstrom Thomas, a reporter for the Wichita Eagle, spoke as part of Freedom of Information Month about the difficulties she had covering the story of Rachel Shannon, who confessed to the August shooting of Dr. George Tiller, a Wichita abortion doctor.

The speech was sponsored by the professional chapter of Women in Communications Inc.

A former Collegian editor, Thomas has gained nationwide attention through her coverage of Shannon.

In August, Thomas began visiting Shannon in her jail cell, collecting information for a story.

In the process of working on her story, Thomas said, she endured obstacles.

"The guard walked by and said no notebooks were allowed," Thomas said.

She said she knew she couldn't write a story from memory and returned to jail several times in the following weeks. She also encouraged Shannon to call her at home.

When Shannon called Thomas from jail, Thomas recorded the conversation.

Thomas said she proceeded to write the story, which ran in early November. On the day the story ran, Shannon's attorney came to the Wichita Eagle offices with a subpoena asking for all information Thomas had relating to the interview with Shannon.

In December, Thomas and the Eagle were found in contempt of court because Thomas refused to submit interview notes and tape recordings of Shannon to the authorities. Thomas was ordered to turn over the information or face jail time.

Law-enforcement officials must prove two things to get a reporter's notes, Thomas said. The information must be compelling and critical to the case, and it must be a situation in which the information cannot be found anywhere else. The Eagle decided to turn over the tapes and notes to the judge, and after the judge reviewed them, he decided the defense didn't need them.

Thomas said the danger of forcing journalists to turn over interview notes is that it may make confidential sources reluctant to confide in reporters.

The case is ongoing, and Shannon's trial is postponed until March 21.

Exhibited photos convey depth, movement

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Renee Alpert and Douglas Kahn, both of whom are now residing in Kansas, have had a unique collaboration since 1987.

They are photographers, but not in the usual sense.

Their distinctive approach to photography is one of experimentation. They draw from the past to create new works of art.

Kahn started out as an architect with a degree from Pratt Institute. He eventually became a noted architectural photographer.

Alpert received a master of fine arts from Yale University.

Alpert shared the pair's techniques. She said they take pictures of structures created from tubing, lightbulbs and pieces of steel. Sometimes they will roll the camera on a tripod to create the appearance of movement.

After taking a few pictures of different structures, they place about two or three negatives, sandwiched on top of each other, on the holder. Then they expose them and enlarge them. After that, Alpert and Kahn take many different photos and arrange them in a collage.

The final project is nothing short of remarkable — a one-dimensional picture that has a certain depth.

Kahn's and Alpert's latest works have an added color to them. By adding solutions to the pictures after development, they have created a very different color. It doesn't appear to be cheap color photography, but as if it were painted.

An exhibit of work by Renee Alpert and Douglas Kahn is on display through March 11 in the Chang Gallery in Seaton Hall. The gallery is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Partial-credit grading seems unfair

Dear Cassie,

I am a student enrolled in Chemistry 2. On our first exam, the instructors implemented a new system for assigning credit for each question. It was structured as a free-response test, the same as Calculus. Partial credit was awarded for proper method. The test was worth 120 points and was graded on a flat scale.

After taking the exam, a number of my classmates and I were discussing the exam, and we felt it covered material that we were not prepared to deal with.

None of us scored above 55, and I scored 45. There were a number of zeros posted on the printout, and the highest score was a 110. The average seemed to lie in the 40-to-50 range.

The printout showed what points you received on each problem. This was to show partial credit. But little was given.

How can the instructors justify the fact that the class average was between 33 and 41 percent? We want to know what course of action we can take. Who can we turn to?

Help!

Violated and friends

Dear Violated,

Talk to the instructor and try to work it out. If this fails, talk with the department head. He or she will work with the student and the instructor. If you still don't have any luck, talk with the dean.

Hint — when you present your case to the instructor, do it as a group. There's power in numbers.

Houston, 'Aladdin' triumph

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Awards voters will always love Whitney Houston — at least this year.

And the magic carpet for the music to "Aladdin" rode high again at Tuesday night's 36th annual Grammys, winning five prizes.

For her single "I Will Always Love You," Houston took the honors for best pop female vocalist and record of the year, which she shared with producer David Foster. The album of the year Grammy went to the soundtrack of the movie "The Bodyguard."

Just three weeks ago, she collected eight trophies at the American Music Awards for the single and the soundtrack.

"I think everyone can dig and understand 'I Will Always Love You,'" she said backstage.

Dolly Parton, who wrote the torch song two decades ago, presented the Grammy to Houston. The single has been one of the fastest-selling in music history, and the movie soundtrack has sold more than 10 million copies.

The "Aladdin" soundtrack received four Grammys before the telecast began. During the CBS-TV special, "A Whole New World (Aladdin's Theme)" won for song of the year, a prize that went to the composers, Alan Menken and Tim Rice. Last year, the movie's music won two Academy Awards (for original score and song).

Peabo Bryson and Regina Belle won the award for best pop performance by a duo or group for singing "A Whole New World (Aladdin's Theme)."

The other awards for "Aladdin" include best musical album for children and best instrumental composition written for a motion picture or for television. The theme song also won as best song written for a movie or television.

Besides sharing the record and album of the year prizes, Foster won the Grammy as producer of the year for "I Will Always Love You" and for best instrumental arrangement of "When I Fall In Love" from the soundtrack of "Sleepless in Seattle."

"I just can't even believe that I'm up here at this point in my career," Foster said. "This is the greatest night of my life."

Tony Bennett and country star Mary-Chapin Carpenter also won Grammys as the recording industry honored its top performers. Other winners were Aerosmith for best rock group, and U2 for alternative music.

Bono of U2 was greeted with cheers and gasps during his acceptance speech when he used a four-letter word in delivering "a message to the young people of America."

He returned a short while later to present a lifetime achievement award to Frank Sinatra and apparently didn't stray from his prepared introduction.

"Rock 'n' roll people love Frank. He has what we want: swagger and attitude," Bono said. "He's big on attitude, serious on attitude — bad attitude. Frank's the chairman of bad attitude. I'm not going to mess with him, are you?"

After a standing ovation, a tearful Sinatra said: "That's the best welcome I ever had."

He took a couple of deep breaths trying to regain his composure, then said: "This is like being in baseball. The bases are loaded, and you're at bat. You don't know what you're going to do."

Carpenter, the country singer who grew up in New Jersey, won the best female country vocal performance. Lucinda Williams' "Passionate Kisses" received the award for best country song.

Dwight Yoakam won the Grammy for best male country vocal performance with "Ain't that Lonely Yet."

Bennett's "Steppin' Out" beat Barbra Streisand's "Back to Broadway" for best traditional pop vocal performance.

"What a thrill," Bennett said. "I don't know what Barbra's going to say about this."

Outside Radio City Music Hall, a group of protesters that included Kim Gordon of Sonic Youth and members of the Breeders criticized the elimination of the award for best female rock vocal.

Sting picked up two technical Grammys — best engineered album and best music video (long form) — as well as the award for best pop male vocalist.

The best new artist Grammy went to Toni Braxton, while multiple nominees Billy Joel, R.E.M. and Neil Young were shut out.

Besides Sinatra, other recipients of lifetime achievement awards were Aretha Franklin, the late jazz artist Bill Evans and pianist Arthur Rubinstein.

The academy also honored songwriter Curtis Mayfield, who was paralyzed four years ago.

Musicians pay tribute to Sinatra

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — They all stood and cheered Frank Sinatra on Tuesday night, old friends such as Tony Bennett, middle-aged rockers like Sting and Bonnie Raitt, youngsters from Whitney Houston to Digable Planets.

They all knew without him there might not even be a Grammy Awards.

"I'm delighted to see you all, and I hope we do this again from time to time," a tearful Sinatra said as he picked up a lifetime achievement award. "I'm not going away, and I hope to get to see you and get to know some of you. It's important to me, very important."

Only CBS, which aired the Grammys, seemed unmoved. Sinatra's speech was cut off for a commercial break.

Audiences, thankfully, got to catch the whole warmup act. Just minutes after stunning the crowd by using a four-letter word in winning for best alternative music album, U2's Bono offered an intense, irreverent tribute to the 78-year-old Chairman of the Board.

"Frank never did like rock 'n' roll, and he's not crazy about guys wearing earrings, either," the Irish singer said, assuring everyone Sinatra "doesn't hold it against me."

Bono, who sang "I've Got You Under My Skin" on Sinatra's "Duets" album, then cited him as an influence on all rock 'n' rollers.

"Rock 'n' roll people love Frank. He has what we want: swagger and attitude. He's big on attitude, serious on attitude, bad attitude. Frank's the chairman of bad attitude. Rock 'n' roll players have been tough, but this guy is boss. The chairman of boss. I'm not going to mess with him, are you?"

Sinatra, visibly moved by Bono's words, shook his hand and then struggled to compose himself.

"That's the best welcome I ever had," he said. "This is like being in baseball — the bases are loaded, you're at bat. You don't know what you are going to do."

After the commercial break, program host Garry Shandling apologized for the abrupt cutaway.

"Mr. Sinatra should have finished his speech," he said. "I think that was a slight mistake."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN WEEKLY SPORTS SECTION

MARCH 2, 1994

BIG 8 BASKETBALL

PREVIEW FOR MARCH 5-6

Colorado at Oklahoma State

Where: Stillwater, Okla.
When: 1 p.m., Saturday, March 5
Records: CU, 10-14, 2-10;
OSU, 20-7, 9-3
Series: Oklahoma State leads, 46-41

Colorado lost twice last week to Oklahoma State and Kansas. The Buffaloes have lost their last five games since beating K-State almost four weeks ago and have lost eight of their last 10 contests.

Donnie Boyce is fifth in rebounding at 8.7 rebounds and fifth in blocked shots with 1.2 blocks per Big Eight game, yet he plays point guard for the Buffaloes.

Boyce will probably earn first-team all-Big Eight honors for the second-consecutive year. He is first in scoring (25 points a league game), fourth in assists (4.8 assists a game) and fourth in steals (1.9 steals per contest).

The 72 rebounds Kansas had against Colorado last week was the most given up by a Buffalo team. The previous record was 71 rebounds by Oklahoma State on Dec. 29, 1972.

Oklahoma State won at Colorado and at Iowa State last week, giving the Cowboys their fourth-consecutive 20-plus win season.

Brooks Thompson's 90 three-pointers place him fifth on the conference single-season list. He needs 23 treys to replace former Jayhawk Terry Brown's record of 111.

Nebraska at Missouri

Where: Columbia, Mo.
When: 3 p.m., Saturday, March 5
Records: NU, 16-8, 6-6;
MU, 22-2, 12-0
Series: Nebraska leads, 44-34

Nebraska beat Kansas and K-State last week at home and moved into fourth place in the league standings after losing two road games at Oklahoma and Oklahoma State two weeks ago.

In winning four of their last six games, the Cornhuskers are shooting 201 of 345 (58.6) percent from the field. In its 96-87 win against Kansas, Nebraska became only the second team this season to shoot better than 50 percent from the floor vs. the Jayhawks at 54.2 percent.

Missouri won the regular-season title last week with a win against Oklahoma and gained a non-conference win over Southeast Missouri State. The Tigers extended their winning streak past conference foes to 16. The last loss was at K-State nearly a year ago.

The 16 wins is the highest since Kansas won 18 in a row in the 1969-70 and 1970-71 seasons. The Jayhawks own the all-time best string of 34 games from 1921-22 to 1923-24. This is the second-longest conference winning streak since Missouri won 21-consecutive contests from 1918-19 through 1919-20.

Kansas at Oklahoma

Where: Norman, Okla.
When: 3 p.m., Saturday, March 6
Records: KU, 22-6, 7-5;
OU, 14-10, 5-7
Series: Kansas leads 118-58

Kansas lost at Nebraska but beat Colorado this week, ending a three-game losing streak — the first since dropping eight-straight games in the 1988-89 probation year.

The Jayhawks' 72 rebounds against the Buffaloes broke a school record of 67 rebounds vs. Missouri on Feb. 16, 1957. Scott Pollard led the way with 11 rebounds. The Big Eight record for most rebounds by one team is Oklahoma with 86 rebounds.

Greg Ostertag tops the conference in blocked shots with 39 swats in 12 league games.

Oklahoma lost two games last week to Iowa State and at Missouri and has dropped five of its last seven games.

Jeff Webster continues to rank as the Division I second-leading scorer with 2,165 points in his career. Webster needs 111 points to pass Tim McCalister for the second-leading career scorer at Oklahoma with 2,278 points.

Other conference games

March 2 — Oklahoma State at Nebraska, Oklahoma at Colorado;
March 3 — Iowa State at Kansas.

Time keeps ticking

K-State hopes to down Missouri after plummeting to 6th in the conference

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State has been able to let its offense slide a little all season, just enough to squeak by relying heavily on its defense.

Until last Saturday, "Defensively, that was an embarrassment," K-State coach Dana Altman said after Nebraska handed the Wildcats an 86-77 loss in Lincoln, Neb. "We are a better defensive team than that."

"We scored enough points to win that game. But defensively, my gosh, I can't believe that was our team."

It was the Cats, alright. The same team that took the loss and found itself buried at sixth place in the Big Eight Conference with only two games left on its regular-season schedule.

"Our defense just broke down," said Deryl Cunningham, who scored 14 points and grabbed 14 rebounds. "Our team defense was terrible, and our man-to-man defense was terrible."

Cunningham said the driving force behind the Cats' game is usually defense.

"Our defense keeps us in the game," he said. "No matter how badly we played offensively this year, if we played defense, we've been right there to the end."

NU scored 25 of its 34 buckets in the paint.

Altman said he and his team will have to resolve their problems before playing host to Missouri at 7 p.m. today in Bramlage Coliseum.

"We will just need to sit down when we get home ... and get something figured out," Altman said.

"If we are going to play Missouri tough and play them a competitive ballgame, we are going to have to guard them a lot better than we did (against Nebraska)," he said.

Both Altman and Nebraska coach Danny Nee considered Saturday's game a must-win in light of the NCAA Tournament.

Nebraska and K-State were both on the tournament bubble, but the Cats will now have to finish strong for a shot at the Big Dance.

"Yeah, we are going to have to go and win two and make a lot happen in the tournament," Altman said.

In order for K-State to climb the standings before the Big Eight Tournament March 11-13, it will have to dethrone Missouri, which has made a relentless sweep through the conference.

The Tigers have built a 12-0 record and have clinched the Big Eight title.

On the other end is Iowa State. K-State has already beat the Cyclones once this season, a 76-70 win in Manhattan.

Two wins or two losses could mean a seed of anywhere from fifth to seventh in the Big Eight Tournament for K-State, depending on what other league teams do this week.

But it all starts with Missouri.

"If we don't come out to play, and if we don't play tough, we will all be going home pretty soon," Cunningham said.

◀ K-State's Belvis Noland misses the ball, fouling Nebraska's Jamar Johnson during the Wildcats' 86-77 loss at Lincoln last Saturday. The Cats, 4-8 and sixth in Big Eight Conference, play host to 12-0 Missouri tonight at Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State recruits faring well in high-school ball

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

K-State's 1994 basketball recruiting class is not much different from recruiting classes in the past.

Not only are they good basketball players, they are also outstanding athletes.

The first to sign with the Wildcats was Mark Young, a 6-foot-6 point guard from McKinley High School in Baton Rouge, La.

"He is a great ball handler and has tremendous speed and jumping ability," Roosevelt Brown, Young's high school coach, said.

Brown said Young is averaging eight assists and 17 points a game for McKinley High School, whose record is 25-5.

"He has a lot of outstanding scorers around him right now, which has taught him to be an unselfish player," Brown said.

Probably the most versatile player among the signees is 6-foot-2 guard Ayome "Paco" May from Lancaster, Texas.

May averages 15 points, seven rebounds, four assists and four steals a game for Lancaster High School.

"He will give K-State some versatility," Joe Rushing, May's high school coach, said.

Rushing said May has shown the most improvement this season on defense.

"He moves his feet well," Rushing said.

"He should know how to play Division-I defense the minute he steps onto the floor."

May has an explosive first step when driving to the basket and outstanding jumping ability, Rushing said.

Lancaster High School moved into the Texas state playoffs last week with a 29-1 record.

Aaron Schwartzendruber, a 6-foot-2 guard from Kolona, Iowa, is shooting 59 percent from the field, including 48 percent from behind the three-point line.

"He does more than just shoot," said Dwight Kingeridge, Schwartzendruber's coach at Iowa Mennonite High School. "He is a complete player."

Kingeridge said Schwartzendruber will be challenged in Big Eight Conference, but he could contribute immediately because he plays outstanding defense.

"He's a very humble kid," Kingeridge said.

"He plays hard and with a lot of emotion, but he never tries to attract any attention to himself."

He had a .488 batting average in baseball last spring and qualified for the Iowa State Track and Field Championships in the 110-meter hurdles.

K-State's fourth signee of the year is Michael Bowens, a 6-foot-7 forward from Flossmoor, Ill., a suburb of Chicago.

Bowens averaged 21 points, 11 rebounds, three assists and three blocked shots a game through the first 16 games of the season.

Bowens scored 38 points in one of their contests earlier in the season.

The next signing period runs from April 13 to May 15.

No names of players have been mentioned for this period.

K-STATE PEOPLE: THEN AND NOW

Auker arrives as student, leaves as pitching hero

Eldon Auker played for the Boston Red Sox during the 1939 season. Prior to Boston, he played for the Detroit Tigers. Auker finished his career playing for the St. Louis Browns. He had 130 wins — 126 of them were complete games.

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

He has been called the greatest athlete in K-State history.

Looking at Eldon Auker's statistics, it's easy to see why. A standout in three sports at K-State from 1930 to 1932, Auker earned all-conference honors in football, basketball and baseball and was K-State's first major leaguer.

But Auker didn't come to Manhattan to be a sports hero — his goal was to get a degree.

"I came to Manhattan to get an education," Auker said. "I loved school, and I wanted to study medicine."

In fact, Auker's collegiate sports career got its start by accident.

"I played sports throughout high school in Norcatur, but I didn't plan on playing in college," Auker said. "But, the spring of my freshman year, I was out kicking a football around on the practice field one day when Coach (A.N.) McMillin saw me. He said I should try out for the team, and it was a nice surprise when I made it."

While Auker loved sports and enjoyed playing for the Cats, it took years of hard work and dedication to survive.

"This was during the Great Depression, so if you had a job, you were very lucky," Auker said. "I swept and mopped the Rexall Drug Store at 5:30 every morning for a dollar a day, which was how I got myself through school."

Averaging 17 1/2 hours per semester while starring in three sports, Auker graduated in four years. He earned his degree in physical education, the equivalent to today's pre-med program.

When the football and baseball scouts came calling for Auker, he was interested mainly because he needed the money to pay for medical school.

While Auker said he enjoyed football more, baseball was the "all-American" sport at the time, and it paid much higher salaries.

"The Chicago Bears, who were dominating the league at the time, offered me $500 a game with a 12-game guarantee," Auker said. "But when the Detroit Tigers made me choose between football and baseball, I chose baseball for the money."

Auker joined a mediocre Detroit team in 1933, but just a year later, he found himself pitching the Tigers on to a pennant and eventually to the World Series. One of Auker's biggest moments on the mound occurred on his birthday in 1934.

"I pitched a 2-0 shutout against the St. Louis Browns the day we clinched our first pennant, which was also on my birthday, so that was a pretty special day for me," Auker said.

Although the Tigers eventually lost the World Series to the St. Louis Cardinals, they came back in 1935 to win against the Chicago Cubs.

"Winning the pennant and then the Series was just a great thrill," Auker said. "It brought so much joy to the city of Detroit, which had been devastated by the Depression. It was just like Christmas."

Auker's career with the Tigers ended in 1939, when they traded him to the Boston Red Sox. Auker arrived in Boston just as the Sox were bringing up a promising young rookie — Ted Williams.

"Ted was about 19 or 20 years old when I met him," Auker said. "He was a fine young boy who was really dedicated to the game. Mrs. Auker and I would invite him over for dinner many times."

The 1939 season was not an enjoy-

ELDON AUKER

Then: Auker carried 17 1/2 hours per semester while starring in baseball, basketball and football at K-State. After graduating, he played baseball for the Detroit Tigers, Boston Red Sox and St. Louis Browns.

Now: Auker lives in Vero Beach, Fla., with his wife Mildred. The pair, who met at K-State, just celebrated their 61st wedding anniversary.

able one for Auker, as he and the Red Sox manager had different approaches to the game. At the end of the season, Auker requested that he be traded, or he would quit baseball. He wound up playing for the St. Louis Browns for three years, ending his career in 1942 with 130 career wins. Out of those victories, 126 were complete games.

Auker had already gone into business four years before he left the game, and in 1948, he joined the Midwest Abrasive Company. He soon worked his way up to vice president of marketing for the Bay State Abrasive Company in Massachusetts, where he was president for eight years before retiring in 1974.

While Auker still follows baseball, he says the game just isn't the same.

"When I played, the players were all very close," Auker said. "We were like a college team, like brothers. Now, it seems like there is much less team spirit. The players seem more concerned about their individual statistics than how well the team performs."

The last time Auker made a trip to Manhattan was in 1990, when he was inducted into the K-State Sports Hall of Fame. He was previously inducted into the Kansas Sports Hall of Fame in 1969.

Auker resides in Vero Beach, Fla., where he and his wife, Mildred, celebrated their 61st wedding anniversary Feb. 18.

Looking back on all the honors he earned as a student-athlete at K-State, Auker said one thing stands out above the rest.

"I met Mildred at K-State, and she was the best prize I ever won."

AUKER'S CAREER

Auker led a distinguished career in baseball on several teams.

■ 1933-39: Detroit Tigers — He led the Tigers to a pennant and a World Series.

■ 1939: Boston Red Sox — Auker had just one year with the Sox, asking to be traded at the end of the season.

■ 1940-42: He played for the St. Louis Browns for three years.

Auker had 130 career wins. Of the victories, 126 were complete games.

Finally, something for college that just got less expensive.

Angela Showalter catches her breath after running the women's 800-meter recently at the K-State Invitational Septathlon/Heptathlon.

K-State track still strong

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Nicole Green's time of 53.79 seconds in the 400 meters at the Big Eight Track and Field Championship Saturday in Oklahoma City, Okla., may qualify her for the national meet.

Green's 400-meter finish was second to Shanelle Porter of Nebraska, who won the event in 53.74 and is the defending NCAA champion. The two times ranked them first and second in the nation as of Saturday.

"Nicole really had a good meet," K-State coach Cliff Rovelto said. "The times she has will easily qualify her for the national meet."

Green also finished second behind Porter in the 200 meters.

K-State did not compete as a team in the meet because of NCAA sanctions, which were levied this fall after former coach John Capriotti admitted to illegally paying athletes.

The only returning Big Eight champion for the men was Travis Livingston in the 55-meter hurdles.

Livingston failed to defend his Big Eight title when he finished second behind Nebraska's Isaac Carson, who won the event in a time of 7.37 seconds.

"Travis is a great hurdler, and he ran well," Rovelto said. "But Carson had a better time than him coming into the meet, so it wasn't a big surprise."

The high-jumping duo of Ed Broxterman and Itai Margalit tied for third in the high jump with leaps of 6 feet, 11 inches. The event marked the first time of the season in which Broxterman did not clear 7' or higher.

Margalit added a third-place finish in the triple jump with a jump of 49'7".

"Usually, the conference meet is all about scoring points for the team," Rovelto said. "If that were the case for us this year, then Itai contributed more than anyone."

Perhaps the biggest surprise of the day came when Lesley Wells captured K-State's only Big Eight title in the 1,000 meters.

Rovelto said Wells ran an outstanding race, but her winning time of 2:55.02 was a full 10 seconds slower than the Big Eight record.

"I went into the race trying to think positive," Wells said. "I told myself I was as good as anyone else on the line and there are no more excuses."

Linda Shea repeated her second-place performance from a year ago in the 600 meters with a time of 1:24.01.

The accomplishment was greater than it appears, Rovelto said, because the only time she runs on a track is at meets.

Because of a stress fracture in her lower leg, Shea does all of her training in a swimming pool.

"I felt all of the women competed very well at this meet," Rovelto said.

Francis O'Neill placed third in the 3,000 meters with a time of 8:07.6. However, his chances of qualifying for the NCAA Championships are uncertain, Rovelto said.

The top 12 runners in the nation will qualify for the meet. O'Neill has been ranked 11th for most of the season, Rovelto said.

Freshmen Karissa Owens and Angela Showalter both produced third-place finishes in their first conference championships.

"I was nervous, but not much more than usual," Showalter said. "I felt like I ran well."

Showalter's times in the preliminaries and the finals were her two fastest of the year. Members of the team who are close to qualifying times and distances will have one more chance next Saturday at the Nebraska Last Chance Meet.

Rovelto said the team will know for sure who will participate in the NCAA Championships by either Sunday or Monday.

Nebraska swept both the men's and the women's team titles at the Big Eight Track and Field Championships on Saturday.

Double winners Kwani Stewart and Porter led the women to their 15th-straight title. Combined with their 14-straight outdoor titles, the Nebraska women have won 29-straight conference titles.

The Nebraska women finished with 175 points. Kansas and Oklahoma tied for second with 88 points apiece.

"Shanelle's performance, far and away, was best of the meet," Rovelto said. "She was the outstanding performer of the meet as far as I'm concerned."

Porter captured conference titles in the 200 meters, the 400 meters and as a member of the Cornhuskers' mile-relay team.

Nebraska's men used a meet-record performance in the 1,000-run by Balazs Togyesi to complete the sweep of the team competition. Togyesi covered the distance in 2:24.8.

The Cornhusker men had 143 points. Iowa State claimed second place with 119 points.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Coaches foresee parity in tournament

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Anything can happen in the Big Eight Tournament.

Just ask Kansas coach Marian Washington, whose Jayhawks defeated the No. 1-seeded Colorado Buffaloes last season for the tournament championship.

"I think that this year's tournament will be just as competitive as last year's," Washington said. "I expect it to be extremely competitive, and each game — except the Iowa State-Colorado game — should be close."

Colorado coach Ceal Barry said to look for some surprising results from the three-day event which starts March 5 at the Bicentennial Center in Salina.

"There is a lot more balance this year," Barry said. "There will definitely be some upsets, because it is tough to win on three consecutive nights."

For the second-straight season, the Buffaloes will enter with the top seed of the tournament, and they will play No. 8 Iowa State. The last time ISU and Colorado met in the tournament, the Cyclones upset the Buffs 71-60 in 1990.

This season, the Buffs enter with the No. 3 ranking in the country despite having some weak points, Barry said.

"I've been surprised we have been able to play so well," Barry said. "Jamillah Lang has had a tremendous Big Eight season this year."

"She prepared at the beginning of June for this season."

Kansas, the No. 2 seed, faces Missouri, the No. 7 seed. Earlier this season, the Tigers upset the Jayhawks in Columbia, but KU evened the score with a victory in Lawrence.

Washington said the Jayhawks are peaking at the right time for post-season play.

"I think that I have always worked to peak at the tournament," Washington said. "This year's team has a lot of potential. We ended up with only eight players due to injuries, and four of those were freshmen. I've been pleasantly surprised with their success and performance."

Then comes K-State and

Oklahoma State. OSU enters the game as the No. 3 seed and possible NCAA Tournament contender. The Wildcats enter as the No. 6 seed, but they defeated the Cowgirls earlier this season in Bramlage Coliseum.

Just two weeks ago, the Cowgirls returned the favor to the Cats by stomping them 55-43 in Stillwater, Okla. In that game, the Cats committed 24 turnovers and 22 fouls.

The Cats' two leading scorers, Shanelle Stires and Shawnda DeCamp, were both held to just 15 points. That was the Cowgirls' game plan, Coach Dick Halterman said.

"We did a better job of holding those two," Halterman said. "I think that they scored 51 points against us up in Manhattan, so our game plan was to hold them to around their average."

K-State coach Brian Agler said the Cats played poorly.

"We played scared. We didn't have the passion to play against Oklahoma State."

That leaves No. 4 Nebraska playing No. 5 Oklahoma. Those two teams also split games this season, but the Cornhuskers held the advantage in league play with a 9-5 conference record. The Sooners finished with a 7-7 league record.

Balance seems to be the theme for this season's first round of the tournament, because three of the four opening-round games involve teams that split during the regular season.

Another highlight to the tournament is that the last two Most Valuable Players are returning for this season's tournament.

Lang, from Washington High in Kansas City, Kan., earned the title in 1992 when she led the Buffaloes to the championship with 57 points and 16 rebounds in three games. She also is the 10th leading scorer in tournament history.

Kansas junior Angela Aycock earned the award last season while leading the Jayhawks to the crown. In three games, the 6-foot-2 guard averaged 19.7 points and nine rebounds. In the championship game against Colorado, Aycock had a double-double with 20 points and 12 rebounds.

Hawks sweep K-State women's basketball

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

Kansas proved why it is nationally ranked when the Jayhawks outlasted K-State, 65-54, Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

The No. 12-ranked Jayhawks used a 26-4 run at the end of the first half and the beginning of the second to deny the Cats' upset bid.

K-State coach Brian Agler said the key to the game was the Cats' poor shooting from the field. For the game, K-State shot only 31 percent.

"I looked at the stat sheet, and I thought we were doing the things we needed to do, but we could not score," Agler said. "We definitely hit a drought."

On the other hand, the Jayhawks shot 49 percent from the floor for the game.

"When I went to a player-to-player defense, we played better," Kansas coach Marian Washington said. "It forced them to rush their shots."

"We got into the passing lanes and rebounded well. We worked hard to push the ball, and we were able to get a couple of quick baskets."

The Jayhawks improved to 20-4 overall, 11-3 in the league, while the Wildcats dropped to 12-13 overall, 5-9 in conference play.

Shanelle Stires, who led K-State with 17 points, said the Jayhawks pressure caused the Cats some problems on offense.

"We played into their style of game, and we hurried out shots," Stires said. "We know we are capable of stopping a run."

"Most of their shot were lay-ups — and that's a breakdown in defense — while we were shooting 18 to 20 feet away."

Another key to the Jayhawks' success was holding Shawnda DeCamp to just 14 points on three-of-17 shooting.

"Her team set some good picks on me," said Angela Aycock, who was responsible for holding DeCamp on defense. "Our quickness on defense recovered, and we were able to get a hand in her face."

Washington said Kansas wanted to contain DeCamp from scoring.

"We wanted DeCamp to work hard, though we trailed her in the first half," Washington said. "In the second half, she went to the hole and got a couple of fouls on us."

Agler said Kansas controlled the tempo for most of the game.

"They were out gambling and rushing our shots," Agler said. "They got the rebounds, outlet the ball and had a fast break. We tried to slow them down, but we didn't make the shots."

"Plus, we gave up 41 points in the first half, and that put us in the hole."

With the Big Eight Conference Tournament coming up, the Cats could face the Jayhawks again, if they can survive the first round.

Agler said his team wouldn't be afraid of playing the Hawks for the third time this season.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

KU's Angela Aycock looks for an open teammate while JoMoree Grattan plays defense. The Jayhawks downed the Cats, 65-54.

"They think that we can beat KU. I think we can beat KU, and I hope to play them in the tournament," Agler said.

Before heading to the tournament in Salina this weekend, the Cats will play their final home game of the season against Sacramento State on Thursday. The game against Sacramento State, scheduled to begin at 7 p.m., will be the final home game for three seniors — Andrea O'Neal, Lynn Holzman and Gretchen Bertrand.

Netters gain 1st home victory

The K-State women's tennis team took a break from the road last weekend, playing its first two home meets this season.

The Wildcats picked up their first victory of the season in Manhattan by downing Creighton on Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

K-State shut out the Blue Jays 9-0 to make up for a 6-3 loss at the hands of Louisiana State on Friday.

The win Saturday moved the Cats' record to 3-4 on the season.

Fayetteville, Ark., will be the next stop for the Cats as they will take on Arkansas on Friday and Baylor on Saturday.

Coach Steve Bietau said he was pleased with the Cats' progress during the home stand.

"I think it was a productive weekend. In the Creighton match, I thought we did a good job of taking care of business," Bietau said.

"It was a match we should have won."

Masha Meidell, who was playing in the No. 1 spot for the first time for K-State, made quick work of Nelly Pardo of LSU, winning 6-3, 6-1. On Saturday, Meidell defeated Cheryl Meyer of Creighton 6-2, 6-1.

In doubles, Meidell teamed up with

Alexandra Thome to beat Meyer and Jean Fougerson of Creighton, but they fell to LSU's No. 1 doubles team of Cymantha Owen and Pardo 6-1, 6-4.

Thome picked up a hard-fought victory in the No. 2 spot on Saturday.

The freshman from Costa Rica outlasted Leslie Whiting of Creighton to win 7-5, 7-5.

Martine Shrubsole came back from a three-set loss to Kristy Llewellyn of LSU to knock off Traci Miller of Creighton 3-6, 6-3, 6-4.

On Saturday, Shrubsole teamed up with Nicole Lagerstrom to beat Creighton's Kristen Baird and Elizabeth McBurney 6-2, 6-2 in doubles.

This was the first match for Lagerstrom since recovering from an illness.

Karen Nicholson and Summer Ruckman were the only two netters to pick up a pair of singles wins over the weekend.

On Saturday, the pair teamed up to beat Creighton's Whiting and Miller 6-2, 6-1 in the No. 2 doubles position.

A late addition to the roster on Friday, Brooke Brundidge played some of the best tennis of her collegiate career in two matches.

Brundidge said she was pleased with her play on Friday despite falling to LSU's

Margaret Sale in a hard-fought match 6-7 (8-6), 6-2, 6-3.

"It really felt good to play a match that I knew counted for the whole team," Brundidge said.

"Although it was very frustrating, I can't be disappointed because I felt like I played well."

The difference between the LSU match and the match against Creighton was obvious for freshman Karen Nicholson.

"Friday was a different match. I had ideas of what I wanted to do, but I wasn't clear," Nicholson said.

"Today, I knew what I wanted to do."

Freshmen class continues to deliver for Wildcats

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

When K-State baseball coach Mike Clark said he was expecting good things from members of his freshman class, he wasn't kidding.

Newcomer Scott Poepard is the latest recruit to step up for K-State, coming off a strong weekend at the plate in the Wildcats' weekend series against Arkansas.

Poepard, a native of Forest Lake, Minn., went 6-for-11 last weekend while starting at second base for the Cats. Before the series, Poepard was 2-for-5 in the Cats' games against Peru State.

"I thought I did pretty well," Poepard said. "I just tried to make contact with the ball, run it out and see what happened. I was pretty happy with it."

Before coming to K-State, Poepard racked up some all-star statistics in Minnesota and at the national level.

Leading the Forest Lake team to the national AAU title last summer, Poepard was named the AAU National Championship MVP, hitting .455 with 13 RBIs in the tournament. At the Minnesota All-Star games earlier in the summer, he batted .833 — good enough to earn MVP honors.

As a senior, Poepard hit .377 and led the Rangers to a second-place finish in the state championship. Earning all-metro honors his last two years, he was also a two-time, all-conference selection.

Recruited by Nebraska, Bradley, Butler and Creighton, Poepard liked what K-State had to offer.

"I just liked the atmosphere here with the players and the college," Poepard said. "It was also an opportunity to play my first year."

While the rest of the K-State squad struggled a bit against the Razorbacks, Poepard credits his teammates for not giving up in the Cats' first outing against a Division I school.

"We played pretty well, considering how we came out the first day," he said. "I think that humbled us a little bit. We may have thought we were a little better than we were going into that. But after that game, we really picked it up."

"We came out and won the next day, which I thought showed a lot of character, and then the last day, we played well. We just made little mistakes here and there."

With the Cats just starting to see more talented teams, Poepard says the players are feeling more comfortable with each game.

"I think everyone is a little more confident, because they've seen good pitching, and a lot of guys saw that they can hit that," he said.

Poepard said he also credits the K-State veterans for helping the newcomers adjust.

"The older guys on the team have been great," he said. "They've welcomed the freshmen in real well. I couldn't have asked for anything better."

Emergencies may be exception to rule

Local governments may meet, bypass Open Meetings Act

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Local governments may soon be able to legally meet during emergencies without notifying the public, the Kansas House of Representatives voted Wednesday.

The House approved the bill 98-27, which would allow governmental bodies a broader interpretation of the Open Meetings Act. The bill would also make quasi-governmental bodies, agencies and corporations subject to the Open Meetings Act.

The bill states that local governments would no longer be required to notify the public of meetings during emergency conditions at which only administrative actions are discussed or taken.

This provision has raised concerns from area journalists, including Jon Brake, editor and publisher of the Manhattan Free Press.

"If you don't know of a meeting, you can't go cover it," Brake said. "It means so much because the public, most of the public, can't go to every meeting. They rely on the press to go to the meetings and report on what's happening."

Brake said he feels suspending the law in the case of an emergency would open up the opportunity for public officials to meet anytime they want without notifying anyone.

During last summer's floods, the city commission met at least five times without notification, Brake said. He said it was common for public officials to forget to call anybody or to assume that someone else was handling it.

While in some cases notifying the public during an emergency might be difficult, Helen Cooper, Manhattan city commissioner, said the emergency meeting would still be an open meeting.

Emergencies don't happen that often, she said, and while a two-day advance notice of the meeting might not be possible, generally an effort is made to get in touch with the press, Cooper said.

The emergency provision would not be a means of hindering public access to meetings, she said.

"All open meetings are publicized," Cooper said. "Not only do we publicize our regular meetings, we televise them, too. This broadens the number of people that can watch what's going on."

Publicity and notification of meetings has not caused problems

SPACE SHUTTLE

K-State scientists gear up for second mission

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

It is time to blast off again. K-State scientists will have six experiments in the payload of the space shuttle Columbia, said Terry Johnson, BioServe director and distinguished professor of biology.

This is the second shuttle mission for the K-State scientists in two months.

The launch was scheduled for 7:54 a.m. CST today at Cape Canaveral.

"About 15 investigators, which includes faculty, graduate students and undergraduates, are involved in these experiments," Johnson said.

The materials for the studies left Manhattan Tuesday morning, Johnson said. They were loaded onto the shuttle at least 24 hours before lift-off.

The payload will include studies of the effects space has on such things as cellular cell development, gene expression, skeletal changes and virus stability, Johnson said.

"We will have 60 test tubes, or what we call data points, on this flight," Johnson said.

Some of those data points will be from experiments initiated from Johnson's work. The space shuttle members will be studying human leukemia cells, Johnson said.

"When you add a certain molecule to the cancer cells, they stop growing, change shape and become specialized," he said. "We want to see if they respond to the molecule in a similar manner as they do here on Earth."

Another K-State shuttle study is the one developed by Stephen Keith Chapes, associate professor of biology, and Jason Armstrong, graduate student in biology.

This study will investigate how bone-marrow cells grow and develop in space, Chapes said.

The cell being studied is an important component of the immune system, Chapes said.

Results from previous experiments showed the cells grew rapidly in space, but they did not differentiate into the specialized cells as they would have on Earth, Armstrong said.

"What we are attempting in this experiment is to see if a naturally occurring hormone will restore the differentiation process of the cells," Chapes said.

"This hormone has a strong potential for people who have osteoporosis," he said. "This is all very theoretical right now, but we are laying the groundwork to show that indeed this hormone can be used."

WASHBURN UNIVERSITY

Bill may bring Washburn into Board of Regents system

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

TOPEKA - A bill that would bring Washburn University in Topeka into the state system received favorable recommendation from the Senate Ways and Means Committee by one vote Wednesday.

Sen. Barbara Lawrence, R-Wichita, and Sen. Steve Morris, R-Hugoton, said they were voting to recommend the bill so it could be debated, but would not support the bill in the Senate.

The bill would bring Washburn into the Kansas Board of Regents system in July 1997.

K-State president Jon Wefald and four other regent school presidents testified in favor of the bill at committee hearings Tuesday.

"This is the time. This is the place. This is the year to bring Washburn into the regents system," Wefald said.

Washburn is the last municipal university in the nation.

Dean Ferrell, Chairman of the Washburn University Board of Regents, said the state is getting a solid school with high-quality programs and a well-maintained campus.

"Washburn has been extremely successful in its 50-year history as a municipal university, but it is now time to take that final step and integrate Washburn into the state regents system of higher education," he said.

The Topeka city council unanimously adopted a resolution to support the bill, Ferrell said.

Sen. Alicia Salisbury, R-Topeka, told the committee the Shawnee County legislative delegation has also expressed unanimous support for the bill.

"The fact is Washburn is already a state university," Salisbury said, "but the regents do not govern its programs."

Washburn will receive $6 million this year in state aid even if this bill does not pass.

Washburn would be phased into the regents system. It would still be supported by an 18 mill Topeka property tax levy. Tuition increases at the school would be limited to increases equal to the Consumer Price Index until 2002 to allow it to catch up with tuition at peer schools.

Stephen Jordan, regents executive director, said Washburn's tuition is not expected to equal the Prosecutor examines death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The special prosecutor in the Whitewater case has decided to re-examine the conclusion that White House deputy counsel Vincent Foster committed suicide and will hire pathologists to review the evidence.

In court filings this week in New York, special counsel Robert Fiske revealed that forensic experts and pathologists will be retained as part of his Foster inquiry. They will make an independent analysis of the evidence that led U.S. Park Police to conclude Foster shot himself in a suburban park last July 20, a government official familiar with the probe said Wednesday.

Fiske made the decision to reopen the issue because questions have been raised in the press about whether it was a suicide, the official said, speaking only on the condition of anonymity.

Previously, Fiske had only said that all the events related to Foster's death would be reviewed.

News media reports have questioned some of the Park Police procedures and quoted paramedics who found the body as expressing some doubt about the suicide ruling.

There has been no change in the Park Police conclusion, which was

TEEN SWITCHED AT BIRTH SEEKS SHELTER AT YMCA

TAMPA, Fla. — Seven months ago, Kimberly Mays took the stand in a custody battle and tearfully recounted how she pleaded with the father who raised her after she was switched at birth in a hospital, "Please don't let them take me away."

Now she has run away from home to a Sarasota YMCA Youth Shelter for troubled teens. She voluntarily went to the shelter with the signed permission of Bob Mays, who won custody at a hearing in which the judge said Kimberly never had to see her biological parents again.

"Kimberly Mays is experiencing adolescent difficulties that are not uncommon for youth today," said a statement from Jack Greer, the shelter's executive director.

Kimberly has been at the shelter since last week.

"I don't think it has anything to do with the litigation or the decision in the case. It has to do with Kimberly being a teen-ager," attorney George Russ said Wednesday.

Russ helped the 15-year-old sever ties with her birth parents Ernest and Regina Twigg last August, ending a bitter, high-profile battle between the Twiggs and Mays over custody and visitation rights.

ISRAELI SOLDIERS KILL 2 PALESTINIAN YOUTHS

JERICHO, Occupied West Bank — Israeli soldiers killed two Palestinian youths Wednesday as they fled the Hebron mosque massacre spread to Jericho, where the PLO plans to set up its headquarters under a peace plan with Israel.

As part of an effort to curb the bloodletting, security forces disarmed seven extremist Jewish settlers in the occupied territories and banned them from Palestinian areas.

It was a radical move for the Israelis, though unlikely to placate Palestinians demanding the removal of Jewish settlements from the territories and international protection. Foreign Minister Shimon Peres reiterated the government's refusal to budge on the settlement issue.

But Peres, an advocate of flexibility, left the door open to further gestures. The government "is not blind" to the need to make concessions to the PLO to resume talks, he told Jewish media representatives in Jerusalem on Wednesday night.

Militant Palestinians, meanwhile, called for revenge attacks for the mosque massacre. And the government put its embassies and citizens abroad on alert. Rabin's terrorism adviser, Yigal Pressler, urged Israelis with gun permits to carry their weapons at all times.

KASSEBAUM CALLS FOR PRESIDENTIAL SUPPORT

WASHINGTON — President Clinton must support a package of relief measures being developed by oil-state senators to save an industry struggling with low crude prices, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum said.

Kassebaum, R-Kan., said Wednesday that prices in Kansas as low as $12 a barrel are threatening the viability of the industry and jeopardizing thousands of jobs tied to smaller marginal wells.

"Most of the nation's 450,000 marginal oil wells are unprofitable to produce at current prices," Kassebaum wrote to Clinton. "If these prices persist for much longer, many of these wells will be plugged and abandoned, which means that their reserves will be lost permanently."

She said as many as 50,000 wells could be abandoned this year if prices remain so low.

In Kansas, the break-even price for crude is $16.50 a barrel. About 35,000 of Kansas' 46,000 oil wells produce fewer than five barrels a day, making the state's industry one of the most threatened.

Kassebaum and other oil-state senators are working to find ways to support oil prices and reduce costs of operating.

POSTAL INCREASE TO COVER LOSSES

WASHINGTON — The post office is getting ready to ask Americans to ante up a few more cents to clear up its billion-dollar losses.

A decision to seek a rate increase could come as early as Tuesday, with stamp prices likely to rise to between 32 and 35 cents — 3 to 6 cents more than the current rate.

Each penny increase means an extra $920 million for the agency that lost $1.7 billion last year and expects to wind up $1.3 billion in the red this year.

BOSNIANS VIOLATE U.N. CEASE-FIRE

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian Serbs launched three rocket-propelled grenades Wednesday at government troop positions in Sarajevo, violating the U.N. cease-fire and raising fears that the city's recent calm will prove to be short-lived.

Outside the capital, Serbs pounded two Muslim enclaves and continued to block relief convoys — despite their encouraging promise a day earlier to open an airport in the region to relief flights.

U.N. officials said Serbs fired the three grenades at Bosnian positions around the Jewish cemetery in downtown Sarajevo. A U.N. representative, Lt. Col. Bill Aikman, said Serb artillery also fired Tuesday on the Muslim town of Breza, just north of Sarajevo.

While in both cases the Serbs clearly had breached the 3-week-old cease-fire, the attacks apparently were not serious enough to trigger a NATO airstrike under the alliance's Feb. 9 ultimatum.

Permits a possibility for cyclists

JEFFREY BARRETT
Collegian

Students riding bicycles to campus may enjoy the luxury of saving money, getting a parking spot and exercise.

Next year, those luxuries might cost $10, as bicycle permits may be required.

The bicycle-permit proposal will become policy July 31 if it is passed by the Kansas Board of Regents.

If the proposal is passed, bicycle permits will be available through Parking Services at $10 per year.

"It's basically for the financial support to buy materials," Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said.

Students now paying $30 per semester for a car permit also pay for the bicycle facilities too, he said.

"The bike program should pay for itself," Archer said.

"We need the finances for bike racks, paths, the printing of lines, signs and safety-tip pamphlets," he said.

The permit will be a decal that the rider will adhere to the frame of the bicycle. It will identify that bicycle and its owner by a number.

"If the bike is lost or stolen, we can identify it," Archer said. "In the event that a bike is chained to a handicap rail, tree or a light post, we can contact them."

Parking Services also has expressed a concern for the safety of bike riders, he said.

The funding from the permits would create guidelines and regulations for bicycle riders, he said.

"The need for having guidelines is coming out of the need for safety on campus," Archer said.

"A reason for the change is the numerous bicycle accidents, people riding on sidewalks and just operating their bicycles recklessly," Archer said.

There were 10 bicycle-related accidents on campus from January to November 1993, Annette Boddy, keyboard operator for campus police, said.

THE PRICE OF CAMPUS BIKING

Rehnquist denies request; Senator appeals subpoena

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist Wednesday denied Sen. Bob Packwood's request to withhold his diaries from the Senate Ethics Committee while he appeals the panel's subpoena.

Rehnquist said the senator's argument that the subpoena was overly broad "has been seriously undermined by the evidence, presented to the district court, that his diary transcripts and tapes have been altered."

"The evidence of tampering very likely renders all of the requested diary entries relevant to that investigation," the chief justice wrote.

Rehnquist also rejected Packwood's arguments that the ethics committee's subpoena violated his right to privacy under the Constitution's Fourth Amendment.

The chief justice noted that Packwood's lawyers did not quarrel with the legal standard used by the district court in denying his Fourth Amendment argument.

The Supreme Court recently denied review to a separate case that asked whether the Fifth Amendment protected people from having to produce their private papers, Rehnquist added.

Packwood's lawyer, Jacob Stein, did not immediately return a call seeking comment. The senator's press secretary, Bobbi Munson, said she did not know whether Packwood would make any further legal attempts to keep the diaries from the committee.

Packwood's lawyers argued in court papers that personal diaries are at the core of the right to privacy.

AIDS a loaded gun in the eyes of the law

The court has made it clear that while rape is unconscionable, raping someone when you are HIV-positive is even more so.

A jury in Miami has taken the law a step toward protecting citizens from people with AIDS who use their disease to threaten the lives of others.

In Miami on Monday, a Dade Circuit Court jury found a man guilty of kidnapping, lewd and lascivious assault, sexual battery and attempted murder.

The man has AIDS.

This case is the first prosecution of an HIV-positive rapist for first-degree attempted murder in the United States.

Ignacio A. Perea Jr. was found guilty of kidnapping and raping an 11-year-old who was riding his bicycle.

With this decision, the court has made it clear that while rape itself is unconscionable, raping someone when you are HIV-positive is even more so. Perea did not just rape the child — he did the same as put a loaded gun to the child's head and threaten to pull the trigger.

The 11-year-old hasn't contacted the virus, nor have the two other boys Perea is accused of raping.

David Eng, assistant director of communication for an AIDS services and advocacy agency said rape is a crime in itself, but the HIV virus should not be used as a tool against someone.

Yet, that is exactly what Perea did when he decided to rape.

With an incurable and fatal virus, the jury could do nothing but find Perea guilty.

With this verdict, the AIDS disease itself is not being criminalized. The fact Perea raped someone while knowingly putting that person's life in danger is a criminal act.

When a disease becomes equivalent to a loaded gun, the law must reflect that. And, thankfully, that is just what the jury in the Perea case did.

Women still contenders in Big Eight tourney

One hundred students surveyed, No. 1 answer on the board. Here's the question: What is the purpose of all those tripods that dot campus each spring? I almost hate to see the onset of March.

The good news about March, of course, is March Madness. What better way to start the month than by helping a vastly improved K-State women's basketball team close out the season?

Tonight's game against Sacramento State should enable the Cats to pull even at 13-13 (5-9 in conference play) before heading to Salina and the Big Eight Tournament. Fan support tonight and this weekend could help our women pull off a surprise tournament win and an NCAA berth.

I know you're thinking, "Why drive to Salina to watch a losing team lose again?" Because that losing record is deceptive, hiding a team with a legitimate chance to steal the automatic bid to the Big Dance.

Having to contend with third-ranked Colorado and 12th-ranked Kansas, the Cats were expected to lose some games. What few expected was a team with a new coach, Brian Agler, and several new members, to play both teams as close as it did. Early in the season, K-State lost a nail-biter to the Lady Buffaloes by just four points. Last weekend, the Cats fell to Kansas by 11 after making a run to close the gap at the end.

(And that Kansas game shouldn't really count. Not only did the Jayhawks bring more fans than us, but it sometimes seemed they bought the officials. If anyone picks up movie rights to this one, it will star Shanele Stires as herself, Michael Jordan as Angela Aycock and Helen Keller as the referee.)

The first-round opponent the Cats face, Oklahoma State, is beatable. K-State split with the Pokes in the regular season, and a game in Salina should be a home game.

Beyond that, things get difficult. But the victories against likely opponents Kansas in the semifinals and Colorado in the finals are not out of reach. All we need is the Salina faithful backing hometown hero Stires and those close games could fall the other way.

Realistically, do I think K-State will win the tournament? Probably not. Do the Cats stand a decent chance as spoilers? Absolutely.

While this may not be the year the Cats return to former glory, that time might not be far away. They'll lose veteran players Gretchen Bertrand and starters Lynn Holzman and Andrea O'Neal. Bertrand plays with experience at the point, while O'Neal is probably the best defensive stopper. Holzman, an academic, all-conference selection, provides solid post play.

Second-team, all-conference player Shawnda DeCamp, the Big Eight's scoring leader and newcomer of the year, and Stires, another second-team, all-conference selection and the Cats' leading rebounder and second leading scorer, along with reserve center JoMoree Grattan, will provide the senior leadership next year.

Freshman Kjersten Larson starts at point for the Cats, and Stacy Neal provides solid backup every game. Dana Pollock has shown improvement in the last year, and Missy Decker has increased the number and quality of her minutes coming off the bench.

Next year, freshmen Mindy Benson, Dionne Burwell, Andrea Jones and Joey Ward should see more playing time. Benson has been a formidable post player. Burwell had an impressive defensive season highlighted by her performance against Nebraska's Nafessa Brown. Jones has accented post play with some outstanding assists, and Ward has proven an accurate shooter.

Top five answers on the board. Here's the question: What are the reasons to cheer the Cats tonight at Bramlage and this weekend in Salina?

1. More fun than a barrel of orange tripods.
2. Preview the 1995 national champion Wildcats.
3. A rockin' homecoming for Shanele — No. 5.
4. Willie the Wildcat and cheerleading squad, which most of you haven't seen yet this year.
5. Thursday's game is guaranteed to be more fun than Student Senate.

Western policy killing Muslims

If you were to hold someone while I beat him up or vice versa, it would be considered an act of atrocity.

When a body of nations holds one ethnic group while another mows it down, it is said to be a peace process.

No matter how one looks at the analogy, it points in one direction. The Western policy in Bosnia-Herzegovina is a ringing contradiction.

If the Bosnian Muslims must be held by an arms embargo, why can't the Serbs be restrained from using them for target practice?

The answer sounds like the Muslims are meek and weak, and the Serbs are hard to control.

That is what one hears when the experts talk. Remember former National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft arguing on "Nightline" that the Serbs do not have a history of backing away under international pressure? He then disagreed that the NATO should launch airstrikes on the Serbs.

That sounded like law enforcement authority busying itself with psychohistoric analysis of a killer when the killer is going to dismember his victim.

It is one thing to do that in a hostage situation when caution is necessary. But in a genocide where victims are numerous and killers are numerous, caution can mean one of three things. Either the enforcers of peace are collaborating with the killers, they are reluctant to take a risk because they do not think it is their matter, or they are simply scared to get involved.

Perhaps the Western peace process in Bosnia-Herzegovina is a mish-mash of all three. If it is dangerous for Europe to ignore the conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina, it is also difficult for it to get sucked into it.

At the same time, it may not be unusual if some European countries have tacit support for the Serbs. After all, a Muslim state of Bosnia in the predominately Christian Europe is likely to be unwelcome in the manner the Jewish state of Israel still is in the predominately Islamic Middle East.

Truth not only has the ungainly sight of a nude mouse, but also has its unsettling presence. The realpolitik of the Bosnian problem is that the West, mainly Europe, is showing the sign of an unwilling peacemaker — one who wants peace not because war is bad, but because peace is convenient. And only peace seems convenient when war gets unseemly.

Would there have been a NATO ultimatum against the Serbs if not for the slaughter in Sarajevo?

Twenty-two months, 200,000 deaths, several hundred rapes and 2 million refugees later, it took an additional 68 deaths before the West realized the Serbs were a little out of line. Perhaps an overkill is not easy to overlook. But how is it more wrong to kill a bunch of people in one day than killing hundreds of thousands during several years?

Could there be such a thing called prescription atrocity — when it is OK to take so many lives in a year but wrong to take too many in a single day?

Why could the West not think of an ultimatum before? Of course, the ultimatum so far only got a ceasefire to hold. If peace is absent or there is at least a remission of hostility, then the ceasefire is only an intermission in the war. But more than anything, the ceasefire is a submission of proof that if the West speaks, even the dreaded Serbs listen.

But must a crowd of Muslims get killed every time before the West cares to speak to the Serbs, peace will come by the time not enough Muslims are left in Bosnia to fight the Serbs.

If that is how the West plans to respond, then it is only fair if it lifts the arms embargo and unbounds the Muslims. At least that way the Muslims will have a fair chance to defend themselves.

It is human decency to release even the notorious prisoners when the prison is burning down and there is no time to relocate them. The underlying reason is that if one cannot defend a man, one must let him defend himself.

When the West helped create the state of Israel, it strengthened the baby nation with arms to withstand Arab hostility.

Now, a similar situation has arisen in Bosnia, but the West holds the Muslims to perish under an arms embargo.

One can not say if the equation of the war will change if the embargo is lifted. But if the Muslims perished then, it would be their own choice.

► SYMPHONY

Unless you're soundless, please don't go to the orchestra

Dear Editor,

I would first like to compliment the K-State University Symphony Orchestra on a fine performance. I felt it uplifted me and that anyone would find pleasure in the experience.

However, from a layman's point of view, the performance was marred by the performance of one of the participants, conductor David Littrell.

In the middle of the last piece, between movements, he stopped the performance to single out a young child who had been crying during most of the evening. So, after 45 minutes of playing, with 15 to go, he singles out his mother and gives her the death stare, and an usher comes to the rescue to escort her and the child out of the auditorium.

What was the point? I mean, with 15 minutes left, couldn't you wait? I am a musician as well, and I do understand distractions affect the outcome, but was it entirely necessary to embarrass that woman so that conditions were favorable for you?

Maybe. But I think you are mistaking where you are. This is Manhattan, Kan., not New York. It was a free concert, not a $50-a-ticket affair.

It was as much an attempt to give young, budding, talented musicians a chance to perform as it was to bring some culture to the area that has given you its land to live off.

► CLINTON

Bill and Hillary using positions to protect their investments

Dear Editor,

The reason President Clinton is going tough on Japan concerning cellular phones is because he and his wife, Hillary, have investments in an Arkansas cellular-phone company.

One wonders if all of Clinton's policies and legislations are so self-serving.

► MOSQUE MASSACRE

Murder not work of one man; many Israelis still behind him

Dear Editor,

In response to your March 1 editorial, I would like to disagree with your assessment that the terrorist Baruch Goldstein, who committed the massacre at the Al-abrahimi Mosque in the occupied West Bank, is a crazed person who acted alone.

As reported in Time magazine, the massacre "was no simple crazy act. Goldstein was a fanatic who took precise steps carefully calculated to reach a clear, if evil, goal."

The premeditated crime was committed by a person who belonged to a racist political group (the Kach Movement) that has a significant membership and wider sympathy among Israeli people. Rabbi Meir Kahane, founder of the Kach Movement, was once elected to the Israeli Parliament.

While I share your hope for peace in the Middle East, I am reminded of the slogan "No justice, no peace." How can we have peace when a significant sector of the Israeli society subscribes to the racist ideology of Jewish supremacy and treat the Arab people as subhumans?

More than 1,000 people attended Goldstein's funeral during which he was eulogized as a hero. As reported by the Associated Press, Rabbi Yaakov Peran stated during the eulogy that "One million Arabs aren't worth one Jewish fingernail."

This anti-Arab racism is deep rooted in the Zionist ideology. A few years ago, Jewish seminary students raided a Palestinian refugee camp, killing a 13-year-old girl. The spiritual leader of the seminary justified the killing by saying that the blood of Jews and non-Jews cannot be equated.

The Israeli television reported that Israeli soldiers killed at least eight of the 39 victims of the mosque massacre. Furthermore, the daily killing of Palestinians by Israeli soldiers is continuing — four days after the mosque massacre the number of Arab victims rose to at least 62 killed and 350 wounded.

As an American citizen with a Middle Eastern heritage, I have a dream that one day the people of the region, regardless of religion, race and color, can live together in peace, equality and harmony. However, the eradication of racism and bigotry by all sides of the conflict is an essential prerequisite for the dream of just peace to become a reality.

Annexation of K-State top concern at meeting

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

The possible annexation of K-State into Manhattan topped the agenda at a town meeting of Manhattan residents Wednesday night at Northview Elementary School.

Steve Hall, city commissioner, fielded questions from six residents concerning the financial aspects of annexation.

"The annexation could possibly help Manhattan by giving it a larger tax base," Hall said.

Because the city would have a larger population, it would receive more funds from state sales and gasoline taxes. The city would also collect a 1-percent sales tax on all items sold on campus, if K-state was annexed.

Another issue discussed in the meeting was the Manhattan Public Library expansion. The library wants to expand into a residential neighborhood, which would require the demolition of several historic homes.

One of the buildings in question is a house at 612 Houston St. that the library wishes to purchase and then dismantle in order to build a parking lot. The house has already been removed.

Lois Lewis, Manhattan resident, said she felt that this idea was unfair.

"The plans for the house were made before anyone in the neighborhood knew anything about it," she said.

Hall said he felt the people living in the neighborhood didn't have enough time to express their concerns about the demolition.

Edith Stunkel, Manhattan city commissioner, said the open city meeting on March 8 should clear up a lot of questions about the library expansion.

She said many citizens are upset about how the library is handling the expansion.

Most of the residents at the meeting said they felt that tearing a piece of Manhattan history down to build a parking lot was a bad choice for the future of the city.

Hall began these town meetings after being elected to the city commission. He said he promised in his campaign that people would have a chance to give their leaders feedback, and a monthly meeting does just that.

TOWN MEETING

There will be a town meeting at City Hall, 1101 Poyntz Ave., on March 8 at 7 p.m. It will be held in the city commission room and will concern the Manhattan Public Library Expansion, Annexation, and any other issues residents bring up.

Fair offers career options

LORI DAVIS
Collegian

It's time to update the résumé, put on a business suit and prepare for life after college.

Students will have the chance to do that Friday at the Human Ecology Career Fair.

Representatives from companies with career information on health and human services, education and research, hospitality, social services and industry will be present.

Some of the companies attending include Taco Bell, Hyatt Regency, The Limited, Vanity, Big Brothers/Big Sisters and Consumer Credit Counseling.

Tracey Fraser, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said 35-40 companies are expected.

"Employers represent various interest areas of the College of Human Ecology," Fraser said.

"It's an opportunity to browse from one table to the next to interact with employers," she said.

The fair, Fraser said, is an ideal place for students to network with prospective employers and learn about different career fields.

"All students from all majors are invited to explore internship and placement opportunities," she said.

In the past, some students in majors outside the College of Human Ecology have gained employment with companies at the fair, she said.

Last year, an apparel design student got a job with MGM Grand as a result of attending the fair, said Karen Pence, assistant dean of the College of Human Ecology.

A journalism student also became employed as a result of the fair when the student gained a contact at the event and began correspondence. It eventually led to employment, Pence said.

"That's not uncommon," Fraser said.

The fair, Pence said, benefits students and employers alike.

While exposing students to a broader range of opportunities, employers also gain a grasp of students' abilities, she said.

CAREER FAIR

Various company representatives will be available at the career fair from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. in the K-State Union Ballroom.

Three men arrested in Hasidic shooting attack

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) — Three men were arrested Wednesday in the shooting attack on a van of Hasidic students that left one young man brain dead and another critically wounded and stoked fears of Mideast terrorism in the city's streets.

Police didn't disclose any motive for the attack, which came four days after a Jewish settler from Brooklyn massacred at least 30 Muslims at a mosque on the Israeli-occupied West Bank.

The suspects were arrested within a day of the shooting.

The first suspect was identified as Rashad Baz, 28, of Brooklyn, who came to the United States in 1984 on a student visa from Lebanon.

Police Commissioner William Bratton said he was the lone gunman who strafed the van with bullets on Tuesday.

He faced 15 counts of attempted murder, four counts of assault and weapons charges.

The other two suspects — Hlai Mohammad, 32, and Bassam Reyati, 27, also of Brooklyn — were charged with hindering prosecution and weapons possession.

They were believed to have helped Baz after the crime in disposing of the guns and the car he used, police spokesman John Miller said.

Their nationalities were not immediately known.

During a search of Baz's Brooklyn home, investigators found a cache of weapons, including a submachine gun, a fully loaded shotgun known as a "street sweeper," a silencer and a stun gun, authorities said.

House passes license plate bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — House members tentatively approved today a proposal that would give Kansans a new way to show that they are still loyal to their alma maters.

The bill would allow the state to issue special license plates for the alumni of state universities, private colleges and community colleges. The state Division of Motor Vehicles would issue them in cooperation with alumni associations.

The bill is designed to help alumni associations raise more money, particularly for scholarship programs.

The House's action advanced the bill to a final vote, which was expected this evening.

Rep. David Adkins, R-Leawood, asked for support for the measure in a tongue-in-cheek speech that called the bill "historic."

"The wind of change is blowing across Kansas," Adkins said. "We know what that wind is saying. It is saying, 'We want educational license plates.'"

Tigers continue perfect Big Eight season as Wildcats lose 68-57

BRIEFLY
■ The loss drops the Cats to 17-10 overall and 4-9 in the Big Eight. K-State is now in sixth place in the league.

■ The win moves the Tigers within one game of a perfect Big Eight season.

■ The next game for K-State is 1 p.m. Sunday at Iowa State.

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The Antlers were there, sitting high above the K-State fans in Bramlage Coliseum, watching the Missouri Tigers defeat the Wildcats 68-57.

The Antlers, a loud group of Missouri fans, knew that their basketball team was about to make history.

The scoreboard read 64-54, Missouri's lead, with 45 seconds left in the game.

"Un-de-feat-ed, un-de-feat-ed," fans from Columbia, Mo., said as Missouri looked to become the first squad to go 14-0 in the Big Eight conference for the first time in 23 years.

The Tigers have just one game to go against Nebraska at home on Saturday.

K-State fell to 17-10 overall, 4-9 and placed sixth in the league standings with one conference game remaining in the season.

Missouri coach Norm Stewart, whose team raised its mark to 23-2, said his team wasn't ready for K-State.

"I think for a lot of the game, we played flat," Stewart said.

"We played hard defensively for parts of the game. I felt like in the first half, we let their offense dictate us and let them get the shots they wanted for us."

K-State climbed out to a 25-17 margin on a Demond Davis lay in with 5:28 left in the first half.

Then, the bottom nearly caved in on them.

The Tigers went on a 15-2 spurt —

13 of those points by Jevon Crudup and Kelly Thames — and led 32-27 at halftime.

K-State coach Dana Altman said his team didn't seem lost heading into the locker room at the half.

"Emotionally, I don't think we were that bad," Altman said.

"I didn't sense any disappointment in our team. We knew we had blown the opportunity to take the lead at halftime."

The Cats made only six of 19 shots from 10 feet or less from the bucket, including four missed lay-ups, while the Tigers were nine of 15 from the same distance and shot 52 percent (13-of-25) from the field in the half.

Missouri continued its shooting streak with a 16-7 run to the 12:22 mark of the second half.

K-State climbed back into the game with a 13-5 spurt — six of them by Askia Jones — and trailed by five points with 4:31 left in the game.

Deryl Cunningham, who fouled out of the ballgame with 8:15 remaining, said K-State couldn't get the job done to win the game.

"We played hard tonight, getting within five or six points, but we just couldn't finish the plays," Cunningham said. "It has been that way all season."

Melvin Booker, the Tigers' starting point guard, said the Cats were its toughest competition all season.

"They were pumped and had great defensive pressure," said Booker, who was four of 11 from the field in the game. "That was the best defensive pressure we have faced all year. They really got out and played the passing lanes and were denying our passes."

Missouri fired back by making 11 of 14 free throws down the stretch of the contest and causing K-State to shoot two of eight from the field defensively.

Ron Lucas said the Cats played without any emotion at the end of the game.

"I don't think we were tired. We were just standing around," Lucas said. "We just didn't play hard. It was a physical game. Missouri played with a lot of confidence."

Stewart said he wants his players to go 14-0 in Big Eight play.

"I want the players to have that (the undefeated season)," Stewart said. "Any time you can achieve that over the long run of the Big Eight season, it's a great accomplishment."

"I think we have had ball clubs with more talent, but they haven't had an undefeated season. They've played hard and gone out and found ways to win."

As for K-State, Altman said his team has to work if they want to make the NCAA Tournament.

"We just have to keep swinging away," Altman said as the Cats play at Iowa State on Sunday before going to the Big Eight Tournament.

"We can't change what has happened. We've just got to keep swinging away."

Loss dampens seniors' last home stand

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Every senior, during his last home game, is supposed to receive special recognition, the accolades of adoring fans and most importantly, a victory.

Unfortunately for the K-State seniors, their final home game came against the Big Eight Champions, the Missouri Tigers.

"It was bad to lose my last home game, but to lose to my home state was worse," Anthony Beane said. Beane is from Bernie, Mo.

Before the game, the seniors were presented with photos of themselves in a gold frame by Athletic Director Max Urick and President Jon Wefald.

Askia Jones thanked the fans for their support with a sign he had made before the game. Deryl Cunningham was presented with flowers by two K-State cheerleaders.

"It was nice, and the fans were happy," Cunningham said. "I just tried not to get too caught up in all the hype."

Cunningham said his focus was centered on Missouri's Jevon Crudup.

"Crudup is real strong, unusually strong," Cunningham said.

Cunningham finished his career at Bramlage Coliseum on the bench after fouling out with 8:15 left in the game.

"I got most of my frustrations out on the bench," Cunningham said. "I haven't really thought about this being my last game."

Jones said it won't set in until he steps off of the court for the last time.

"I'm disappointed that we lost," Jones said. "I'm still thinking about the next game."

Jones moved into fourth place on the KSU career scoring list with 1,674 career points. He surpassed Steve Henson, who had 1655, and needs just 11 to pass Bob Boozer.

"The fans during my five years here were great," Jones said. "They always stuck with us."

After struggling early in the season and eventually losing his starting spot, Ron Lucas has improved his performance at the end of the season.

"I was a lot more focused during the second half of the season," Lucas said.

Lucas pitched four points and two rebounds against Missouri, but more importantly assisted in defending Crudup in the lane.

The seniors said Coach Dana Altman said he was proud of them and the way they played hard.

"He said we gave it our all," Beane said. "He told us to keep our heads up because we've got another game Sunday."

BASEBALL

K-State drops to Wichita State at home; Clark sees improvement in the team

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

Slowly but surely, things are looking up for K-State baseball.

Despite dropping two consecutive games to the nationally ranked Wichita State Shockers, 14-2 Tuesday and 7-3 Wednesday, K-State coach Mike Clark likes the improvement he's seeing.

"We have to stay focused on how it's not where we start, but where we finish," Clark said. "What we did Tuesday night and what we did today was a step in the right direction."

What the Cats did do against the Shockers was bounce back from Tuesday night's blowout in Wichita to play the Wednesday contest at a level that impressed Shocker coach Gene Stephenson.

"I think that Kansas State made some really great plays tonight," he said. "They made three or four very good catches in the outfield, and the infielders made a couple of really good plays, and I actually think we hit the ball better tonight than we did Tuesday."

Tuesday.

A night most Cats would like to forget, as K-State committed six errors on the frozen artificial turf of Tyler Field that was more suitable for skates than cleats.

Kevin Wicker, making his first appearance as a starter for the Cats, lasted just one inning as K-State booted four errors, allowing seven Shocker runs to score on just two hits.

Wichita State starter Shane Dennis didn't fare much better, lasting just 2-1/3 innings while walking seven K-State batters. The Cats couldn't take advantage of Dennis' poor pitching performance, however, squeezing out just one run in the second with the bases loaded and one out.

A solid middle relief effort from the Cats' David Johnson held the Shockers scoreless until the fifth, when a three-run Richie Taylor homer capped a six-run scoring drive that put the Shockers up 13-1.

Wednesday night's game in Manhattan saw the Cats keep it close throughout the evening, as freshman righthander Eric Yanz pitched five strong innings, allowing four runs on six hits.

But the Cat bats couldn't touch Shocker starter Mike Drumright, who lasted six innings while allowing just one run on three hits.

K-State remained within three until the seventh, when senior Rob

Merriman started the inning with a walk and consecutive singles that led to three Shocker runs, putting Wichita State up, 7-1.

Shocker relievers Brandon Baird and Jaime Bluma allowed two additional K-State runs in the final innings as the Shockers picked up their second win, improving to 3-1 overall while K-State drops to 5-4 on the year.

K-State's Coach Clark was pleased to see his Cats bounce back in Manhattan.

"We did a good job. We've still got a long way to go, but we're pointed in the right direction. I was very encouraged."

ROCK-A-BELLY DELI
Address: 1001 W. 10th St.
Hours: Monday-Saturday, 10 a.m.-2 a.m.
Kitchen is open until 10 p.m.
Cover: no charge
Specials: Weekly sandwich and daily soup specials
Crowd: Generally a little older, from 21-40 and up.
History: 70 years in Aggieville.

Rock-A-Belly Deli is bursting with personality and an energizing atmosphere. A green glowing clock, checkered-tile floor, neon "Get In Here" sign and shelves covered with knickknacks give Rock-A-Belly an upbeat, laid-back attitude.

"It's one of the few bars in the 'ville that is designed," Leah Fitzgerald, senior in interior architecture, said. "Most of them are four walls and a bar, but Rock-A-Belly has a lot of character."

One bartender said the bustling crowd was typical of a Friday night.

"We have so many regulars that we know everyone by name," Kim Murphy, a bartender, said. "It's a friendly bar — people come in here to eat and socialize, not to get drunk and wild."

Rock-A-Belly draws a diverse crowd. At one rowdy table, a happy-birthday sign was plastered on the mirror, and the group sang and celebrated a man's 42nd.

"I come here for the cozy atmosphere," Erik Hess, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said. "It's a good place to get away from the hustle and bustle."

Mike Johnson, senior in finance, said he enjoys Rock-A-Belly's small-town atmosphere.

"I like the good sandwiches and Big Girls," he said.

As I shot him an amused glance, he lifted up his large glass of beer, pointed to it and smiled.

SILVERADO
Hours: Tuesday-Saturday, 4 p.m.-2 a.m.
Kitchen is open 4-9 p.m.
Cover: $3 for 21 and older, and $5 for minors
Specials: Women get in free on Thursdays. Free hamburgers on Fridays. 50-cent tacos on Wednesday.
Crowd: Locals, college students and Fort Riley residents.
History: Two years old

The Silverado Saloon has a country flair with its Coors Light Texas music sign, red running lights and neon pink-and-blue Silverado's sign. A wooden dance floor and elevated stage are in the heart of the bar that has a Mexican restaurant in the back and a pool room off to the side.

In the afternoon, the bar was stripped of customers, but owner Greg Gilman said he expected to draw in crowds later that night for the Southern Exposure concert.

At the time I was there, business was extremely slow, and the bartenders, owner and cook were cleaning the bar for the evening crowd.

Because of the interesting design of the bar, I could easily imagine cowboys in wide-brimmed hats and women in cowboy boots two-stepping and swing-dancing to the music of a band up on stage.

"Most of our patrons are beginners, but they learn to pick up the two-step after a few songs," Gilman said.

As Gilman wiped off tables, he listed Silverado's attractions.

"We have a mechanical bull out on the patio during the summer, live bands from Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri on weekends, drink specials during the week and country-dance lessons a few times a year," he said.

Silverado's not only offers bands but also features a native-born Mexican cook and waitress who make Mexican specialties and hamburgers, all from scratch. Gayle Newton, a Manhattan resident and the only customer in the bar at the time, said she has made Silverado's part of her weekly routine.

"I come here every Saturday to listen to the music, play pool and because my friends come here," she said.

AGGIE LOUNGE
Hours: Monday-Saturday, 8 a.m.-midnight
Cover: no charge
Specials: 50-cent draws and $2.50 pitchers on Wednesdays.
Crowd: Younger college students, locals.
History: Open since 1952.

From the outside, the bar looks like a hole-in-the-wall tavern in a tiny, podunk Midwestern town.

A sign modestly reads "Aggie Lounge" on the faded yellow building tucked away on a side street in Aggieville.

I expected to step inside and see a handful of old men drinking and talking.

Instead, I walked into the wild, party-town atmosphere of "the Lou."

An overflow of college students were packed into the bar like sardines, drinking beer, playing darts and celebrating the end of the week.

"I come here four times a week for the beer, darts and to hang out with the fellas," Roman Berry, senior in marketing, said.

The owner, Duane Pultz, said the Lou stands apart from the other bars in Aggieville because it is the smallest bar, and it only serves beer.

In the narrow, crowded building, Michelob signs line the walls, a Bud airplane dangles from the ceiling, the music blares and a guy in overalls sells beer behind the counter.

Lynn Balthrop, freshman in business administration, said she comes to the Lou at 2 p.m. on Fridays so she can hang out with her friends in the laid-back atmosphere.

"I love the Lou because it's like a town tavern, and a lot of Greek people come here," Balthrop said.

supported by the FBI. A Virginia medical examiner ruled that Foster's wounds were consistent with a self-inflicted gunshot.

Fiske's letter was filed Monday in U.S. District Court, where The Wall Street Journal is suing to force the Justice Department to release the Park Police report on Foster's death and an FBI report on the handling of a morosely worded note found later in his briefcase.

Fiske made clear that he would object to any release of either report while he is still investigating the Foster matter.

"The public disclosure of all or any part of the Park Police and FBI report at this time would substantially prejudice the ability of the Office of the Independent Counsel to conduct its investigation," Fiske wrote.

Assistant dean hired to meet rise in crises

AARON GRAHAM
Collegian

In an attempt to meet the growing numbers of student crises, K-State has hired a new assistant dean of student life.

Carla Jones, director of resident education at East Carolina University in Greenville, N.C., will be the new assistant dean of student life at K-State beginning June 1, Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, said.

When Jones was hired, the University slightly altered the structure of the student life office by having two assistant deans to handle the increasing number of students needing assistance, Scott said.

"We're really excited that someone of her caliber is joining us," Scott said. "She has a proven track record and stellar references, and we are fortunate to have her."

Jones, who works in student activities and counseling at East Carolina, said she has a positive feeling about her position at K-State.

"I'm excited because this is a new position at the institution, and it's challenging because I will get the chance to help define the job," Jones said.

Jones said her new job is especially appealing because it will require her to get to know the campus and its people quickly.

"Because it is a new position, I'm most looking forward to defining it," she said.

"I'll need to spend a lot of time talking with people, meeting the students and faculty and working to support the other functions of the dean of student life office," Jones said.

Scott said Jones' main duties will be to provide assistance to students and their families when emergency or crisis situations arise.

The new position will also allow Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, to return to his primary duties of dealing with student activities and campus leadership development, Scott said.

"Crisis has been one of my principal responsibilities for years, so I've been on call for that, and Bernard has been back-up. That's taken up a large chunk of time," she said.

"Carla will become first for students to call in emergencies, and I'll be back-up," Scott said.

Scott said the additional assistant dean was essential to meet the recent increase in student emergencies.

"Through the years, there have been three deans in this office, but they have moved to other positions," Scott said.

Drug, sex crime bills advanced by House

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House advanced bills that would strengthen anti-drug laws and increase the time allowed for prosecution of some sex crimes Wednesday after it gave final approval to other anti-crime bills.

The sex crimes bill would allow prosecutors to charge people with a sex crime against a child up until the victim turns 23. The current statute of limitations is five years after the alleged offense.

Advocates of the bill contend the bill will help in the prosecution of child molesters and rapists who attack children. They believe young children often repress the memories of abuse or will not want to confront their abusers until they are adults.

For example, if a child is molested at age 4, the state has until the child turns 9 to prosecute.

"It has a whole lot to do with putting people behind bars if they molest children," Rep. Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, said.

Telefund to begin tonight to finance alumni events

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

A telefund that helps support KSU Alumni Association events like Family Weekend, Homecoming and All-University Open House will start tonight and continue on Sunday night.

Student Alumni Association volunteers will collect donations for the Tradition Founders Telefund from 6 to 9 p.m. both nights.

The founders telefund is part of the Tradition Founders Fund, a year-long donation drive that has been a part of the Alumni Association since 1970.

The Alumni Association has conducted the founders telefund every March for five years, after the KSU Foundation Telefund in February.

"We're calling people who have given to the Tradition Founders over the past two to three years, but have not yet given this year," Amy Renz, Alumni Association vice president, said.

"We find that alumni really enjoy the opportunity to talk to a current K-State student," Renz said.

There were more than 2,200 donors during the founders telefund last year, with an average donation of $50 each.

"Last year, we raised over $20,000. So this year, we hope to raise that much or surpass it," Renz said.

Overall, founders fund mail and phone donations are more than $120,000 per year, and make up about 12 percent of the association's annual budget.

FACULTY MEMBERS WE NEED YOUR IDEAS!

The K-State Union Governing Board (UGB) is an organization of ten students, three faculty members, and one alumni appointee (usually a student). The purpose of UGB is to serve as the general governing and policy-making body of the K-State union. The board works with the K-State Union staff to help make the K-State Union best serve the Kansas State University student and University community. Meetings are held from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. on the first Thursday of each month. If you have talent and a few hours available each month to contribute to bettering the K-State Union operation, consider completing an application for UGB membership.

Position available:

Conference to focus on gay issues

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

"Taking Pride in Our 10 Percent" is the theme of K-State's first conference that seeks to communicate, educate and celebrate the bisexual, gay and lesbian community.

Frank Axell, president of K-State's Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society, said he didn't think there had been any event like this.

"It's a great opportunity to provide a little education and also challenge the misconceptions people have about gays, lesbians and bisexuals," said Axell, who is an assistant director of Strong Complex.

The event begins Friday, March 4 with two theatrical productions.

"Widows and Children First," by Harvey Fierstein, will be performed by the KSU Theatre Group at 1:30 p.m. in the Purple Masque Theatre in East Stadium. This dramatic play involves a gay man's struggle to maintain his identity and his mother's struggle to reform him.

At 8 p.m., Appletree Productions of Topeka will present "Coming Out, Coming Home" in the K-State Union Flint Hills Room. This group of stories about gay men and women and their families deals with the pain and triumph of coming out.

Saturday, March 5, local, state and national speakers will present a diverse range of seminars throughout the day in the Union.

Curtis Shepard, campus project director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, will give the keynote address titled "Campus Organizing: Musings on Student Empowerment, the National Scene and the Myth of Coastalism in the Movement."

The NGLTF Campus Project works with campus groups to develop resources and provide organization assistance to campus groups.

Axell got the idea for the conference from one he attended while he was an undergraduate at Ball State University in Muncie, Ind.

He began planning for a similar conference at K-State in October. He said community feedback and support have helped develop the event into something spectacular.

"I've had a lot of support. We've had a lot of people who have volunteered time and finances. People have seen the need and volunteered to make sure it happened."

The Rev. Don Fallon, K-State coordinator of religious activities, will conduct a panel discussion with other area clergymen. "Is Homosexuality a Sin?" will discuss, explore and reconcile the issue of homosexuality and the church.

Robert Kent Donovan, associate professor of history, will present a seminar titled "Exploring Our Gay Heritage," which will focus on research of gays throughout history.

One of the extra features the conference offers is an all-day visit by members of the Topeka Parents and Friends of Gays and Lesbians, Deb Taylor, English instructor, said.

She said PFLAG is a support group for parents of children who come out. They will answer questions parents and friends may have in Union Room 202 and help them form their own support groups.

There will also be exhibits of gay art, music, clothing and books in Union rooms 202, 204 and 205.

All events are free. BGLS will be accepting donations, however, to meet some of the costs that have arisen, Axell said.

He said he thinks the conference is important to both the homosexual and heterosexual communities.

"There are certain attitudes against homosexuals, which is fine," Axell said. "But I think that people need to challenge their misconceptions about homosexuals and see that we're the same as everyone else."

NEWS DIGEST

► NEW DRUG MAY SLOW LOU GEHRIG'S DISEASE

BOSTON — A new drug may be the first to slow the deadly progression of Lou Gehrig's disease, but some experts fear that raising hopes prematurely could hurt patients.

There is no treatment for this rare disease, so news that an experimental medicine seems to help victims live longer has triggered both excitement and fear. Each year, one to two out of every 100,000 people in the United States are diagnosed with the disease.

A report on the first experiment with the drug, called riluzole, is being published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Citterns, uilleann pipes will fill McCain when Celtic Boys play

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Collegian

The Boys of the Lough are somewhat of an Irish sensation.

Besides being very popular in Great Britain, this traditional Celtic band has enchanted audiences all over the world. What better way to celebrate the spirit of St. Patrick than to listen to Celtic music.

The Boys of the Lough (pronounced lock, as in Loch Ness) incorporate musical styles from Ireland, Scotland, the Shetland Islands and Northumberland.

What sets these musicians apart from others is the variety of musical instruments they use.

Besides mainstream instruments like the piano, fiddle, guitar and flute, they also utilize the concertina, the penny whistle, the cittern and the uilleann pipes.

Most people don't know what those instruments look like, let alone how they sound.

The concertina is somewhat like an accordion, having about the same sound. However, the same note is played if you push or pull on it, unlike the accordion. The penny whistle is similar to the flute, but it has no keys, and you blow into a fipple, or flue-shaped, mouthpiece.

No Celtic band would be complete without bagpipes. The Boys use the very demanding uilleann pipes. These pipes, coming back into favor after many years, were developed in the 1700s. Although they are technically Scottish in origin, they are played with a distinctly Irish style.

The cittern is a very long instrument with four pairs of strings. It is similar to the mandolin, also used in the Boys' performance. It is basically used to give drone notes to coordinate with the melody.

All of these instruments come together to create an original-sounding music that celebrates the Celtic spirit. The Boys' songs reflect many moods. Polkas, Scottish and Irish jigs, and love songs all call to mind the beautiful regions of islands and moors the Boys have grown up with.

The Celtic musicians Boys of the Lough will be performing at 8 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium. Tickets are $15 for public and faculty, $13 for senior citizens and $7.50 for students and children.

DEAR CASSIE,

Sleepless' friend unsure what to do

Dear Cassandra,

Referring to "Sleepless in Manhattan's" troubles with the female friend, I think I might be that female.

After reading the article, I realized I must do something about it. I've decided I will talk to my "senior" boyfriend and tell him my true feelings. It's true I have had feelings toward the guy up here since the beginning of the year. The problem was that I just couldn't choose between the both of them. I liked the way they both treated me. But after reading what he said, I felt I couldn't keep up with this double tango.

What if I make a mistake by saying goodbye to my "senior" boyfriend? What if it doesn't work out? As he said, his last girlfriend was in the sixth grade. I usually date guys who are really experienced. I've never been in this situation before. Help, please!

Signed,
 Tango Queen

Dear Tango Queen,

Experience should not be a concern. If you consider yourself knowledgeable in the dating arena, you should be a good teacher. I'm sure he will be a good student who is willing to do lots of homework.

If there are not any problems between you and your boyfriend, stay with him. But, if Sleepless can give you more love, time and devotion, give him a try. I wish I could tell you more. Just follow your heart.

Spiritual songwriter challenges orthodoxy

ANDREW TOMBS

Collegian

Bruce Cockburn's latest release, "Dart to the Heart," explores areas of folk, blues and spirituality on a level that is rare and appreciated for our time.

"Dart to the Heart" continues in the vein of Cockburn's 1991 release "Nothing but a Burning Light" and is a retreat into the soft, introspective music that defined Cockburn in the 1970s.

Cockburn has an approach to Christianity that makes most churchgoers uneasy — he refuses to fit into the mold of glossed-over, super-spiritual songs that one would expect from someone who ever mentions God or claims to have faith.

Cockburn brings a brand of spirituality that, unlike the seemingly uncaring rhetoric of the church or government today, cares about the poor and oppressed, is concerned about the environment and asks the listener hard questions about faith, God and the future.

Musically, Cockburn is an accomplished guitarist, and, working with producer T-Bone Burnett, he assembles equally talented backup musicians for the tracks on "Dart to the Heart."

Horn arrangements find their way into several of the new songs, adding a Neil Young and the Blue Notes feel to "Listen for the Laugh" and "Scanning these Crowds." Traditional folk instruments like mandolins and dul-cimers are also arranged, keeping a strong connection to Cockburn's folk roots.

In his lyrics, Cockburn assumes a prophetic glance at the human condition and the inconsistency of the ways people relate to one another.

From "Angel Beast": Could be the famine, could be the feast/Could be the pusher, could be the priest/Always ourselves we love the least/That's the burden of the angel beast.

If you are looking for warm fuzzies, "Dart to the Heart" will be rather disappointing, but if you want to hear one man's perspective on a universe that does not seem to make a lot of sense, this is a release worth listening to.

TELEVISION

Olympics crush CBS' competition

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — About 204 million Americans watched the Winter Olympics, making it the most-watched event in TV history and crushing CBS' rivals in the February ratings sweep.

"On a household basis, 92.5 percent of all American households tuned in," David Poltrack, CBS vice president for research, said Wednesday. "That is also the highest-rated cumulative audience of any event in television history."

The Lillehammer, Norway, games posted the highest average rating, a 27.8, of any Olympics, winter or summer, in history. A single ratings point equals 942,000 homes of the 94.2 million TV households in the United States.

CBS' ratings will equal the combined ratings of ABC and NBC for the month-long February sweep — one of three annual periods of intensive audience measurement that let affiliates set local ad rates.

According to preliminary Nielsen, CBS averaged a 22.6 rating for all programs — up 36 percent from 1992; ABC averaged an 11.2 rating and NBC a 10.4.

CBS affiliates saw an immediate benefit from the Olympic ratings in the 30-city "people-meter" markets that provide instant, overnight Nielsen's. A late news audience increase of 64 percent, Poltrack said.

Even without the Winter Olympics, CBS won the sweep. In non-Olympic time periods, CBS averaged a 14.7 rating in prime time. ABC had a 12.8 rating, and NBC an 11.7.

The Olympics numbers, like the rising tide, lifted other CBS boats as well. The Olympics morning show, featuring the "CBS This Morning" anchors and production team, won their time period for the first time.

The "CBS Evening News" finished second for the sweep, but won last week's newscast ratings for the first time since 1992.

And "Late Show with David Letterman," which sent Letterman's mother to Norway to cover the games, posted its highest-ever daily and weekly ratings during the sweep. "Late Show" beat its own premiere night and topped NBC's "Tonight Show" by 58 percent in households and 92 percent among adults ages 18 to 49.

Poltrack said three factors helped build CBS' overwhelming Olympic sweeps victory.

First was the Tonya Harding-Nancy Kerrigan figure skating controversy. The nights they competed were the fourth- and sixth-most-watched broadcasts in TV history.

In addition, viewers still had positive memories of CBS' coverage of the Albertville, France, winter games in 1992, which drew 184 million viewers. "They came back earlier, and they watched longer," Poltrack said.

And, on nights when there were no major American victories or high-appeal sports, CBS "smoothed out the valleys" with feature stories and profiles of competitors.

"Skating was a major promotional factor," Poltrack said, "but for whatever reason people came into the Olympics, they stayed, they enjoyed themselves, and they'll be back."

Spielberg visits Auschwitz ruins while attending Polish premiere

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KRAKOW, Poland — Director Steven Spielberg stood in silence outside the ruins of a Nazi death camp crematorium after arriving Wednesday for the Polish premiere of his movie, "Schindler's List."

Spielberg returned to the city where he filmed much of the movie recounting how industrialist Oskar Schindler saved 1,100 Jews from the nearby Auschwitz gas chambers by putting them to work at his factories.

Some of the Jews rescued by Schindler were among the 900 people who attended the premiere Wednesday at the Kijow theater.

Spielberg and his wife, actress Kate Capshaw, visited Auschwitz-Birkenau, the former Nazi death-camp complex 40 miles outside of Krakow, to pay respect to more than one million Jews who perished there. Six million Jews died in the Holocaust.

The couple held hands as they stood in silence for several minutes at the ruins of a crematorium in Birkenau. They later walked to what remained of one of the camp's gas chambers, which the Nazis destroyed shortly before Auschwitz was liberated in January 1945.

At a news conference later Wednesday, Spielberg said he wanted to tell the story of Holocaust survivors to draw "attention of young people all over the world to what happened here."

He said he felt more like a documentary filmmaker or a journalist while making the film.

Exceptions to bill limit public access meetings has not caused problems for the radio stations KMAN and K-ROCK, their news director, Ken Scott, said.

However, maintaining access to government meetings is crucial, Scott said.

"It's pertinent that the public have the right to know what the government is doing. One of the bases of free society is to have access to public records and meetings," Scott said. "If the city officials were holding closed meetings, they would cast suspicion on themselves, and I don't think they would want to cast that suspicion."

Under the bill, quasi-public bodies, agencies or corporations would be included in the Open Meetings Act. This means that any meeting of a quasi-public body would be open to the public. A meeting is defined as a prearranged gathering by a majority of a quorum of a public or quasi-public body to discuss business of that body.

Rep. Doug Lawrence, R-Burlington, who helped write the bill, said it will give greater access to more government agencies and their discussions.

The bill is a response to the trend in recent years of government working as more of a private enterprise doing public jobs, Lawrence said.

"There's a big effort to make the government efficient, and they've been doing this by setting up private government sectors."

"Literally agency upon agency has been created by the government to do government jobs," Lawrence said.

"If they create a private entity, they have less public involvement and awareness, and they run the risk of becoming a cloaked society that may work to the detriment of the public interest."

"I'm worried that by creating private sectors of government it will not be clear whether they fall under open-meetings laws," Lawrence said. "This bill would make sure they're under it."

Language was included to define a quasi-public body as an entity that is created by a public body or as an entity that receives 51 percent or more of its funds, capital or credit from or on the behalf of a public body, other than for goods or services rendered, Lawrence said.

The bill also takes into account the possibility of violations. If the Open Meetings Act is violated, persons involved could face up to a $500 civil fine, and any action taken during the violation could be invalidated within 10 days.

Suspending notification of a local government meeting after an emergency disaster declaration by the governor was once considered to be in the gray areas of an act of violation.

Lawrence said although he is not on a crusade for media organizations, he has learned it is not always safe to assume all the public's business will be conducted in the public eye.

The public may have to fight for the right to participate in things some people don't want to be involved in, he said.

ASK opposes Washburn bill three large state schools until 2008 and the regional schools until 2016.

Associated Students of Kansas, which represents Emporia State University, Fort Hays State University and Pittsburg State University, said it does not support the Washburn bill.

Nate Halverson, chairman of ASK, said Washburn would take money away from the other regents schools and result in duplication of programs.

Sen. Bill Brady, D-Parsons, proposed an amendment to the bill that would change the way community colleges are funded. It would eliminate out-district tuition and use a statewide 1-1/2 mill levy to fund the state's 19 community colleges.

The amendment motion failed, but Brady said he would propose the amendment again when the Washburn bill was debated in the Senate.

Several of the senators agreed that the state needed to have one overall plan for higher education.

Wefald and other supporters of the bill said bringing Washburn into the regents system is the first step toward having some kind of uniform control over higher education in Kansas.

The Washburn bill will probably be debated in the Senate next week. The committee has still not made a recommendation on the regents budget bill, which includes the Partnership for Excellence.

The PFE would increase tuition at K-State 9 percent the next three years. Some of the money raised from the increase would be used to increase faculty salaries.

The PFE and the Washburn bill are two separate entities, but Gov. Joan Finney has said she will not support the PFE without the Washburn bill.

Washburn faculty would not be eligible for the PFE.

Padre Island —

TEXAS AND PADRE ISLAND

Padre Island is located off the southeastern coast of Texas in the Gulf of Mexico. It is home to Padre Island National Seashore and is connected to Texas and Mustang Island to the north by highway.

SARA SMITH/Collegian

GALVESTON SAYS NO

If you're planning on going to Texas for spring break, don't plan on going to Galveston.

Due to several incidents during spring break last year, Galveston officials are not advertising Galveston as a spring break alternative.

"We have delegated no money to advertise to universities," John Dundee, public information officer for the Galveston Park Board, said. "We are fully expecting people to come, but we are not advertising as much."

Dundee said there has been an increase of violence on the beach, due to alcohol and students, and added that the crowds are hard to control.

A ban on alcohol on the beaches started June 1, 1993 after a stabbing during spring break. According to the Galveston police, an officer also shot and killed a person when a gun was pulled on Stewart Beach during spring break.

Spring break offers students a chance to get away from the grind of school and to go have fun.

"Padre is one of the most popular spring-break destinations for this area," Shelly Gowdy, owner of Travel Unlimited Inc., said.

Padre Island is south of Corpus Christi, Texas, in the Gulf of Mexico. There are six main places to go in the Corpus Christi area: the beach, the Padre Island National Sea Shore, Texas State Aquarium, Corpus Christi Greyhound Race Track, the Columbus Fleet and the USS Lexington, said Dana Stephens, director of communications for the Corpus Christi Area Convention and Visitors Bureau.

Stephens said 250,000 people were there in March 1993.

Last spring break, Bryan Erkie, freshman undecided, and a group of friends made the 18-hour drive to Padre.

"The car ride down is hell," Erkie said.

The group stopped at gas stations to play football all the way down, which made the trip less painful, he said.

Jodi Dreiling, junior in architecture and part of the same group, said she and her friends went to the beach every day. At night, usually, the group stayed at the hotel and had their own parties around the hot tub.

Erkie said they could not check into the hotel as soon as they got there, so they went to a convenience store to change. The problem was they couldn't get to their suntan lotion. He said he burned his nose the first day, and it peeled until it bled.

Students can do a number of things while on the beach, from renting a wind-surfing board to renting an Orbitron, a gravity-defying device with participants strapped into the center, said Chuck Bradley, communications specialist with Corpus Christi Area Convention and Visitors Bureau.

Every weekend, there will be surfing contests and volleyball tournaments, Bradley said. Horseback riding is available on Mustang Island.

The Nueces County Beach Services are still working on getting more activities for spring break, Bradley said.

Bradley said there are extra police patrols during spring break aimed at crowd and traffic control. He also said the police are lenient to students there on spring break and try to give warnings to students and let them know when violations are occurring.

"The bureau's position is we welcome responsible students to Corpus Christi," he said.

The number of problems during spring break were lower last year, and there

PRICING PADRE

Manhattan travel agencies are offering a variety of packages for vacationers going to Padre Island over Spring Break.

Classic Travel and Tours — $224/person

Cruises and Travel — $189/person
Travel Unlimited, Inc. — $185/person were no fatalities, Stephens said.

She said there might be free taxi service available from the clubs to the hotels.

One of the big clubs is the Yucatan Beach Club, a come-as-you-are club that accepts anybody from preppies to beach bums, Bradley said.

Jason Erkie, junior in computer engineering, who was also with the group with Dreiling and Bryan Erkie, said the cover charges for the clubs were high and the drinking age was strictly enforced. A woman in his group tried drinking and had her drink taken away immediately.

Jason Erkie said they went to Mexico one night and there were armed guards on the street.

Bryan Erkie said he thought Mexico was fun, but people need to be careful.

Nothing happened to his group, he said, but the group members heard horror stories. He said they did see rats the size of cats.

Padre Island is a popular place to go for spring break, and reservations go fast.

"Space is getting to be very limited," Sherri Hopkins, travel consultant at Creative Travel Inc., said.

The average price for a package based on eight people to a condominium for seven nights is about $218 per person at the agency she works for, Hopkins said. This package does not include transportation and is based on availability.

Some packages offered by travel companies include the sharing of living space.

Gowdy said the two companies she works with that set up the living-space sharing do a good job of matching people.

This option is especially popular with women who do not have as many problems with the match-ups, she said.

Jason and Bryan Erkie are going again this year. They and some of their friends made their hotel reservations for the same hotel two weeks ago, Bryan Erkie said.

Jason Erkie said this year the group they will be going with is taking two cars instead of a van so they won't be as cramped.

"The whole time is just a blast," Bryan Erkie said.

"The bureau's position is we welcome responsible students to Corpus Christi."

TRUE DEVOTION

Students sacrifice vacations to help the less fortunate

PHILL SPIKER
Collegian

Not everyone is blowing off steam this spring break.

Some students are going to do something more constructive, like donating their time to help less-fortunate people.

Sister Rose Walters, campus sponsor of the Students of St. Isidore's Church, said the church is sending two groups on service projects March 20-26.

"We are sending a group of 10 students to Chicago's southside and a group of six to seven students to Cumberland, Maryland," Walters said.

Walters said the students being sent to Chicago will be sent there through Unity House. The students will be counseling un-wed mothers and other people on the streets of Chicago. Their other duties will include teaching, helping people budget their money better and helping with a food kitchen.

"Some of these people are taught how to read," she said. "Others are taught to budget their money better."

The other group will be sent to the Appalachian mountains in Maryland to help Habitat for Humanity with projects for the people in that area.

Walters said the group will be working with the economically deprived.

"The students will be painting and rebuilding the housing," she said. "They actually will be redoing the houses."

Walters said the students' food and sleeping arrangements will be provided by the local church, but there will be some general luxuries that may not be present.

"I heard that in Kentucky they didn't have running water," Walters said. "There could be a possibility that they won't have any in Maryland."

Walters said a group called Consortium is the organization responsible for getting groups of students together for these projects.

"It is a group that helps students to meet the needs of others," she said.

Consortium helps people all along the Appalachian mountains receive aid from various church groups across the nation.

Walters said to participate in these projects you don't have to be a member of the church.

"We have at least one person that is non-Catholic that will be going this year," she said. "We encourage people to participate in this program. It is a great learning experience for anyone."

There are other reasons to participate in one of these programs, which help students get to know other students in a family-like atmosphere.

Pastor James Gau, campus pastor for St. Luke's Lutheran Church, said the trips tend to draw people closer together, which helps the ministry at St. Luke's and the camp for which they serve.

Gau said St. Luke's is sponsoring a trip March 22-24 at Texoma Lutheran Camp in Texas. The camp charges a $70 fee plus work, in exchange for three nights of lodging and meals.

"Most of the duties include painting of camp facilities and cleaning of the campground area," he said.

Gau said the trip is to help the camp get ready for its summer season.

"I'm pretty sure that we're getting it ready for their summer camps," he said.

Gau said this program is what his church calls a servant event, which is sponsored by the Lutheran Church Missouri Synod.

"The Texas trip is one of dozens of servants that are sponsored by this group a year," Gau said. "This is one of many that we picked to go on."

Gau said he plans to take 10 students on the trip.

"I'm only planning on taking 10 students because of a tight budget and the fact that I like to keep the groups small," Gau said.

Gau said he pays $50 of the $70 fee for students with money from the student leadership development grant he received.

STUDENTS

Some students opt for spring break at parent's house

KRISTEN WELBORN

For all of the students who are Daytona dreaming, partying on Padre, soaking up the rays on a remote, sunny island, or participating in any other exciting spring-break plans, we begrudgingly hope you have a good time.

For the students who cannot participate in the traditional spring-break activities such as tanning at the beach and soaking up the sunny weather, or skiing down the snowy slopes, returning home to their parents' house is the other option.

"I'm going to go home, spend time with family and friends, just relax and have a good time," Matt Tull, junior in feed science, said. "I'm going to prepare for the home stretch for the rest of the semester and finish up strong."

Denise Elffner, junior in elementary education, agreed and said she and her husband are going home to relax and get away from the pressures of college life.

Some students will be making summer plans during spring break.

"I'm going to work on getting a summer job working with WIC (Women, Infants & Children). I'm also going to spend time with my family and play golf," Julie Schwieterman, sophomore in dietetics, said.

Wedding bells and proms will be part of a few students' spring-break activities.

"One of my best friends is getting married. I have to get sized for the tux and help plan his bachelor party," Rich Cillessen, sophomore in criminal justice, said.

Cillessen also plans on doing manual labor for his father during the break.

"I will be going to prom with my

BEACHES

Students join the Daytona crowd

BRIAN SIEGRIST
Collegian

For many K-State students, spring break means just one thing — the feeling of sand between the toes and fun in the sun on some ocean-side beach.

On what better beach to pass the days than the one dubbed "The World's Most Famous Beach" — Daytona Beach, Fla.? Each year the white sands on the Atlantic coast of Florida endure around 250,000 college students during the March 14-April 10 spring-break season.

The beach offers a variety of activities — particularly for the sports-minded person — and plenty of sun and ocean waves, but don't expect tropical temperatures. Daytona's average temperature during the spring-break season is around 72 degrees. But with cool, ocean breezes blowing off the Atlantic, temperatures can often be in the 50-degree range.

However, what Daytona lacks in tropical climate it makes up for with a schedule of entertainment and activities for students, which are part of Daytona's pro-active measures to try to limit alcohol consumption and accidents.

"Since 1989, we have launched a campaign to make spring break safer, and to tone it down a little and limit the injuries and deaths associated with alcohol consumption," Suzanne Heddy, vice-president for tourism and special events for the Daytona Beach Chamber of Commerce, said.

"Everybody can still have a great time and go home in one piece, too. We offer alternatives to drinking such as sports, interactive games, live music and virtual reality games."

Under-age drinkers beware. Many beach resorts such as Daytona and Padre Island are cracking down on under-age drinking and fake IDs.

"We talked to them for four hours and the only word they understood was 'Nordics,' as in the hockey team. As long as we kept saying, 'Ah, Nordics,' they kept partying and having a good time."

JIM DALY
Senior in Advertising

"They are being real particular about IDs this year," Elaine Halbkat, travel agent with Bryan World Tours, said. "They will be checking IDs at the front desk of your hotel, and, if your student ID doesn't match your drivers license, they won't let you enter."

Extra restrictions shouldn't scare people off, though. There are still people to meet and plenty of entertainment outside of the planned beach activities.

"Daytona was wonderful," Jim Daly, senior in advertising, said. "I had my first real experience with meeting an actual prostitute there. She bought my lunch." Daly said his memories of Daytona include piling into hotel rooms with people he didn't know, playing beach volleyball, and seeing P.M. Dawn and Marky Mark live on the beach.

He also said he ate his first meal in two days during a frenzied scramble for free pizza being given away at the Marriott Hotel by MTV.

He said he has many memories of the students he met at Daytona.

"You meet a lot of very interesting people there," Daly said.

"We partied for four hours with three French girls from Quebec, Canada. We talked to them for four hours and the only word they understood was 'Nordics,' as in the hockey team. As long as we kept saying 'Ah! Nordics' they kept partying and having a good time."

Hotel rates for Daytona Beach range from $59 to $124 and they have been placing no more than six to eight people in a room, Halbkat said.

Union Program Council travel is also offering a six-night, seven-day package at the Howard Johnson Hotel for $235. Sign up is in the UPC office in the K-State Union from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Spring Break

Angela McGauley, travel consultant at Kansas State Travel Service, speaks with Sara Norbury, junior in agriculture business, about the hot spots for spring break this year and the costs of getting to those destinations.

boyfriend," Amy Hoskinson, freshman in education, said. She said her other plans also include hanging out with friends, her boyfriend and family.

"It will be a nice break," she said.

Some students needing money for the rest of the semester will be working for the entire break.

Dan Parcel, senior in economics, will be working at the Kaw Valley Greenhouse about 80 hours per week.

"I'll probably fill in for people to give them a break," he said.

Padre, Vegas number among hot spots

JEFF GAMBER

Spring break is fast approaching. As it nears, many students are dreaming of the trips they'll take to get rid of the last traces of the winter blues and usher in a new era of spring fever.

For some students, spring break is a time to go home and visit family and friends, but many students use the week to hit one of the hot vacation spots in the sun or on the slopes.

Sherri Hopkins, travel consultant for Creative Travel Inc., said packages to South Padre Island, Texas and Daytona, Fla., have been very popular this year. She said in the past, Cancun, Mexico, has been a popular spot. However, she said student trips to Cancun have dropped off.

"We haven't really seen that much to Cancun because Cancun's gotten a lot stricter now on their age requirements for hotel check-in," Hopkins said.

Because of the cold weather this winter, the most popular packages are the ones in warm spots, Hopkins said. However, skiing packages continue to be popular and make up about half of the requests Creative Travel processes, she said.

"Of course, the warm spots are the most popular, but a lot of people are going to Colorado, going skiing as well," Hopkins said. "That's another hot area for spring break. The main thing about going to Colorado to go skiing is that the majority of the properties do impose a five-night minimum."

Steven Hoover, Personal Touch Travel and Cruises, said based on the trips he has arranged, the hot spots this year are Las Vegas and Cancun. He said the number of trips his agency has processed to Padre Island and Florida have gone down this year.

"I think that Padre is no longer as appealing as it once was," Hoover said. "I think with time, things grow old."

He said Las Vegas has seen a positive response to a five-year program that has been implemented to increase tourism.

"In the last five years, there's been a building explosion in Vegas — a lot of new hotels, many more things to see and do there, and they're really expanding the people that they market to," Hoover said. "For us, at least, Vegas has been a popular place. A lot of people are asking about that and Cancun. Those are the most popular places we've seen."

Hoover said the most important thing to students is the cost of the trip and how much they can get for their money.

"With most students, the main concern is cost. They want something that's inexpensive but still popular. They want to be where there's going to be other students. Their main concern is to go somewhere where there is a lot to do."

"Students like to shop around a lot," Hoover said. "They'll call all the agents. They'll call all the numbers for the spring break packages advertised in the Collegian. They really hunt for a good deal."

Hopkins said one of the newer trends that seems to be emerging is trips to Disneyland.

"We've had a few people come in for Disney, which is kind of different,"

She said an average price for a spring break trip to Padre for a group of eight people would be $219 per person, plus a $50-per-person damage deposit, which is refunded after 30 days if there are no damages to the hotel.

A Las Vegas trip package would cost a little more, running about $350 per person, Hopkins said.

An alternative for those who can only go away for a few days is a weekend trip to Chicago. Hopkins said a Chicago trip costs about $126 per person for the flight and $75 or more per night for a hotel room.

Hopkins said if a student doesn't already have a break package lined up, it is almost too late. She said a person could still book some packages now, but they would have to pay the full price at the time of booking, and the prices would probably be higher.

"There's still things out there that can be booked for spring break," Hopkins said. "I don't mean to make it sound bleak. There are still packages available. You just get the better prices if you plan ahead a few months in advance."

Hoover said in addition to arranging student break packages, his agency also sees many faculty and staff come in to arrange a spring break vacation. He said these people tend to want to take trips to big cities rather than beach or ski resorts.

"We get calls from more than just students, too. Faculty and staff — we get calls from them, too, and we've booked a number of faculty and staff. We've booked several to New Orleans and some to Chicago and New York. They seem to be wanting city trips, just to get away, shop, the big-city entertainment and things like that."

"They want to be where the students aren't," Hoover said.

VP position has duties defined

TAWNIA ERNST

The student body vice president's official duties were defined Thursday night by Student Senate, following almost an entire year of the position's establishment.

Dave Frese, vice president, said duties hadn't been clearly stated earlier and that this would be the first time the duties were officially defined.

By unanimous consent, Student Senate defined the vice president's duties as follows: The vice president will succeed the president, if the president is permanently disabled or removed from office. The vice president would also serve as official representative of the student body in absence or inability of the president. The vice president will serve as chair of the Educational Opportunities Fund committee.

House wants compromise

TOPEKA — The House decided Thursday it wants to negotiate with the Senate over capital punishment legislation rather than accept senators' narrower death penalty proposal.

Representatives voted to appoint a joint conference committee, three House members and three senators, to try to draft a new, compromise version of the bill. Members had the option of concurring in the Senate's amendments to the bill and sending it to Gov. Joan Finney.

The House took the action on a voice vote. Only a few members voiced opposition.

The difference between the two versions is how many cases for which the death penalty would apply. The Senate proposal creates seven capital crimes, all of them

A Colombian graduate student who lost $2,428 in the K-State Union on Feb. 20 is only a few steps away from a master's degree in landscape architecture, despite her recent loss.

Marieste Emura is trying to put the pieces of the life back together with support from her friends, family and the K-State community, she said.

The money stolen from Emura three days after she arrived in Manhattan was money she had saved from a temporary job on a design project in Colombia.

Emura said she needed the money to cover her living and thesis expenses.

She had planned to rent an apartment and buy a computer program, but after the theft, she had no place to live and could not meet the financial demands of her thesis.

"I couldn't sleep the first few days after it happened and could not forget. All my savings were gone from the last couple months I've been working," Emura said.

"I wanted to go home, but I decided I'm here, and I made the effort. My friends told me money problems can be solved," she said.

Emura's friends and family reached out to help her accomplish her goal of earning a master's degree in landscape architecture, she said.

White House aides ordered not to interfere

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Embarrassed anew by White House handling of the Whitewater affair, President Clinton ordered aides Thursday to "bend over backward" to avoid meddling in a federal investigation involving him.

Insisting that "no one has actually done anything wrong," Clinton still expressed regret that his advisers received private briefings on a government investigation into a failed Arkansas thrift.

Critics have wondered aloud if the White House was trying to influence the investigation into Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association and the related Whitewater land venture formerly co-owned by the president and Hillary Rodham Clinton.

In a letter to Senate leaders, 43 Republican senators promised to block the administration's nomination of Ricki R. Tigert to head the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., until a congressional hearing is conducted on a White House briefing by Roger Altman. Altman is a Clinton appointee and interim head of the Resolution Trust Corp., the S&L cleanup agency.

Clinton's comments marked the second time in a week his administration confirmed private meetings about the inquiry with government officials. All told, there were three such meetings, the White House said.

As part of an administration-wide effort to dampen the fire, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen ordered his staff to have no further contact with the White House about the case and referred the matter to the Office of Government Ethics "to ensure that all ethical guidelines were followed."

FLOODING

WILL THERE BE A REPEAT OF LAST YEAR?

BRIEFLY
Due to a below-normal snowfall in Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska, flooding is not likely to occur due only to melting snow and ice.

Low snowfall decreases flood chance

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The National Weather Service said there will probably not be a repeat of the flood of 1993.

Unless the weather changes drastically — and quickly — there is little chance for severe or widespread flooding due only to snow melt, said Steve Predmore, a National Weather Service hydrologist in Pleasant Hill, Mo.

Snowfall has been below normal for Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska. Nationally, freezing weather, deep snow cover and thick river ice have increased the threat of spring flooding in the eastern United States, the Ohio River basin and parts of the Midwest, especially the eastern Dakotas, western Minnesota and northwest ern Iowa. When the snow melt begins, the heavy snow could cause minor flooding along the Missouri River in northwestern Missouri, the weather service said.

The Mississippi River is running slightly higher than average and, coupled with normal rain, it could be pushed to flood stage or slightly above, said Jack Burns, a hydrologist with the National Weather Service in St. Louis.

The 1993 flooding began with a heavy snow cover. Early spring rains melted the snow. The combination "put a lot of water in the rivers, and then the rains did come to the upper states, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and really started filling them up. Then the water started moving our way, and the rains seemed to follow the flood crest," he said.

The 1993 flooding caused an estimated $12 billion in damage in the Midwest and was blamed for 48 deaths.

D.C. task force asks for feedback

A lack of communication and education, the effectiveness of dams, the policies of the Army Corps of Engineers, or COE, and insurance programs were the main concerns of the residents of Manhattan and surrounding communities following last summer's floods.

Residents expressed these concerns to the Interagency Floodplain Management Review Committee, a special task force from Washington, D.C., assembled to evaluate procedures used during the floods and devise plans for better prevention and recovery from future floods.

The task force, which will tour the Midwest for six months, is visiting communities affected by the floods and is asking for the public's input and concerns about future flood protection.

"It has been very helpful being out in the fields and touring the areas damaged by the flood," Alma Ripps, program analyst for the National Weather Service and task force member, said.

NATIONAL NEWS

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

► POLICE REPORT NO MOTIVE IN HASIDIC SHOOTING

NEW YORK—A Lebanese man charged with shooting at a van full of Hasidic Jews claimed he was provoked by a traffic clash, a police source said.

Rashad Baz, 28, of the New York borough of Brooklyn, was held without bail this morning following his arraignment, while his lawyer claimed police had the wrong man.

Assistant District Attorney William Mahoney told Criminal Court Judge Albert D. Koch that Baz was identified in two lineups, and he gave police and prosecutors statements in writing and on videotape.

"The district attorney, in a rapid attempt to bring this case to a rapid close, may have arrested the wrong individual," Baz's lawyer said.

Baz was arrested early

Wednesday in the shooting on the Brooklyn Bridge that left one man brain-dead and injured three other teen-agers, one of them critically.

Police did not disclose a motive for the attack, which came four days after a Jewish settler from Brooklyn massacred at least 30 Muslims at a mosque on the Israeli-occupied West Bank.

Two other suspects, Hlai Mohammad, 32, and Bassam Reyati, 27, Jordanians living in Brooklyn, were charged with hindering prosecution and weapons possession. Police say they helped Baz dispose of the guns and the car used in the attack, which was found at a body shop with a broken passenger window.

► RUNWAYS MAY BE LENGTHENED AT La GUARDIA

NEW YORK — A third disastrous takeoff in less than five years has focused attention on the short runways of La Guardia Airport, where red tape has stalled an effort to widen the safety margin.

The airport, aware that it is on airline pilots' short list of fields they'd like to avoid, began planning more than five years ago to add 460 feet of overrun to its main east-west runway, where the latest accident occurred Wednesday evening.

Thirty-five of the 116 people aboard a Denver-bound Continental MD-80 jet were injured when the pilot tried to abort the takeoff in snow, and the plane ran off the end of the runway and nosed down at a breakwater a few feet from Flushing Bay.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators began looking for the cause Thursday, starting with retrieval of the plane's voice and flight-data recorders.

In the earlier takeoff accidents, two passengers died in September 1989 when the pilot couldn't stop a USAir jet from plunging into the bay, and 27 people were killed in March 1992 when wing ice sent another USAir plane crashing off the runway to burst into flames.

► SOUTH AFRICA MAY SEE 1ST ALL-RACE ELECTIONS

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — The leaders of a coalition of conservative blacks and pro-apartheid whites announced Thursday they might participate in the nation's first all-race elections if their demand for foreign mediation is met.

However, members of the Freedom Alliance indicated they wanted the historic April vote delayed, something both the white minority government and the African National Congress have rejected.

The Freedom Alliance conducted an emergency meeting today after a key member, Inkatha Freedom Party leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi, indicated he might take part in the vote.

Alliance members, including Inkatha, the pro-apartheid Conservative Party and the government of the nominally independent Bophuthatswana homeland fear their desires for self-determination would be ignored by an ANC government.

The ANC, South Africa's largest political group, is expected to win the April 26-28 election, making its president, Nelson Mandela, the country's first black leader.

Members of the Freedom Alliance have threatened civil war if their demands for regional autonomy are not met, and they could seriously disrupt the vote.

► SUPER POWERS PLAYING SPY GAME

MOSCOW — Russia struck back in the spy vs. spy squabble with the West on Thursday, saying an American diplomat urged two Russian men to collect secret plans for Russia's most sophisticated battle tank.

Western arms experts expressed surprise at the news that the T-82 tank even exists. The representative for Russia's top spy-catching agency said Thursday's announcement was the first confirmation of its existence.

It was the latest in a flurry of charges and counter-charges by Russian and Western intelligence agencies prompted by last month's arrest of an alleged CIA mole in Washington.

Russian officials have been miffed by the hand wringing and rhetoric from U.S. officials who angrily demanded Russia stop spying on the United States.

Thursday's announcement further supported Russia's claim that the West still spies on it, too.

► U.S. SEES DECLINE IN JOBLESS RATES

WASHINGTON — The number of Americans filing first-time claims for jobless benefits fell by 57,000 last week to the lowest level since Christmas, the government reported Thursday. It was the steepest decline since August 1992.

Analysts said a shortened holiday workweek contributed to the decline, helping to offset the continuing effects of wintry weather and the Los Angeles earthquake. But they also said the labor market is improving.

The Department of Labor said new applications for unemployment insurance totaled 318,000, down from 375,000 during the week ending Feb. 19.

REVIEW

Bars offer team spirit, quiet atmosphere

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Editor's note: This is the second in an on-going series of reviews of local taverns.

SCOREBOARD

Hours:
Monday-Friday, 5 p.m.-2 a.m.
Saturday and Sunday, 11 a.m.-2 a.m.
Cover: No charge on weekends, cover on "Wacky Wednesdays"
Specials: Daily drink specials
Crowd: Attracts older crowd of 5th-year seniors and graduate students because it has the image of being the hardest bar to get into as a minor.
History: Formerly Aggie Station, which was combined with what is now Longhorns and then later split up so that the bars could develop different formats. Scoreboard has been open since 1990.

Scoreboard has the spirit and enthusiasm of a crowd cheering its team to victory.

From the minute you walk in the door, you are pulled into the sports atmosphere. The eight TV screens, two big-screen TVs and sports memorabilia take a customer back to the years of the past.

K-State baseball uniforms are displayed behind glass cases. Bright green carpet covers the floor, sports pennants and a vivid cloth scoreboard line the wall, and a monstrous, red boxing mitt hangs from the ceiling.

Bartender Shaun Roberts said Scoreboard prides itself on being an older bar, has more sports than anyone and has K-State games on satellite.

"We have the widest range of satellites and are the only true sports bar in Aggieville," Roberts said.

Chris Cooper, K-State graduate, said he frequently came to Scoreboard for the dart boards, comfortable setting and sports events.

"When I didn't have tickets to the football games, I came in here to watch them on satellite," Cooper said. "I usually couldn't get into the door because it was so packed. It was like being in the stands."

Mark Thomas, senior in milling science, said he goes to Scoreboard for the service and good drink specials.

"I go to Scoreboard to enjoy the nice service, sports pleasures and great food," Thomas said. "You can be anyone on campus, and you'll have a friend in Scoreboard."

AUNTIE MAE'S

Hours:
Monday-Saturday, 3 p.m.-2 a.m.
Sunday, 8 p.m.-2 a.m.
Cover: No charge
Crowd: "Since we're in Aggieville, we have our share of college students, but we also have professors and military guys. We don't shoot for a certain crowd," manager Rob Goode said.
Specials: Mexican food, microbrews
History: Opened in the 1970s. Auntie Mae's used to be a doorway, which basically dropped off into a hole. It was later turned into a modern club with couches and a lounge atmosphere.

Auntie Mae's gives a new twist to the bar scene.

Instead of having a dance floor, an abundance of televisions or bright lights, Auntie Mae's is located in a dimly lit basement with a rustic interior.

A room with a pool table is off to the left of the doorway; a colorful grandma with a K-State sweatshirt is painted on the wall, and wooden stairs lead down to the bar, booths and dart machines.

When I first walked in, I noticed two men playing pool. After talking to them, I discovered they were K-State graduates who used to come to Auntie Mae's four times a week for the friendly atmosphere and older crowd.

"We came here for the familiarity," Scott Munsen, Atchison, said. "It used to be a hangout for us, and we wanted to come back and try out the new pool table."

As I made my way down the stairs, I saw pockets of middle-aged men and college students playing darts, relaxing in the booths and sitting at the bar.

Tom Bartelli, senior in engineering, said it was his first time in Auntie Mae's.

"I like it and think it's cool so far,"

he said. "I like it when it's empty because I would feel claustrophobic if it was crowded."

A table of Manhattan residents and college students celebrated the end of the work week at a booth on the other side of the bar. The group comes to Auntie Mae's four or five times a week during the afternoons to avoid the crowds, get a seat, hear each other talk and establish a relationship with the bartenders.

"I come here for the food, folks, fun and beer," Alan Marsh, junior in broadcast journalism, said.

Bartender Todd Wilkenson said Auntie Mae's does good business because the customers want to get away from the hustle and bustle of dance clubs.

"We have a good, regular crowd who come here to converse, get away from young crowds and have a nice, quiet beer," Wilkenson said.

LUCKY BREWGRILLE

Hours:
Monday-Sunday, 11 a.m.-2 a.m.
Cover: No charge
Crowd: "We have an older college crowd and surrounding Manhattan residents," manager Mike Colsson said.
Specials: Daily drink specials.
History: Open since June 1993

Lucky BrewGrille, the land of "megabeers, righteous eats and good times," has gained popularity as the place to meet people in Manhattan.

"Lucky's is a new spot and a place to be seen because of the newness, cleanliness, the space we have and the variety of beers," Colsson said.

The bar features a fireplace, darts, wood-fired pizzas and entertainment. I felt at home with the loud music, lively college crowd and relaxed attitude.

Lucky has an open setting, bright lights and wooden tables and chairs in the front, and private booths in the back.

"I come to Lucky's for the great beer selection and lovely waitresses," Rich Petrisko, graduate student in kinesiology, said.

The bar has only been open for nine months, and the weekends are always packed solid with customers.

"I hate having to wait in lines if I don't get here early, but I think Lucky's has a typical cool atmosphere," Joe Denel, Hoisington, said.

Perceptions divide minorities, whites

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A new poll offers an unflattering profile of whites in America by non-whites, who agree two-to-one with assertions that white people are insensitive, bigoted and bossy.

"Whites and people of color are divided by a vast perceptual gap," the National Conference said in releasing the poll.

The ecumenical group was founded in 1927 as the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Eighty percent of blacks, 60 percent of Hispanics and 57 percent of Asian Americans are convinced their opportunities are unequal, the poll found. Within each group, majorities said the other groups are discriminated against.

Yet when it comes to specific treatment in the workplace, schools, courts, media, housing and credit markets, whites are much more likely than blacks to see opportunities as equal for minorities, the poll found.

Two in three minority group members agreed with assertions that white people are insensitive to other people, have a long history of bigotry and believe they can boss other people around.

At the same time, minority groups are more likely than whites in the poll to agree with negative stereotypes about other minorities.

Sanford Cloud Jr., the first black president of the group, said, "There's a lot of work that needs to be done within communities of color regarding their feelings toward each other."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

It's time for bikers to pay fair share

With the new fee, there could be more bike racks and better bike paths.

Riding your bike to campus could become less of a luxury than it used to be.

Parking Services is proposing a $5-per-year bike permit for students to park bikes on campus. With the new fee, there could be more bike racks and better bike paths for bike riders.

All the money made from bike permits will go to improvements for bicyclists.

Bike racks and bike paths are currently paid for with money from regular parking permits. Why should people pay higher prices for parking permits for more bike racks?

Also with the fee, new campus regulations would be started. Bikes would be registered with permits, which would help locate stolen bikes.

Also, enforcing the rule against riding bikes on sidewalks would be possible, making it safer for rider and pedestrian alike.

Bikes not chained to racks will be wheellocked like cars. This will keep people from chaining their bikes to anything and everything, such as handicap-access ramps.

One drawback would be that the person who occasionally rides to campus would risk a ticket or locked bike.

Complaints have arisen from students saying they shouldn't have to pay to park a bike on campus. A better question: Why should people who drive cars to campus pay for things such as bike racks?

Assessing bike riders a small fee to furnish the University with more bike racks, and possibly more bike paths, is the fairest way to solve the problems that arise from cyclists.

How not to succumb to the dreaded spring fever

There has not been a situation in my life I have not found a way to deal with in a positive manner.

Drug abuse, homelessness, beatings — all of these horrible things struck something hard in me that I managed to turn into something beautiful.

But I have been struck with a situation I cannot make anything positive out of it. God knows I have tried.

The snow has melted, the daffodils are coming in, and I have the most overwhelming case of spring fever anyone has ever been infected with.

You know spring fever — the overwhelming urge when not only does the snow melt, but also your will to do anything but bask in the sunshine and cuddle like bunnies with the nearest breathing thing. (Well, excluding members of the administration — they haven't breathed in years.)

You'd think after five years, I would have learned how to deal with the happy-go-lucky mindset and such. But no matter how old I get, the same thing happens. I am just a little slower when I run nekkid through the dandelions. (This year, the cops might actually catch me.)

I did the best I could to take care of the problem myself at first. I took cold showers and thought about death, taxes and my rapidly declining grade point average. It didn't do any good. I even wore all black for a day — to keep myself in a sober and tragic "theater/English major" kind of mind, but that didn't do anything but give me the desire to strip in front of Jon Wefald's office and do the Tanzanian fertility dance.

So, I decided, in my usual way, to see how others managed to deal with the warm weather during the middle of midterms, still two full weeks away from spring break. I figured, what else was I going to use my Collegian Press Pass for, besides demonstrating the effectiveness of my leg razor.

From department to department and person to person, I garnered every piece of information I could, from the ridiculous to the unbelievable. You wouldn't believe what I found.

"Stand on your head upside down and drink a glass of water," someone said.

"I thought that was to get rid of the hiccups," I said. "I want a cure for spring fever."

"Oh. OK. To fix spring fever, I think you should do it naked," he told me. "Uhh, smeared with baby oil."

Whatever!

There was a young woman crawling from Seaton Hall, a T-square in her hand. I grabbed her by the back of her ragged shirt and asked her the same question. She looked at me strangely for a moment and then mumbled "reconstruction" under her breath and died in my arms.

I buried her in a mass grave in back of Seaton Court. Anyone who wants to can leave a memorial donation in my name to the Ahearn Roof Fund.

"Leave your windows open," someone else told me. "But take out your screens. That way if you do badly on your midterms, you won't damage it when you dive through the window."

"I wear women's underwear." The man who said this holds far too high a position at this University, let me tell you.

I knew, though, that the only advice out of all I heard that I would follow was simple and sensible.

"Succumb."

If you see a really weird brown, nekkid body racing through the dandelions in front of Kedzie Hall, the Kampus Kops puffing after it, you'll know that's what I did.

WILLIAM MCKEAN

Universities across the nation have attempted to come up with a solution to the problem by creating diversity-overlay plans. K-State Faculty Senate right now is working on one of these proposals.

For those who do not know, the proposal in present form would require a student to enroll in a three-hour class that increases cultural understanding.

The classes that fulfill this requirement will be chosen by appointed faculty members.

What exactly will this mean for students? It means more of our freedom to choose what classes we want to take and what subjects we want to learn about will be taken away from us.

I can understand why core courses must be required for students to fulfill their degree requirements, but these should be the only courses that are required by the University.

If a student is an engineering major, then he or she should be required to enroll in courses that concentrate on engineering or engineering-related subjects.

Courses such as General Psychology or a humanities credit should not be required. This includes courses that increase cultural understanding.

These courses are not necessary to understand engineering, but they are somewhat necessary to understand life and its intricacies.

I am thoroughly against the idea of required courses outside the core curriculum courses because it detracts from the freedom of the students to make choices.

But I do believe it would be extremely ignorant for students not to take the opportunity to educate themselves in other areas besides their majors, including cultural diversity.

I base this on the old adage, "You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make it drink."

A proposal such as the diversity overlay will do nothing but require another course in which students realize they are being forced to learn about a subject, and this will decrease their desire to learn.

I have enjoyed almost every one of my courses I have taken. This is because I had a desire to learn all the subjects, and I had interest in the subjects before realizing it was necessary to enroll in them.

There was one subject, though, that I was not thrilled about, but it was necessary for me to take. Consequently, I did poorly in the course. I continuously complained because I knew it was required.

On the other side of the coin, I enrolled in courses that developed my knowledge and understanding of other cultures. This was even before there was such a proposal as the diversity overlay.

Why did I do this? Because knowledge is an important thing. I realized that for me to succeed in today's society and come out on top (being successful, being happy, being rich, whatever), I knew part of the recipe was to learn about other cultures.

People spend too much time saying "do this" rather than explaining why it might just be beneficial to the students' post-college success if they don't.

A sad but honest fact is education is becoming one of the least-respected things in this country. I say this from the viewpoint that the desire for knowledge and the willingness to put time into gathering that knowledge are not respected.

If I had a dime for every time I heard a student say, "That course sucks, but I have to take it," I would be a rich man. (Maybe that's another way I can become rich.)

Something I believe would be a more effective proposal would be to eliminate all required courses outside the student's core curriculum.

Creating a list of courses that are not required but recommended for students to broaden their minds and give them a better understanding of the world around them, courses that will make them a well-rounded student, would be the ideal.

Yes, on this list should be courses that teach cultural diversity. We, as students, should choose the direction of our lives at this point.

This includes whether to waste our time and money in some "easy-A course" or take the chance and learn something that will make us smarter and increase our opportunities to succeed. The answer is not hard to find.

► BICYCLES

Registration sounds great — well, maybe I spoke too soon

Dear Editor,

Finally, something is going to be done about bicycles on campus. Now that cyclists are going to be speaking the language in which the University is most fluent, namely cold hard cash, maybe we will get represented for a change.

Possibly people won't walk on the bike paths by Durland, and staff won't park their vans in the bike path in front of Anderson. Maybe we'll get more bike racks — at last report in the Collegian, they were only $500 apiece — almost as much as I spent on my last bike.

What we'll probably get, though, is just what Mr. Duane Archer wants — more guidelines and regulations to keep us in our places and a Big Brother to take down our identity numbers when we transgress.

If you don't pray facing Detroit, the administration really doesn't want to hear from you.

The next thing you know, the University will be talking about displacing all of the people who use the fields over at the old stadium to put up a parking garage.

► ORCHESTRA

Get a clue — screaming babies don't make for good music

Dear Editor,

I would like to respond to the letter from Paul English regarding David Littrell's action at the KSU Orchestra concert.

Dear Paul: Get a clue, bucko. Dr. Littrell took the only course of action open to him in waiting until the woman and her child were escorted out of the auditorium between movements of the Saint-Saens symphony. The child had been distracting the orchestra members since the beginning of the concert, first by being allowed to play with dollar bills throughout the Rossini and the Liszt works, then by whining and crying throughout the Saint-Saens.

People who can't behave don't belong at concerts of this type, regardless of age.

When Dr. Littrell turned, looked and waited for silence, he was exercising his only option, at his first opportunity, as a conductor and an educator. His first duty as a conductor is to ensure optimum performing conditions for his musicians.

We in the orchestra were certainly not being afforded the best possible playing conditions. Musicians at the front of the stage were distracted by the child during the first half of the concert, and we were all suffering from broken concentration by the time Littrell took the opportunity to silently plead for silence.

Any embarrassment the woman suffered she brought on herself through her total ignorance of basic concert etiquette and lack of respect for the music and the performers. I hope she learned something Tuesday evening.

Yes, it was a free concert. Wasn't that nice? Dr. Littrell (who, by the way, is a home-town boy) is bringing culture to our fair community, and he, the music and the performers have the right to a little common courtesy. It doesn't matter where the concert happens. It's the music, Paul, the music.

► MUSIC UPROAR

There was no death stare — only a hint to be courteous

Dear Editor,

I would first like to thank Paul English for his compliment on our performance.

Secondly, I must disagree with his appraisal of our conductor's behavior. He made it seem as though the concert was disrupted right in the middle of a piece. That was not the case. There is a pause between the second and third movements; it is up to the conductor's discretion how long that pause will be.

He was not stopping the concert to single out an unsuspecting mother and child. He merely hesitated to give the mother an opportunity to take the child out. I could see Littrell's expression, and it was hardly one of anger or the "death stare" as you suggest.

This may not be New York, but we deserve just as much respect as if you had paid $50, which includes not wearing shorts to our concerts, not clapping between movements and removing children who become disturbing.

We've spent no less than 28 hours in rehearsals and countless hours of individual practice. We ask for nothing more than an audience that maintains some sense of decorum.

► BABY AND THE MUSICIANS

A few baby noises don't justify stopping in middle of concert

Dear Editor,

I have always enjoyed listening to the orchestra — it is one of the finest. However, the past two concerts I attended, I have become disturbed by the conduct of David Littrell, the conductor.

On both occasions, he has made a point to stop the concert due to the sounds of a baby. When it happened the first time, the baby was annoyingly loud; however, on this occasion the baby was barely audible, and it was before an extremely loud movement.

I understand that he takes his job and the orchestra seriously, but to make such a scene was not only embarrassing to the mother, but it was embarrassing to the image of professionalism that I feel the orchestra carries.

If he wants to make such a big deal about the possibility of occasional excess noise, then he needs to put something in his programs saying not to bring children to the concerts.

Serbs disrupt cease-fire

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bursts of gunfire on a front line in central Sarajevo today put the city's cease-fire in question for a second day. But U.N. officials suggested the shooting was isolated and would not escalate.

While a separate, week old Muslim Croat truce in central Bosnia and southwestern Mostar appeared to be mostly holding, the head of the U.N. mission in former Yugoslavia, Yasushi Akashi, said in Zagreb, Croatia, today that he needed nearly 11,000 additional peacekeepers to enforce both cease-fires.

Serbs fired small arms toward the Jewish cemetery in downtown Sarajevo at about 8 a.m. Thursday said U.N. spokesman Maj. Jose Labandeira.

French troops deployed on the government-held side of the front line, who apparently were not targeted, fired warning shots. Russians are deployed on the Serb side.

On Wednesday, Serbs launched four rocket-propelled grenades at government troops in the vicinity of the cemetery, prompting a gun battle, U.N. officials said.

Labandeira said three more grenades were fired today, but U.N. monitors had not yet determined who fired them.

The U.N. brokered cease-fire, now three weeks old, is the longest ever in the Bosnian capital, which has been under siege from Bosnian Serbs for nearly two years. It was enforced by a NATO ultimatum for Serbs to pull back heavy weapons from around the city, place them under U.N. control or face air strikes.

Grenade launchers were not listed among the heavy weapons that had to be removed from a 13-mile radius around Sarajevo. U.N. commanders did not deem the cease-fire violations serious enough to call in air strikes.

U.N. officials quoted Serbs as saying they fired Wednesday's grenades because Muslim-led government forces were violating the cease-fire.

"Both sides are very, very close in that area, and it has always been very tense," said U.N. spokesman Lt. Col. Bill Aikman. "We are monitoring it and we expect that it will not continue."

U.N. peacekeepers were deployed along the front lines around Sarajevo and a similar scenario is planned for central Bosnia. Akashi said he needed 4,600 more troops for Sarajevo and 6,050 for the rest of Bosnia.

Gen. Jean Cot, commander of U.N. forces in former Yugoslavia, said they were needed immediately or the United Nations would risk losing what has been done. Cot suggested France and Britain contribute additional troops and that the United States join the U.N. force.

The United States has said it will consider sending troops to help patrol an overall peace settlement, which Cot described as not very courageous.

The United States is at the forefront of the NATO operation regarding Bosnia.

Central Bosnian front lines between Muslim led government troops and Croats were stable, Aikman said. Mostar was quiet except for a burst of five shells landing on the Muslim held eastern side late Wednesday.

Muslims and Croats, former allies, signed an agreement Tuesday in Washington to cease hostilities and form a federation.

In northeastern Bosnia, Serb forces were pounding government held areas around Brcko, where the Serbs seek to widen a corridor linking their territories in the east and west.

The Serbs have captured about 70 percent of Bosnia in 23 months of war.

In the northwest, Serbs launched a strong infantry attack on government troops in the Bihac pocket Wednesday, but government troops halted it.

Problems with aid convoys also continued. Serb, Muslim and Croat leaders all have signed accords pledging free passage for aid convoys, but they have been ignored repeatedly, especially by Serb commanders.

U.N. officials had suggested they would get tough with Serbs to ensure smooth movement of relief convoys, but two of them remained stranded today.

Kris Janowski, spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Sarajevo, said a convoy for Sarajevo, blocked since Monday by Serb women, was still stuck at Hadzici, 10 miles from the capital.

U.S. resumes North Korea talks

3rd round of talks, inspections key to success

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The United States agreed Thursday to resume high level talks with North Korea and to suspend military exercises with South Korea.

The announcement followed the start, earlier in the day, of international nuclear inspections in the North and talks at the border between North and South Korea. A State Department official said a third round of U.S. North Korea talks is to begin in Geneva, Switzerland, on March 21 and the training exercises would be suspended for this year only.

South Korea announced suspension of the exercises before the release of a State Department statement that said the decision will not weaken its joint capabilities. North Korea had viewed the exercises as preparation for war.

Both steps depend on the success of the inspections that began Thursday at seven North Korean nuclear sites and on the exchange of special envoys between North and South Korea. Undersecretary of State Lynn Davis said, who informed Congress of the measures.

And Winston Lord, assistant secretary of state for Asian affairs, told a briefing that the status of the military exercise depends upon successful completion of the inspections and exchange of envoys between the North and South.

The United States has no diplomatic relations with North Korea and has had only low level contact since a dispute over International Atomic Energy Agency inspections began a year ago.

Sens. Charles Robb, D-Va., and Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, both criticized the diplomatic steps.

Robb said he found it disquieting that the United States had given in with such minimal compliance.

Murkowski said administration officials should have waited for agreement to inspect two other critical nuclear waste sites.

Davis said North Korea understands that concrete steps will be necessary for improved relations. The U.S. goal, she said, is to create a nuclear free Korean peninsula.

Talks between North and South Korea in the border village of Panmunjom ended their first day Thursday without any report of progress, but Davis noted that the talks are to resume next week.

U.S. officials have said they believe the North has an active nuclear weapons program, but North Korea says it is only developing peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

House approves budget for public school system

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House tentatively approved a proposed budget Thursday for the state's public school system that would increase spending on special education programs by $25.4 million.

Democrats pushed for the increase in spending for special education.

To get the extra money added to the appropriations bill, they overcame opposition of Republican leaders, who said the state cannot afford the increase.

The House advanced the bill on a voice vote. A final vote is scheduled for Monday, and if the measure passes, it will go to the Senate.

Democrats forced roll-call votes on amendments to add money five times, in hopes of getting support from Republicans who might be wary of voting against spending on schools.

The bill would appropriate $1.96 billion to the state Department of Education for fiscal year 1995, which begins July 1.

The figure includes property taxes raised by local districts under direction of the state.

The total compares with $1.81 billion in the current fiscal year.

Under the 1992 Kansas school finance law, the state sets a single-base budget and property tax mill levy for all school districts.

For the 1993-94 school year, those figures are $3,600 per pupil and 33 mills.

Special education programs are a separate part of the Department of Education budget.

In theory, the state is supposed to pay for "excess costs," the amount of money it takes on average to educate a child in a special education class, above the amount it takes to educate a child in a conventional class.

This year, the state is financing 73 percent of school districts' excess costs.

Under the bill, the state would finance 85 percent of those costs and spend $178.9 million on special education.

Democrats wanted to increase spending on special education by $34.9 million, so that the state would finance 90 percent of excess costs. The amendment failed on a 61-62 vote.

News and more.

K-State enters tourney with big plans

BRIAN ANDERSON

Collegian

The K-State women's basketball team got a scare in its final regular-season game against Sacramento State.

But the Wildcats were able to pull away and win, 69-55, against the Hornets.

The Cats (13-13 overall) trailed 49-46 with 6:58 left in the game when K-State went on a 23-6 run — 13 of the points by Shanelle Stires — and limited Sacramento State (14-11) to two of eight field goals for the rest of the game.

K-State coach Brian Agler said he was glad his team didn't give up.

"If we laid down and died, you would have seen us do it in Salina (in the Big Eight tournament)," Agler said. "It finally soaked in that we were playing somebody competitive. It may have taken 15 minutes or so to realize that."

Shawnda DeCamp sprained her right ankle in pregame warmups and left the Cats short-handed for most of the first half.

"With Shawnda going down, it was on our minds and we had to go out and shoot to make up the slack," said Lynn Holzman, who scored K-State's first eight points of the game.

DeCamp, who averaged 20.3 points per game going into the contest, came back late in the first half and finished with a season-low five points.

With both teams tied at 27 at halftime, Agler said the Cats played better defensively and stopped Kristy Ryan, who led the nation with scoring at 28.8 points per contest heading into the game, during the second half.

"We played better defensively," Agler said. "Lynn Holzman did a better job on Ryan, and we didn't give them any second opportunities."

"I talked to them about how good she is. We didn't realize what it took to stop her for a while."

Ryan finished with 27 points, making nine of 25 field goals, and 20 rebounds.

K-State's leading scorer was Stires, who had 23 points and made nine of 11 free throws and grabbed 10 rebounds. It was her 10th double-double of the season.

Agler confident Cats can win

JEREMY CRABTREE

Collegian

When K-State women's basketball coach Brian Agler was asked who he thought would win the Big Eight Conference Tournament this weekend in Salina, he had an easy answer.

"Us."

The Wildcats defeated Sacramento State 69-55 Thursday night.

"I definitely think that we can win it if we get past the first game on Saturday against Oklahoma State," he said. "About anybody can beat anybody at this point in the season."

The Wildcats enter the tournament with the No. 6 seed, and their opponent in the first round is the Oklahoma State Cowgirls, the No. 3 seed.

It seems that Agler's enthusiasm has worn off on the Cats, also.

"Coach talks in the locker room about winning it all," senior wing Andrea O'Neal said. "I think that we can win it, and we are going out there thinking that we can win."

"We're ready to play Oklahoma State."

Earlier this season, the Cats beat Oklahoma State in Bramlage Coliseum by 12 points. However the Cowgirls returned the favor in Stillwater, Okla., defeating K-State by 12 points.

"To beat them, we can't give them second opportunities," Agler said. "We can't play defense by grabbing and reaching. Oklahoma State also gets a lot of points on turnovers, so we can't turn it over."

Shawnda DeCamp forces Kristy Ryan to call a time-out Thursday night during K-State's 69-55 victory against Sacramento State. DeCamp had just five points in the victory.

Wildcats face tough competition

BRIAN ANDERSON

Collegian

Now that K-State's women's basketball team has finished its game against Sacramento State, the Wildcats will face tough competition in the Big Eight Women's Tournament.

The tournament begins Saturday night at the Bicentennial Center in Salina.

The first game of the day is Oklahoma (15-11) against Nebraska (16-12), starting at noon. Both teams took one game from each other — the Sooners, No. 5 seed, won 79-78 in the first game, and the Cornhuskers, No. 4 seed, took the second game by a 82-76 margin.

Oklahoma is led by Etta Maytubby. Maytubby ranks among the top 10 in scoring (16.2 points), rebounds (6.9), field-goal percentage (51.7) and three-point percentage (41.3).

Nebraska's top player is Nafeesah Brown. In the conference, she ranks first in scoring and rebounding with 19.1 points and 9.2 rebounds per game.

The second contest of the afternoon is No. 8-seeded Iowa State versus No. 1 Colorado, beginning 30 minutes after the Sooners-Cornhusker game.

The Cyclones (8-18) were swept by the Buffaloes — a 73-48 loss at Boulder, Colo., and a 79-52 loss in Ames, Iowa.

The Colorado Buffaloes have won the Big Eight regular season title every year since 1989. The Buffaloes (23-3) are ranked third in the country by the Associated Press and CNN/USA Today polls.

Senior Jamillah Lang is the main shooter for Colorado. Lang averages 18.7 points and 7.2 rebounds a game. Lang received co-Big Eight Player of the Year honors for her season performances. Angela Aycock of KU was also named.

No. 7-seeded Missouri and No. 2 seed Kansas face off in the third game of the day at 6 p.m. The Jayhawks beat the Tigers in the first game 68-52 in Lawrence, but upset Kansas 78-77 in the second game in Columbia, Mo.

Kansas has won six tournament titles since the inception of the tournament in 1976, including last year. Coach Marian Washington said her team has done well in the post-season.

"I think that I have always worked to peak at the tournament," Washington said, as Kansas has compiled 27 wins in the tournament.

K-State, the No. 6 seed and 13-13 overall, battles Oklahoma State, the No. 3 seed and 18-7 in the regular season.

K-State's Shawnda DeCamp was named Big Eight Newcomer of the Year this season.

On Sunday, the second round of games will be played.

The final will be played Monday at 7 p.m.

TENNIS

Tennis a family affair for the Lagerstroms as they travel to cheer on daughter, Cats

The Lagerstrom family has traveled to South Bend, Ind., Albuquerque, N.M., Topeka and Manhattan from their home in Olathe. They will next add Fayetteville, Ark., to their list of sites.

When the K-State women's tennis team travels to Fayetteville, Ark., this weekend, three of its biggest fans will be there to watch.

The netters will compete against Arkansas on Friday and Baylor on Saturday.

A lot of sports have players whose parents travel all over to watch their children play.

But not many sports have someone whose parents travel to watch the team whether or not their child is competing.

Bob and Claudia Lagerstrom, whose daughter Nicole is a freshman on the team, have packed their car and driven from their home in Olathe to watch the netters play at South Bend, Ind., Albuquerque, N.M., Topeka and Manhattan.

Soon, they will have Fayetteville to add to their list.

The Lagerstroms, along with their dog, Muffin, drove more than 800 miles one way to Albuquerque to watch a match they knew Nicole wasn't going to compete in.

"Claudia and I both play a lot of tennis, so that's how we got interested in it. Since we are both tennis players, it makes it more interesting to watch the matches," Bob Lagerstrom said.

Traveling these long distances for the love of the game has earned the Lagerstroms the recognition of tennis coach Steve Bietau.

"It's great that they come to all of the matches. I have a lot of respect for anybody who loves the game," Bietau said.

During matches, the Lagerstroms keep their distance to avoid becoming a problem — something Bietau said is important.

"The most important thing is that they make it to all of the matches," Bietau said.

"The next is how they distance themselves."

"Tennis parents have a reputation of being pushy, but they are anything but pushy. They are the ultimate in sports fans."

Claudia didn't miss a single match of Nicole's while she was at Olathe North High School.

This spring, the Lagerstroms have only missed one tournament, the Rolex Indoor National Championships, and that was because Karina Kuregian was the only K-State competitor.

"There is no one else there to cheer us on when we're on the road. There is only the team, and that's it, so at least there is someone there," Nicole said.

The presence of the Lagerstroms hasn't gone unnoticed.

"It's just amazing how much they love tennis. The whole team really appreciates them coming," Kuregian said.

Lagerstrom

"It really helps us. It gives the team a lot of support."

When the Wildcats face the Razorbacks on Friday, the Lagerstroms will see an Arkansas team that has improved from last year.

"They're stronger than last year," Bietau said. "Their depth is better now, so I'm expecting a good match."

Things won't get easier for the Cats against Baylor on Saturday.

"From what I've seen, they may be a little stronger than Arkansas," Bietau said.

The Cats will have to go without Kuregian, their top player.

The sophomore will sit both matches out because of a back injury.

Bietau said he is taking a conservative approach to dealing with the injury to avoid aggravating the injury.

"I think that the situation without Karina playing is good. It makes it clear what needs to happen if we are going to be a successful team," Bietau said.

Whatever happens, though, one thing is for sure. The Lagerstroms will be there to cheer on the Cats.

Last night was championship night in four of the divisions in K-State intramural basketball.

All four winners will advance to the all-University tournament that starts play at 7 p.m. on Sunday.

In the 6-foot and under division, it was the Gators winning the title, 81-67, against FHL.

The Gators advance to play the fraternity champion, Tau Kappa Epsilon, on Sunday.

The TKE's won the fraternity division title after defeating Delta Upsilon, 52-48.

For the independents, it was Ehlo, the No. 1 ranked team, downing the Big Dogs, 87-78.

Ehlo, which has been the top-ranked team all season, will face Haymaker 4.

Haymaker 4 won the residence hall title by defeating Marlatt 5, 42-37.

The game was close until late in the first half, when Haymaker 4 went on a 13-0 run to take a 21-8 lead.

Thursday night also showcased the women's semifinal games. WKS Hoopsters beat Hoops 57-33 in the first game.

In the other semifinal, it was Seagrams winning 50-41 against Vet Med Women.

The women's final is scheduled for Sunday. The men's final is Monday at 7 p.m.

Wildcats travel to Iowa ending regular season against Cyclones

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

K-State will move into its final regular-season game at Iowa State knowing its only hope for an NCAA tournament bid is to win the Big Eight Tournament.

So, what is at stake Sunday at 1 p.m. at Hilton Coliseum besides sixth place in the conference? Ending the season with a win and gaining momentum for the post-season.

"We need to go to Iowa State and get a win," Deryl Cunningham said Wednesday night after a 68-57 loss to Missouri.

The loss to Missouri dropped K-State to 4-9 in the conference and 17-10 overall. Iowa State is coming off two conference road victories at Colorado and Oklahoma and an 83-81 defeat at the hands of Oklahoma State in Ames, Iowa.

"They are playing really well right now," Coach Dana Altman said.

K-State defeated the Cyclones 76-70 on Jan. 29 in Bramlage Coliseum. The storyline was a familiar one for the Cats.

Askia Jones led the team in points with 25, and Deryl Cunningham led the team in rebounds with 10.

The Wildcats dominated the boards with 20 offensive rebounds, which translated into hard-earned points.

"They sure seemed to score easier than us, didn't they?" Altman said after the meeting between the two teams. "It just seemed like their baskets were easy, and we worked hard for ours."

Recently, nothing has come easy for the Cats at Ames.

K-State has been sent home from Hilton Coliseum with a loss the past three times the team has traveled there, including last year's 79-61 loss to end the regular season.

"It's always tough going," Altman said. "It is a tough place to play for a lot of teams in the league. The last three or four years it has been tough for us, too."

The Cyclones are led by junior forward Fred Hoiberg.

Hoiberg is the only player in the conference to rank in seven of the league's top 10 statistical categories, including first in free throws by hitting 87.2 percent of his charity shots.

He averages 20.1 points, seven rebounds and 3.8 assists per game, leading the team in all three categories.

"Hoiberg is a good player," Altman said. "He does just about everything for them. He's a complete player."

Hoiberg scored 22 points against K-State in the first matchup of the season.

Also on the minds of the Cats is center Julius Michalik. The 6-foot-11 junior is averaging 19.5 points and 5.6 rebounds per game.

Michalik scored a career-high 37 points against Colorado on Feb. 1. He ranks second in the conference in field-goal percentage at 56.7 percent.

Three-point shots are not out of his range, either. He has stepped outside the paint and hit a three-pointer in 11 of Iowa State's 24 games so far this season.

"They are a very good team," K-State guard Anthony Beane said. "It's going to take our best effort to win."

Rugby, lacrosse start spring seasons with home games

JEFF SMITH

Both the K-State men's lacrosse team and men's rugby team begin their spring seasons Saturday in Manhattan.

The lacrosse team will be playing against the University of Missouri at 1 p.m. in the Memorial Stadium.

"It should be a good match to start the season," Curt Thurman, K-State men's lacrosse coach, said.

The team has eight starters returning from last season.

"Hopefully, we will be able to get in a lot of new players," Thurman said.

The men will play one match consisting of four 15-minute quarters.

"Our team has come together really well, and we have a really good chance of winning our league," Thurman said.

At the same time as the lacrosse game, the K-State men's rugby team will kick off its season. The men will be playing the University of Nebraska in the A-side match at the field adjacent to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"I think we will be pretty even. Nebraska has had their team together for awhile," Danny Blea, K-State's men's rugby coach, said.

The rugbys also have a lot of new players out this spring.

"I think our pack may have an edge, because of their strength, speed, and they have a firm grasp of the basics of the game," Blea said.

The rugbys also will be playing Emporia State in a B-side match.

"It will be nice to get the opportunity to play against someone else and seeing if our hard work will pay off," Blea said.

The A-side match will start at 1 p.m., followed by the B-side game.

"I think this will be the beginning of a great season," Blea said.

Players try to break recent losing streak

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

After two losses at the hands of nationally ranked Wichita State, you would think the K-State baseball team might be feeling a little down.

It's not. Coach Mike Clark said playing some of the nation's best teams this early in the year, win or lose, is the most effective way to prepare the Wildcats when they begin conference play.

"These next few weeks, we'll face some teams that are top eight in the nation," he said.

"We've just got to stay positive. We don't want to get down — we don't want to wear them down, but that's where we want to go."

"We've got a bunch of freshmen and sophomores mainly out there, and if we can learn to play at that level, it just bodes well not just for the rest of this season, but for next year and the year after."

Until then, the Cats must prepare for a strong homestand this weekend as they try to break their three-game losing streak.

K-State goes up against the Northeastern Illinois Golden Eagles, who are 1-1 on the year after splitting two games against Iowa last weekend in Minneapolis, Minn.

Despite this week's losses, K-State pitchers have had some strong outings. Freshman pitcher Eric Yanz said the more he pitches, the better, no matter who he's up against.

"I wasn't really nervous against the Shockers," Yanz said.

"I was probably more nervous against Missouri Western this year than Wichita State."

Although Yanz picked up his first loss of the season, he went five solid innings Wednesday night, holding the Shockers to four runs on six hits.

K-State reliever Adam Novak also had some success this week, holding the Shockers to just one run on four hits in the final four and 1/3 innings Tuesday night.

Offensively for the Cats, it's been senior Jay Kopriva and a couple of freshmen infielders giving K-State more pop at the plate.

Kopriva, batting .429 with eight RBI, had hit safely in 11-straight games, dating back to last year's May 15 contest against Oklahoma.

It all came to an end in Wednesday's game, however, as he went 0-4 on the night.

Two K-State freshmen have caught fire early, with second baseman Scott Poepard leading the team, going .435, with two RBI and a triple.

Close behind is shortstop Todd Fereday, who is at .371 with eight RBI and a triple on the season.

Heading into the matchup with Northeastern Illinois, K-State is 5-4 for the season.

This weekend's action at Frank Myers Field begins at 2 p.m. Saturday, with Sunday's game starting at noon.

After this weekend's games, the Wildcats will travel to College Station, Texas, to play in the Texas A&M Classic.

Doctor educates internationally

MEREDITH REILLY

The women's health-care system in central Europe can be improved, a project care consultant for Project Hope, an American philanthropic organization focused on worldwide health care, said Thursday at the K-State Union.

Dr. Anne Wigglesworth, a Manhattan obstetrician, compared the women's health-care system in the United States to the system in central Europe.

"I think there's a lot to be learned about both systems," Wigglesworth said. "There are some things in their system that we can incorporate into ours to improve it."

Through Project Hope, which serves 33 countries, Wigglesworth has been able to give workshops on women's health issues in different countries.

During her presentation, Wigglesworth compared U.S. health care with systems she had experience with in Czechoslovakia and Hungary.

"People know nothing about their health," Wigglesworth said.

"Women's views on family planning are based on folk value."

One large difference between the countries is the role of the nurse, she said.

"The roles of nurses in America and central Europe have really diverged," Wigglesworth said.

She said nurses in America give advice, are more sensitive to patients and have more hands-on experience with patients.

The role of the nurses in central Europe is to mop floors, make coffee, clean the rooms and bring the doctors cigarettes.

"The role of the nurse is basically to act as a servant," Wigglesworth said. "Their training is done at the high-school level."

Another contrast, Wigglesworth said, is the way doctors are educated.

"Here in the United States, those who are about to graduate with a medical degree are actually out-doctoring," Wigglesworth said.

The students in the United States are performing some surgeries, examining patients and determining what is wrong with them, she said.

In central Europe, there is an enormous amount of academic education, and then students only have an apprentice-type training program.

The students mainly observe, and when they graduate, they have little hands-on experience, Wigglesworth said.

Hospitals are also different, she said.

Unlike the United States, central Europe doesn't have private rooms in its hospitals. Hospitals are set up like a campus, with a different building for each area of health, Wigglesworth said.

One audience member said she was surprised by the treatment of nurses.

"It seems so impersonal. The nurses, all they do is mop the floor," Shelley Mundhenke, sophomore in French and pre-medicine, said.

Mundhenke also said she was surprised by the fact that central European hospitals have no privacy because of the lack of single rooms.

REVIEW

Opera provokes variety of responses from reviewer

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Collegian

KSU Opera Theatre's production of "The Crucible" is at times compelling and entertaining, and at other times it is underdeveloped and awkward.

Admittedly, transcribing Arthur Miller's masterpiece play into an opera is a risky business. Bernard Stambler, the librettist, and Robert Ward, the composer, have failed to capture any of the drama and suspense that Miller so cunningly achieved.

Ward's music is, at its best, melodramatic. At its worst, it's plainly predictable. There isn't any standout piece of music you can identify with.

The opera of the "The Crucible" misfires in its evocation of the events that happened at the Salem witch trials. Some plays just don't make a good crossover into the musical world.

The most glaring problem with the musical version is the dialogue Miller produced. It is muddled and ends up losing its meaning.

The cast of any show cannot be blamed for script problems. On the contrary, there were many convincing performances, mainly by the vocally strong women.

Jennifer Edwards, as Elizabeth Proctor, was very strong. Edwards really got to the soul of Proctor, and she craftily outperformed the script by delving into the emotions that Miller created. Edwards was one of the few performers who could cross over from passionate to fearful. She lies for John Proctor, frantically trying to save him, and ultimately, she lets him die without shame.

Another strong performer, David Perkins, playing Rev. Samuel Hale, truly realizes the meanings of his character. At first, he believes the girls' accusations of witchcraft, but he distinguishes the girls as liars in the end. Perkins is very convincing, a rare quality in the cast.

There were some shaky performances. Many of the actors were very predictable and contrived.

Aggie Callison, playing Abigail Williams, never really entrusts her character to the show. For all the audience knows, she was playing Cinderella. The precise mark of Miller's Abigail was missing. There was never a bitchy, double-crosser image conveyed in the performance. It definitely added to the show's weakness.

The part of John Proctor, played by Richard Webster, is by no means simple to perform. It is so easy to let Proctor become an expressionless, stock character. While Webster didn't entirely explore Proctor's feelings, he didn't ignore them. Instead of intense facial gestures, he seemed to express himself mostly by knocking over several chairs and repeatedly throwing flowers. It's another instance of the opera not living up to the play. You simply cannot convey Proctor through music.

Technically, the show was excellent. The minimal set, coupled with the dramatic lighting, was very effective. The cruciform light at the beginning of the court scene was remarkable.

Charlotte MacFarland's direction was exceptional. She is a superb arranger. The cast maneuvered into dramatic positions quite well. The action never appeared contrived. The quaint choreography was incorporated into the show without drawing attention away from it.

Notwithstanding, this cast has worked hard on this production. Even the virgin operagoer can understand the complexity of a show like this. However, if you enjoy Miller's version, you may feel slighted.

A Carpinteria, Calif., teen-ager decided he wanted to do something different for his upcoming graduation from Carpinteria High School.

So, he went to court last week to legally change his name from Peter Eastman Jr. to Trout Fishing in America.

Trout said he decided to change his name to break away from tradition.

"I am just saying I am not this little kid anymore. I want to be my own person."

The name was inspired by Richard Brautigan's 1967 counterculture classic, "Trout Fishing in America."

"I really liked the book," Trout said. "He looks at the world in a way I like."

Peter Eastman Sr. said he supports his son's decision, but said he was sad that the family torch has been passed to a fish.

The boy's mother isn't sure what to call her son.

"Trout Fishing in America is a little long," Addie Green said.

Just in case you're keeping track out there, this is Mutilated Genitals Smattering No. 4.

An Anchorage, Alaska, woman was charged with felony assault last week for allegedly biting through the skin of her boyfriend's penis.

Sarah Louise Anchayok, 36, apparently had discovered that her boyfriend had been cheating on her.

Officers answering an emergency call said they found the injured man sitting on a couch with blood on his face, shirt and the crotch area of his long underwear.

The officers said the man told them "his old lady bit him."

That's funny — it sure sounds religious to us

A couple in Schenectady, N.Y., who billed themselves as experts on the spiritual and paranormal, lured young girls into bizarre sexual rituals with promises they could end their troubles, police said Wednesday.

Robert L. Barron and Nancy Ruth Ziegler were arrested Tuesday and charged in connection with a Feb. 18 "wedding" ceremony that police said was performed by Ziegler.

Barron, who allegedly had sex with the 15-year-old girl, cut her with a razor blade and drank her blood, police said.

Barron and Ziegler have lectured in the area and investigated unexplained occurrences such as hauntings and unidentified flying objects.

Police said the couple told them the "wedding" ritual was based on a Native American religious practice.

"I don't think that was any part of a religious experience. I think he just liked doing that," Schenectady Police Investigator Lincoln Grimm said.

Take a Prozac and some Matzoh balls and call me in the morning

Psychologist Jim Goodwin of Wenatchee, Wash., has been called the Pied Piper of Prozac, accused of dispensing the antidepressant drug too freely and without adequate evaluation of patients.

It took him 15 minutes to suggest that Associated Press writer Aviva Brandt try Prozac to relieve what Goodwin called a mild form of depression.

"It's a genetic problem. Most Jews have it," Goodwin told Brandt.

Yeah, I shot them, but it's not like I killed 'em

A man accused of wounding six people during an attack last month in a Tulsa, Okla., fast-food restaurant is saying: "No one died. Doesn't that count for something?"

Authorities say Marcus Thompson, a Wendy's employee, emptied a .380-caliber semi-automatic pistol into the crowded dining area. Three co-workers and three high school students were shot, including one teen who was hit five times.

In a handwritten letter to the Associated Press, Thompson wrote he is willing to accept any reasonable punishment he might get.

"All I want is to be able to do it and get on with my life and not be crucified by the media," Thompson said.

Do you know what a rave is?

Probably not. That's the way the underground prefers it.

The rave culture is mostly considered urban. Ravers are the people you see on television who make you ask, "Gosh, there are people like that?"

Raves began in England. People started having all-night, underground parties. Most of these parties involved heavy drug use, alcohol and deafening music.

It eventually made its way to Los Angeles. George Michael, the pop icon, used a rave setting for his video to "Killer/Papa Was a Rollin' Stone." You might have seen a rave on one episode of "Beverly Hills, 90210."

From Los Angeles, the rave made its way to New York. For the first few years in the United States, raves mostly took place in secretive places — a warehouse or a vacant lot. After a while, it caught on and entered the club-going mainstream. Kansas is about as mainstream as anyone can get.

The music is of the techno-pop dance persuasion, and the dance floor is decorated with hundreds of light combinations.

Manhattan and Riley County will finally get a taste of the rave scene. "Wonderave" is the place to be, sort of.

You see, no one has really heard of "Wonderave." Jenny Cox, senior in industrial engineering, and Jennifer Li, freshman in computer science, both said they had never heard of a rave, let alone "Wonderave."

"No idea," Scott Strohane, senior in architectural engineering, said. Who has heard of a rave?

The Riley County Police Department has never encountered a rave in this area. Captain Steve French, patrol division commander, said he had seen similar things. He said in the spring, the Manhattan High School seniors stage a kegger out in the country (most do). French also cited the parties that take place out by Tuttle Creek Lake, but nothing comes close to what is considered a rave.

There are, however, a few people on campus who have actually heard of rave.

Josh Walker, sophomore in finance, said he saw one on television. However, he said, he probably won't go to "Wonderave." Chuck Marlowe, junior in secondary education, said he saw a documentary about rave culture on television once.

One important aspect of rave culture is the clothing you must wear. Don't show up in a K-State sweatshirt and jeans. Ravers have invented their own form of garment expression. The idea behind it is to dress for the moment.

Start out with overly baggy, hyper-stitched jeans. Add a long, flannel plaid shirt over a T-shirt, preferably advertising marijuana. If you don't already own one, buy a beaded necklace or two and add a nose ring. Platforms or Tevas™ complete the outfit.

The idea here is not to dress conventionally, so change items at your disposal.

"Wonderave" is non-alcoholic. There will be a smart bar provided by Gatorave Inc. and Black Coffee Cafe. It will most likely be mixed drinks with no alcohol. There will be special effects provided by Ravenbird Productions. The mixing is by Sampson from Kansas City and Vincent from KSDB-92.

You've probably seen the hot pink signs around campus. There will be a map if you need one.

"Wonderave" is for all ages, so expect to see some high-school students. Unfortunately, you might even encounter junior-high students. The price of admission is $6.

Class creates, produces Cuzzle

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

What's the best way to show your Wildcat spirit?

To buy a Cuzzle, of course.

A Cuzzle is a cubic puzzle. It was unveiled as a project from the Manufacturing Systems Design Analysis class Thursday night at the Institute of Industrial Engineers Assembly.

The class allows students to design, produce and sell a product, Richard Armit, senior in industrial engineering and marketing, said.

The 2-inch by 3-inch purple cube, divided into several different shapes and sizes, appears simple to solve.

The first prototype of the Cuzzle is a little different than it will be when the product is perfected.

"When we mass produce it, it will be made out of plastic, and then we'll work out the color and fixtures. We really had a lot of last-minute changes," Armit said.

The idea for making a Cuzzle came from Kathy Gooch, senior in industrial engineering.

Gooch had produced a project similar for Junior Achievement, and the class expanded on the idea.

The Cuzzle is the first project made in the class that will be made out of plastic. Brian Bowman, senior in industrial engineering, said.

The class was limited in time to make the Cuzzle.

With only a semester to project, produce and market the product, the class only has eight weeks to come up with the prototype, Bowman said.

"The whole process would take a normal company at least a year to produce and market," Bowman said. "The funding for the Cuzzle came from actual stock that was sold for $1 a share, and any profits go to the share holders."

The marketing of the product is going to be tricky since the advertising budget is very small, Armit said.

"We're planning on presenting the project to large groups and having a Cuzzling contest sometime.

"The winners will receive a free Cuzzle."

There will be about 200 seven-piece Cuzzles produced out of six different molds.

The cost of the Cuzzle has not yet been decided.

"Once we get it produced and the system in place, we'll have a definite idea of the price," Bowman said.

The Cuzzle is aimed at the person with a lot of K-State pride, Armit said.

"It's something to remember your days at K-State," he said.

Flood forecasting system tested in U.S.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — American scientists scored a success with a detailed flood forecast last summer — for Egypt's Nile River.

Now, the same new technology, which might have improved warnings when the Mississippi River devastated middle America last year, is being installed in the United States.

The "Water Resources Forecasting System" went into operation on the Nile first because "they had the need and the money," said Curtis Barrett, manager of international technology transfer for the National Weather Service's Office of Hydrology.

Portions of the system are being tested on the Colorado River, and new computers are being installed in Minneapolis for flood forecasting on the upper Mississippi River.

But America's complex weather and geography, and the costs involved in installing a new system, mean it could take years for the system to be operational nationwide.

Bill allows exclusion of women

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY — The Utah Legislature passed a bill to allow the Elks and other fraternal organizations to discriminate against women and still hold state liquor licenses.

The Utah House, in the final hours of the session that ended Wednesday at midnight, voted 39-35 to amend the state's Civil Rights Act to exclude fraternal, sororal or charitable organizations from some provisions.

The Senate passed the bill earlier. Gov. Mike Leavitt would not say whether he intends to sign, veto or allow the measure to become law without his signature.

Opponents worry the action will promote discrimination. Elks and others say it protects freedom of association.

"This is not the same level of discrimination that we've been dealing with in some of the other measures before us," House Speaker Rob Bishop said. "All they want to do is be able to have a few drinks when they want, with whom they want and where they want. It's not that big of a deal."

Opponents said it is.

"We do not have the obligation to promote through the sale of state liquor licenses any sort of unfair and discriminatory practice on the part of these exclusive organizations," state Rep. Paul Shepherd said.

MORAL SUPPORT

Rev. Sterling Hudgins, an associate pastor at Living Water Ranch Church in Olsburg, is the chaplain for the K-State women's basketball team.

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

In today's troubled society, kids are shooting each other over a pair of $100 shoes.

Drugs are also running rampant in the streets, and professional athletes get paid millions of dollars for playing a child's game.

People say there are no heroes or role models left in sports, or in life, too.

The experts aren't always right, because there are some heroes left, and one resides here in northeastern Kansas.

You can see him sitting behind the bench at the women's basketball games and in the stands at the men's games.

He sits there always with a smile on his face, and an open ear for players and coaches to confide in.

His name is Sterling Hudgins, and he is the chaplain for the K-State women's basketball team.

He is also associate pastor at Living Water Ranch Church in Olsburg.

"Basically, I try to be moral support before the games," Hudgins said. "I pray for the team before they hit the floor. I go to practice and try to give them moral support."

"If someone is down, I try to encourage them, and I try to get them to believe in themselves."

But Hudgins' job goes way beyond the role of chaplain. He also is a guide and friend for the women's team.

"Everyone has the ability to become successful, as long as they have the right person encouraging them," Hudgins said.

"I think that too many times we have people that don't really see themselves as being successful."

"I try to be there for them, because a lot of the girls are coming from high school, and they're jumping right into an adult world."

"There are a lot of adjustments from high school to college, and then with the rigors of the basketball program, they have to be focused on the fact that they can make it," he said.

Hudgins said his joy in life is to help people realize that they can accomplish anything that they put their mind to.

"I come from a very hard background, where I never had people believe in me," Hudgins said.

"I wasn't supported in a lot of things that I did. But there was always something inside of me, telling me I can make it and that I was a good person."

"I feel like a lot of times that people in sports need someone that can come and speak to their true character, to speak to their abilities and to cause them to see something confident in themselves," he said.

His journey to the bench at K-State started back in 1979, at a tennis club in New Jersey.

"I played tennis with a club, and I was helping by giving them moral support," Hudgins said.

"I also prayed for the coaching staff, sort of like what I do here."

He then left New Jersey for Bible school in Oklahoma. Then he eventually came to Kansas to become an associate pastor at Olsburg.

"When I first came to Kansas, I didn't know a single thing about K-State," Hudgins said. "In fact, I hadn't even heard about it. But now I love K-State."

He got started at K-State in the 1989-90 season under interim coach Gayle Griffin.

That season under Griffin, who was filling in for former coach Matilda Mossman, the Wildcats went 20-10.

"I had just come to Kansas to be an associate pastor, and then I talked to Coach Griffin," Hudgins said. "We were really close friends. Then under coach (Susan) Yow I really got my start."

"For a while I didn't want to sit behind the bench. The first year that I did it, I didn't know if I should, and I never really asked. Then when I was asked, I said, yes, so I could support the team and be part of the game," he said.

Even with a frantic schedule between church and the women's basketball program, Hudgins maintains a special relationship with his family.

"Family is very important to me," Hudgins said. "There's my wife, Pat, that works in the Student Publications office, and then there is my daughter Sharneé. She is about 3 years old now."

"My family comes to all of the games, and they cheer the women's program on. We believe in and know all of the girls on the team. We think that they are great. Great young ladies."

What makes what Hudgins does special is the fact that he does not get paid for his services to the women's team.

"I do this from my heart," Hudgins said. "I'm down-to-earth, and I don't preach to them. You will make a bigger impact on people if you come to where they are at and be on their level."

Hudgins may not be able to do a 360-degree slam dunk like Michael Jordan, or shoot three-pointers like Mark Price, but he does score in another way. Every time he makes someone believe in themselves, he gets his own version of a dunk.

That sounds like the qualifications of a role model.

Breaking away from his visit with Wildcat Stacy Neal's father, Jim Neal of Winfield, Rev. Sterling Hudgins looks toward the flag during the national anthem. Hudgins spends time before games visiting with former players and player's parents.

Rev. Sterling Hudgins leads the women's basketball team through the Lord's Prayer in its locker room before the game against Iowa State.

Referendum could mean fee hike

TONY ISLER
Collegian

The Union Governing Board met Thursday night and gave its support to a draft of legislation regarding the K-State Union referendum.

The referendum would ask students if fees should be increased to issue bonds to finance expansion and renovation of the Union's facilities, services and programs.

"Student Senate will have their first chance to view the legislation next Thursday," Ed Skoog, student body president, said. "It is necessary for Senate to pass this legislation in order for it to appear on the April ballot."

If the legislation is passed by Student Senate, the referendum would be held in conjunction with the regular student government elections on April 12 and 13.

If the referendum passes, the fee increase would be set at $25 per semester, per full-time student.

Because there will be a $10 decrease in the Lafene Student Health fee, the financial difference to current students would only be $15. New students to the University would have the increase of $25 added to their total fees.

One aspect that might have an effect on the outcome of the referendum is the sale of 3.2 percent beer in the Union.

"I think it would be a good idea to look at other schools," Jack Sills, Union director, said. "The University of

Draft registration could come to an end

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government could end peacetime registration for the military draft with little risk to U.S. security, the Pentagon said Thursday. President Clinton said registration should continue temporarily.

Current all-volunteer forces and a reduced global threat make draft reinstatement highly unlikely. Consequently, peacetime draft registration could be suspended without irreparable damage to national security.

The Pentagon stopped short of recommending an end to the Selective Service system, saying, "We should continue draft registration while we study possible alternative uses, such as applications to national service."

President Clinton said Thursday that Selective Service should remain in place until the National Security Council concludes a similar review this spring.

"I concur in the secretary's recommendation that we should maintain registration while we study how to make the best use of Selective Service System capabilities and resources."

Residents voice flood concerns about all of the damage, but actually standing on a levee, with my feet sinking in the mud and looking at the river, has made a real impact."

Local residents were concerned about the lack of warning they received before the floodgates at Tuttle Creek were raised and the lack of education they received about the risk of owning property in a floodplain.

"What we really need to do is educate everyone about the risks of building on a floodplain," Gerry Galloway, executive director of the task force, said. "But we also need a balance between the public good and the individual good."

"The floodplain is a great place for the natural environment. We need to determine the cost of building on a floodplain and decide if it's appropriate. We have to take care of the people, the economic effects and the natural environment. How are we going to put all that together?"

Another concern was the effectiveness of the Tuttle Creek Dam and Reservoir.

"I own property on the Kansas River that is 100 years old," Dave Sager, a local flood victim, said.

"I had two structures that were located above the 100-year flood mark, and now one is gone, and I'm about to lose the other because of last summer's flood. That flooding situation was created by a man-made structure. It hadn't occurred naturally for hundreds of years."

Not only were residents unhappy with the effects of building a dam, they were unhappy with the way the COE controlled the flow of water.

"If they're going to use the floodgates like toilets and flush them every so often, then someone has to be held accountable for the damage the current does," Sager said.

Residents were also dissatisfied with the timeliness and amount of financial aid they received. Though some had flood insurance, they weren't sure how much of the damage would be covered.

"We have to educate people about the insurance program," Galloway said. "Some of the federal insurance carriers don't even know about their own policies, and that is a big problem."

It is problems like these that the task force was designed to solve, and after their six-month tour is over, they will prepare a report on their findings and suggestions for President Clinton.

"We want to find out what went right what went wrong," Galloway said. "We are going to see what steps we need to take now to prevent this devastation from happening again."

"Whatever we do this time ought to be right. Your family has been on this land for 100 years, and your children and grandchildren will be on it for 100 more years. We're survivors."

UGB presented with suggestions

"The University of Kansas sells beer, as does Wichita State University, and to take a look at these schools would benefit us here at K-State."

Skoog presented the UGB with suggestions for policy changes contingent of the passage of the referendum in April. One of the changes in food-service policy would be to allow the sale of beer in the Union.

"Beer sales could occur in Union Station as well as in the recreation area," Skoog said. "It could technically happen as soon as the referendum passed and a license is obtained, but there are many other factors involved."

UGB will meet again next week to discuss current policies and make any changes that could benefit the passing of the Union referendum. Besides the alcohol policy, another policy to be looked at are the third-party vendors and services policy.

"We know we need to change the Union," Malley Sisson, Union food service director, said.

"Bringing in new vendors such as Pizza Hut or Taco Bell would financially help the Union."

Sisson said the Union's beverage service is more profitable than its food service, and outside vendors could benefit the Union in the end.

Before any of these possibilities can occur, UGB must set new policies, and Student Senate must approve the legislation. It is then up to the students.

There will be a student forum conducted before the next Union renovation meeting to allow students to voice any concerns and ask questions about the proposed referendum and Union expansion/renovation project.

The forum is at 4 p.m. Tuesday in the Flint Hills room in the Union. "Students must have all the facts in order for this referendum to pass," Skoog said.

Student fulfills dream of degree has opened her home for Emura to stay as she finishes up the final details of her thesis. Emura declined to name the professor.

The Department of Landscape Architecture has also provided the resources for Emura so she can realize her dream, she said.

"People have given me moral support and helped me in many ways," Emura said.

She said her family will send her the funds she needs to finish her degree.

"My family will help me, but they haven't sent the money yet. I have some dollars to survive for the next two weeks," Emura said.

After she earns her master's degree in March, Emura said she will return Colombia, where she will have to earn enough money to repay her family.

"I'm going to go home and work and get money and then come back to the States for a summer job," Emura said.

Since the loss, Emura said she has asked the Union Bookstore employees, the lost-and-found counter and business offices to be aware of anyone depositing large sums of money in $100 bills.

Detective Richard Herrman of the K-State Police Department said the officers have also checked with Union staff, but so far, it has no witnesses, no suspects and no leads.

Bill to reserve death by injection premeditated murders, while the House proposal includes all premeditated murders and a short list of unintentional killings.

The Senate proposal, approved 22-18 on Tuesday, is designed to reserve death by lethal injection as the penalty for the most heinous crimes. Those crimes would include contract killings, intentional multiple murders, murders of law-enforcement officers and murders of children who are kidnapped as part of a sex crime.

Supporters of the House proposal, passed 70-55, say it will create more of a deterrent for criminals by including some unintentional killings.

The House would allow the execution of criminals who unintentionally killed during some felonies, such as kidnapping and violent sex offenses. Unintentional killings of law-enforcement officials would be covered.

Finney has promised to let a death penalty bill become law without her signature, despite her personal opposition to capital punishment.

The state's last executions, four hangings, were in 1965. In 1972, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down all states' death penalty laws as unconstitutional. The court allowed states to resume executions under new laws in 1977.

president. The vice president will assist the president in appointing cabinet members and act as a liaison between the vice president for institutional advancement and the SGA.

Student Senate had a first reading of a bill up for a vote next week that would continue the College Council Line Item fee at $1.75 per full-time student per semester and 50 cents per part-time student per semester.

Also up for consideration next week is a bill that would add a question to the student body president and vice presidential ballot concerning the Partnership for Excellence.

The question would ask students whether or not they would endorse a second year of student involvement in the Partnership.

During open period, Student Body President Ed Skoog and Frese spoke briefly in support of the union expansion.

Frese said there will be various student forums in the Union next Tuesday, March 8, at 4 and 5 p.m. in the Flint Hills Room, as well as a possible 12:30 p.m. forum Wednesday, March 9.

Russia in the winter

A Kansas State Collegian special section

Kansas State University offered a one week winter intercession trip to Russia to tour historical sites and experience Russian culture. Among those on the trip was a Kansas State Collegian photographer who produced this photo essay. Other members of the group contributed columns to help present a eclectic perspective of the week-long adventure.

TOP: Georgios Filiopoulos, junior in journalism and mass communications, and John C.K. Daly, assistant professor of history, make their way down the ramp of the Aurora cruiser. The ship fired a signal shot to announce the beginning of the Bolshevik revolution in 1917. ABOVE: A lone guard stands watch outside of the armory within the walls of the Kremlin. The K-State group spent part of one of its days in Moscow touring the Kremlin and the armory, which is now a museum.

ABOVE: Lloyd Gottschalk, senior in modern languages, dives for cover from a snowball attack from Mike Anderson on the campus of Moscow State University, where the group stopped to take pictures. RIGHT: "Onion domes," bearing the distinctive Eastern Orthodox cross, are often associated with Russian architecture. FAR RIGHT: Aaron McKee, sophomore in mechanical engineering, poses for a photograph atop a toppled statue of former Soviet leader, Josef Stalin. The statue was one of several that had been removed from its display area and piled together.

First night in St. Petersburg

Morning dawns gray as porridge. A veil of sea mist holds captive the Peter-Paul Fortress. I expected to be awe-struck by the historical sights. Thirty-two K-Staters were shepherded around in a bus by a knowledgeable guide named Tatianna, a native of St. Petersburg. We had just spent the last eight hours on a wide-body jet. This first hour introduction tour of St. Petersburg was welcome relief.

I did not expect to fall in love with Russia. One does not fall in love with St. Petersburg like one would fall in love with Paris, Vienna or Rome. Russia hides her charms. The historical landmarks are displayed for everyone to see, but the heartbeat, the passion and the soul of Russia lie in its people.

From my bus window, it was difficult to sample the delicacies of the city. I did notice quite a few differences, however, from my caged vantage point on that first day. There were very few cars. There were very few children. There were no store fronts.

That night was free time. The sun sets early at that latitude, around 3:30 p.m. It was already dark when two comrades and I hired a private taxi to take us back into the heart of town. The driver was friendly enough. He asked in Russian who we were and what we did. He has three children. The six American dollars we paid him would feed his family for a week.

We were dropped off at the Kazan Cathedral in the center of town on the Nevsky Prospekt. The sidewalks are wide, because everyone walks to their destination. Even though the bus system and the underground Metro are very efficient, many people have to walk, sometimes close to two miles to their apartments. Almost everyone had a tote bag which contained food for their families for that day.

For a city of almost 5 million people, the downtown area was strangely quiet. The people walked the streets like zombies. With communism so recently dead, it will take a few generations to breed out this stoic attitude. But to do that, there must be children.

On the sidewalks in the middle of almost every block is a kiosk (pronounced key-osc). This glassed-in newspaper stand sells goods like cigarettes, liquor, a few canned foodstuffs, newspapers, sometimes fresh fruits.

The exchange rate was around 1395 Russian rubles per American dollar. Foreign currency was outlawed two days before our trip began, but almost all Russians wanted American dollars instead of rubles. Only the big hotels would not accept American money. The Russian people were extremely honest with the exchange rate.

At a kiosk, I purchased a bottle of St. Petersburg Vodka and a box of Russian cigarettes called Belomors. The vodka was smooth and warming. The cigarettes were like inhaling burning garbage at the dump.

By midnight, the city seemed deserted. We walked to Palace Square through the snow and ice-covered streets. We rounded the General Staff Headquarters, walking with anticipation through the magnificent double-arch entrance to Palace Square from Nevsky Prospekt. Above the arch sits a sculpture, 15 feet tall, of a woman in a chariot drawn by six horses.

We sat on the base of the Alexander Column. The angel atop the column crushes a snake with her foot, a symbol of triumph to Russians. Her eyes watch us, blessing our steps through the square. I can feel what Russia used to be, or maybe it was just the vodka. But what is Russia now? I would have to search more deeply for the hope I most desperately sought. This night was over. I was falling in love with the city, with its strength, yet another day. I hungered for more.

Making new friends in Moscow

My American comrade and I invited two Russian friends to join us for our final meal in Russia. Having had baked beans and bologna for breakfast and no lunch, there was only one logical choice for our last supper in Moscow: McDonald's.

As I informed Tolja we were treating him and Sergei to Big Macs, his smile disappeared. "McDonald's is too expensive, and in Russia, women do not pay for men," he responded. Tolja is a tall blond in his early twenties, who once served in the Russian army and now peddles T-shirts and matrushka dolls on the street.

Julie Chartier

Business was bad that day; he sold nothing. I managed to convince him dinner was payment for the translating he had done for us. Tolja learned to speak English by listening to rap music and conversing with American tourists. His love for the United States is immense, and he displays his Desert Storm watch with pride.

Sergei, a 24-year-old engineer who drives a bus, is more financially secure than Tolja; he owns a car. In his military days, he was in the Russian navy on a submarine off the coast of the United States. Upon learning our plan, Sergei said in Russian, because he cannot speak English, "I am only a bus driver — I cannot afford McDonald's." Eventually, both agreed to let us pay and announced we would not be walking to the nearby Red Square McDonald's, but driving to the original Moscow McDonald's, which was, until the recent opening of the Beijing McDonald's, the largest in the world.

Although there was no line to enter Lenin's mausoleum that day, the McDonald's line was long. We waited outside for 20 minutes or more. Once inside, we stood in another line to order. Food for four totaled 9,800 rubles, or, with the exchange rate at that time, about $7.50. In Russia, McDonald's is comparatively cheap, but by Russian standards, outrageously expensive.

We received our food; however, our patience was not yet rewarded, and we began the search for a table. It is customary to choose an occupied table and stand above its inhabitants, once again waiting. We hovered over a Russian family with two young children in the upstairs dining area. I was amazed to see people quietly standing, as untouched food, which had cost a small Russian fortune, grew cold on trays everywhere. I marked myself as an outsider when, after 15 minutes, I had a moment of weakness and gulped down my Sprite™ while still standing.

Finally, the family at our table bundled their children and left. We did not wait for the table to be wiped, as we pushed the little boy's half-full strawberry shake aside and commenced eating. The food was unmistakably McDonald's. Our replacements stood, trays in hand, as we ate and talked of the economic uncertainty we face as young adults. I mentioned that I graduated from college recently, and Sergei joked that I am now qualified to work at McDonald's.

The new generation of Russians and the new generation of Americans have more in common than just fast food and freedom. The casual conversation shared in a Moscow McDonald's that evening is as alien to our parents' generation as is the future that awaits us.

Russia trip is fun but tiring

Student Intercession trips are always an adventure for all concerned. The 31-member KSU delegation I chaperoned around Russia for a week during Christmas break qualified as an exhilarating, exhausting experience for all.

Of the seven trips I have made to Russia, this was the most fun and the most tiring. With the benefit of a month's hindsight, I can see the good and the bad points more clearly. Would I do it again? In a heartbeat.

John C.K. Daly

Russia is currently the most exciting country in the world to visit. In the throes of its third revolution this century, the nation's political future is clouded and uncertain. What is true is that the political turmoil does not affect tourists; one is in the middle of a passionate debate about a great nation's future without being threatened by it.

Perhaps the most immediate impact of being in St. Petersburg and Moscow is the sheer splendor of the historical sites. To stand in the Kremlin's Cathedral Square, or Red Square, or Palace Square in St. Petersburg is to have your senses assaulted by the familiar and the strange; as one student wondered, looking at the Kremlin cathedrals, "My God, where did they get all the gold to gild the domes?"

Moscow's grittiness is in complete contrast to the ethereal beauty of St. Petersburg. Moscow is a jumble of architectural styles, including the dreary structures erected during the 70-odd years of Communism. Yet, Moscow has its own charms as well, most notably the Kremlin and Red Square. To stand in the square is to be haunted by all the unease that characterized the Cold War.

All of this is crammed into a week, the touring equivalent of sticking your finger in a light socket. Each day is devoted to several historical sights — the Hermitage, Peter-Paul fortress, Aleksandr Nevskii monastery, Red Square, the Kremlin. Given the intensive course reading that precedes the trip, students have a richer understanding of sites that they are seeing.

On a trip such as this, stereotypes are destroyed. One simple example would be perceptions about the Russian climate. The weather of the last week here in Kansas has been more brutal than the weather was in Moscow and St. Petersburg, where the temperatures in January, when we were there, averaging in the mid-twenties to lower thirties.

Perhaps the greatest revelation for most students, however, were the Russian people themselves. Far from being the dour, humorless automatons of the worst days of the Cold War, students found the average Russian to be warm, open, and generous. It was this unexpected human element which so many students told me produced the greatest surprise. Of course, it is this aspect of Russia that for me is the most compelling reason to return there as often as I can. The humanity of a suffering people has caused three of the students on the trip to begin intensively to learn the language; perhaps in the autumn still more will enroll in Russian I.

The trip represented an amazing bargain in terms of cost. For many, it was below $1,300, more than $500 below the cheapest return air ticket to Moscow.

Perhaps the greatest benefit for me was to see the glories of these two cities anew through the eyes of my students. While I have never gotten blasé about being in Russia, it is a great pleasure to watch the first reactions of students to Russia's treasures. The time for going to Russia has never been better, and the cost will never again be so cheap.

GOP utilizes Whitewater

THE PRESIDENCY

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The administration blamed Republican sniping Sunday for much of the furor over Whitewater.

But GOP Sen. Phil Gramm said President Clinton is getting deeper in a hole that threatens his presidency.

Two top administration officials, Vice President Gore and White House adviser George Stephanopoulos, appeared on Sunday news programs to state their case that while mistakes have been made, the White House is cooperating fully in the Whitewater investigation.

They said Republicans are trying to exploit the issue because of the success of Clinton's programs and his rising popularity.

There's an enormous amount of partisanship, Gore said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"What would you do if you were in the opposition and you saw an opportunity to make a dent in this growing popularity?" he asked. "Of course you would try to exploit it."

Stephanopoulos, speaking on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley," said, "The Republicans can't run on the economy, they can't run on health care, they can't run on welfare, they can't run on crime, so they are going to try to exploit this issue."

"We shouldn't help them by making mistakes, that's our fault," he said.

Stephanopoulos was referring to the White House's admission that senior staffers received three private briefings from Treasury Department officials on the status of an investigation.

Special prosecutor Robert Fiske issued subpoenas Friday to senior White House officials to obtain information on the meetings, and White House chief counsel Bernard Nussbaum, who was involved in the briefings, on Saturday announced his resignation.

"Richard Nixon turned a third-rate burglary into a constitutional crisis by not leveling, by interfering with the investigation," Gramm, R-Texas, said on ABC.

"If the president wants to serve this term out, he is going to have to begin by leveling with the American people," Gramm said.

Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., said the presidency is in danger as a result of the continued conduct and the continued pattern of deception.

"I'm going to use it occasionally in my remarks as an abbreviation for lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and straight allies who share a certain sensibility," he said.

Shepard, who lives in Los Angeles, represents the NGLTF on college campuses.

He spoke about how homosexual organizations can create change more effectively on campuses and in the world.

NGLTF established the Campus Project in the late 1980's because students, faculties and staffs were fed up with being harassed and victimized.

GETTING READY FOR SEVERE WEATHER

JODI WOLTERS

In light of the floods and tornadic winds of last summer, Manhattan residents may want to be aware of upcoming severe weather and how to deal with it.

To promote severe weather awareness, Gov. Joan Finney has designated March 7-11 as Severe Weather Awareness Week.

When a tornado or severe thunderstorm watch is issued by the National Weather Service, the Weather Amateur Radio Network in the Manhattan area is alerted and goes on standby.

WARN is a group of volunteers including students, professors and residents throughout the Manhattan area who observe severe weather for Riley County as spotters.

Norm Dillman, professor in electrical engineering and WARN spotter, said WARN tries to keep people informed of potential bad weather.

"First of all, we try to keep an eye on weather information," Dillman said.

"We keep informed in anticipation of severe weather and when the potential is there for severe weather, the spots go to their pre-assigned observation post."

HARDING ASSAULTED; SUFFERS MINOR INJURIES

PORTLAND, Ore. — This time, Tonya Harding says she is the assault victim.

Nursing scrapes and bruises, Harding was interviewed Friday by police investigating her report that she was attacked as she walked through a park near the apartment where she has been staying in suburban Beaverton.

Harding is the subject of an investigation into her alleged role in the assault on rival figure skater Nancy Kerrigan.

Harding, 23, said a lone assailant attacked her from behind at about 11 p.m. Thursday after she parked her pickup across the park from the apartment complex.

Police said Harding's report seemed genuine and that they were inclined to believe it was not a random attack.

"We would lean more towards believing that she was the subject of the attack or the focal point of the attack," Beaverton police representative Mark Hyde said.

A subdued Harding, her sprained left wrist wrapped in a bandage, left the apartment with Stephanie Quintero, and Quintero's young son Friday.

"I'm feeling OK," Harding told reporters. "Can't you guys get a life or something?"

UTAH LAWMAN BRAVES CAPTOR WITH BOMB, GUN

SALT LAKE CITY — The man who carried a bomb into a library Saturday morning and took 10 hostages was a drifter who had a grudge against the government.

Clifford Lynn Draper, armed with a gun and a homemade bomb, was thwarted by a 22-year lawman dressed in civilian clothes who made himself a hostage by slipping into the room where Draper had herded his captives.

More than five hours later, Draper told the hostages they had to draw lots, apparently to determine the order in which they would be executed.

That's when Salt Lake County Sheriff's Lt. Lloyd Prescott identified himself.

Draper pointed his gun at the deputy, who pulled out his concealed weapon and shot him. The hostages were unharmed.

Prescott is the kind of guy who would do something like he did today — put himself in harm's way to make somebody else safe, Deputy Jim Potter said.

"He did a heck of a job for those people in there," Potter said.

PILOT, INSTRUCTOR KILLED IN CRASH

INMAN, Kan. — A Federal Aviation Administration pilot and a flight instructor were killed in a plane crash in Inman, authorities said.

Marvin Hall, 54, and Lon Kimbrough, 28, both of Hutchinson, died in the crash Saturday morning, the McPherson County sheriff's department said.

Kimbrough was undergoing a period review required by licensing procedures. Hall was the observer, said Sandra Campbell, an FAA representative in Kansas City, Mo.

The Piper Tomahawk took off from the Hutchinson airport at 8 a.m. and crashed at 8:37 a.m., near Inman in central Kansas, about seven to 10 miles from the Hutchinson airport.

Weather conditions were good and were not thought to be a factor, Campbell said. The crash is being investigated by the National Transportation Safety Board and the FAA.

Irish band entertains with humor

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

McCain Auditorium was full of laughter, singing and appreciative applause Saturday night at the Boys of the Lough performance.

Some audience members wore green, keeping with the St. Patrick's Day spirit. More notable was the fact that almost no one walked out of McCain without a smile.

Many people clogged a line in the lobby so that they could purchase CDs and tapes of the Boys' fantastic Celtic music.

What surprised this critic the most was how funny and entertaining the Boys were.

Between each song, they made jokes about their homeland, each other and their own songs.

Besides the wonderful atmosphere, the Boys played some great music.

Aly Bain, playing the fiddle, introduced a trio of numbers that he described as "every Irishman's nightmare." They were all about alcohol, a recurring theme of the evening. The trio included "One Bottle More," "Farewell to Whiskey" and "Bottom of the Punch Bowl." Bain punctuated the songs with occasional hiccups. It was pure hilarity.

In "Punch Bowl," Bain wowed the audience with his fiddle until everyone was practically toe-tapping along. It was so lively you just wanted to stand up and start dancing. Bain had complete mastery of the fiddle.

Cathal McConnell and Christy O'Leary played a wonderful duet number on the whistle. Bain told the audience before leaving the stage that it used to be called the penny whistle, but it has gone up in price.

What was so impressive about McConnell and O'Leary was that they could sustain their whistle-playing the entire song.

They didn't stop until the song was over. The whistle was so light and airy it was easy to be carried away into thoughts of Ireland and misty, green islands.

McConnell sang most of the numbers in the concert, including "Bonnie Laboring Boy," an Irish song about a rich girl who falls in love with a poor, laboring boy. He told the audience there was no chorus, so they couldn't sing along.

However, later in the performance, he asked everyone to join in on the song, "Secondhand Trousers I Bought in Balcony."

So, the entire audience joined. The lights came up in the house, and the audience sang its heart out.

O'Leary played a number on the uilleann bagpipes, the Irish version of bagpipes. He took the time to explain the difference to the audience.

"One difference between the Scottish pipes and the Irish pipes is that the Irish pipes are better," he said.

O'Leary also sang a song about the "hunt." However, Bain said that it wasn't a hunt on horseback for a fox, but more of a working man's hunt. It was about the hunt for a rabbit, usually done on foot.

"You run after the hare. We call it 'jogging with a purpose,'" Bain said. It was a very enjoyable song.

By the end, McConnell had joined in and was playing the flute as fast as he possibly could. The audience was all too ready to applaud.

John Coakley, the newest member of the group, played the guitar or piano for backup on most of the songs. Dave Richardson played the concertina and the mandolin.

At the end, an end the audience didn't want to accept, Richardson said, "Thank you all for coming out to hear this kind of music. We prefer our concerts with an audience."

This concert has to be one of the highlights of McCain's season. The Boys of the Lough will always have an audience in Manhattan.

RUSTY'S LAST CHANCE

Hours:
Monday-Friday, 11:30 a.m.-2 a.m.
Open seven days a week, including holidays.
Cover: No charge
Crowd: A mix of cowboys, greeters, and GIs.
Specials: Sunday: $2 Bloody Marys, screwdrivers and $1 wines; Monday: Rib night; Tuesday: $1.50 margaritas, $1 all-you-can-eat taco bar from 5 to 7 p.m.; Wednesday: $1.50 wells; Thursday: 50 cents off selection of 90 imports.
History: Formerly a pizza place, it then became a private club. It has been Rusty's for 4-1/2 years.

At Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon, I had to fight through crowds, yell to people for them to hear me, almost lost my friends and got swallowed up by the mass of people.

I enjoyed the rustic style, fireplace and classy decor, but I thought it was overrated.

The main bar had a high-paced atmosphere, classic rock and wagon wheels suspended from the ceiling.

Rusty's Outback, a small bar in the courtyard behind Chance, had featured a big-screen TV and a more-relaxed sports setting. At Chance, people go there to drink, get drunk and meet that special person for the evening.

When I approached a guy in the Outback and asked him questions, he laughed and asked me if I was faking being a reporter and using the notebook as a pick-up line to get his name and phone number.

Although I felt a little uncomfortable bumping into people and squeezing through tight crowds, many of the people were having a good time.

Christian Phipps, a K-State graduate, said he enjoyed the large numbers of people.

"It's been here forever," Phipps said. "The thing I like about Chance is it's crowded here tonight, and tomorrow night it will be just as crowded but with different people."

CHRISTOPHER O'BRYANS

Hours:
Monday-Sunday, 11 a.m.-2 a.m.
Cover: No charge
Crowd: Combination of families and college students
Specials: Daily drink specials, Mexican food

Christopher O'Bryans had the casual mood of a typical family restaurant with a tile floor, big-screen television and pool table.

Fraternity guys sat around the bar drinking and celebrating victory of their house basketball game and a family played pool in the back room.

"It has a good location, is never real crowded, has a lot of places to sit and is not loud," Brock Gann, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said.

"Ever since Kite's closed, half the Greeks go to Lucky's, and half come here."

When I walked into Christopher O'Bryans, I felt like I had stepped into a "Cheers" episode. The decorations were simple.

Tables and chairs covered the floors, and a square bar served the famous Christopher O'Bryan's margaritas.

"It has a totally different atmosphere, is more open and is more of a community bar," Eric Stidman, junior in business, said.

IN OUR OPINION

Super-highway a threat to privacy

It appears the proposed surveillance system would not lead to any massive improvement in crime-fighting.

In the past year, we've all heard quite a bit about the information super-highway. It probably won't be too long before every person and information outlet in the world is linked by digital cables.

That is what makes a piece of legislation now being debated so frightening.

The Clinton administration is backing a proposal that would allow authorities to monitor calling patterns and credit-card transactions over telephone lines and the two-way cable networks that cable and phone companies are planning.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has said the legislation would be a great help in fighting terrorist attacks, such as the World Trade Center bombing last year. The bureau's director has also said traditional wiretapping is becoming increasingly difficult because more and more phone calls are being transmitted digitally.

Critics, however, have said the government cannot point to any case in which digital technology alone has impeded an investigation.

They have also pointed out the fact that the World Trade Center case was solved not because of electronic communications snooping but because of simple bungling of vehicle and warehouse rentals.

It appears that the proposed surveillance system would not lead to any massive improvement in crime-fighting. What it would lead to, however, is the ability to build a detailed model of a person's behavior, politics, sexual preference, social habits and travel plans.

Taxpayers would be asked to pay up to a half-billion dollars to implement the proposed software.

This seems like an awful lot of money to support a system that would get limited results and could be the biggest invasion of privacy the government has ever attempted.

Straight and white male not only kind of moral soldier

O.K. I think I've got it straight now.

The real reason the U.S. military establishment wants to ban homosexuals from the service is because homosexuals are immoral. The corollary to this is the military is comprised solely of moral people.

Homosexuals continue to serve in the military with dignity and honor. Yet, say the military's mouthpieces, their presence ruins morale.

This seems a little contradictory because gays have always assimilated well until they are honest with their comrades in uniform.

That honesty, apparently, is immoral.

Maybe I'm missing the point here. I have to remember the military is comprised of only moral folks.

Why, go outside any military base or post and you will not find strip joints, honky-tonks, bars, adult bookstores, whorehouses or gun shops, will you?

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Oh, well, yes you will, but that seems odd because the military is comprised only of the most moral and upstanding members of society. Military chapels and their counterparts off post overflow every Sunday with the bright, shining faces of military personnel and their heterosexual families reaffirming their morals that no gay person can have, aren't they?

OK, churches and chapels everywhere are suffering from a lack of attendance, but, again, this doesn't make sense in light of the fact that the military is comprised only of such moral people.

Rush Limbaugh, that conservative dogmatist, has said the mission of the military is to "kill people and break things." This gives the military an air of morality?

This contradictory conservatism is a pathetic veil for the bigotry that women (remember Tailhook?) and blacks (just try getting a promotion in the Marine Corps) experience everyday in different ways.

The fact is, if we lived in a moral world we wouldn't need the military.

Unfortunately, we live in a world in which it is sometimes necessary for a nation to "kill people and break things." For those purposes we need the best people, not just the best straight, white males.

At one time, military leaders didn't want blacks to integrate — some still don't. The military still doesn't allow or expect women to serve the ways men do. On this issue the military leadership is showing its true self. It's an ugly sight.

This whole bit about the immorality of the homosexual lifestyle is ridiculous. I've known gays and lesbians of all walks of life — loose, celibate, effeminate, masculine, discreet, open, married, single, dumb, smart, rich, poor, tough, weak, religious, atheistic — and they are just like straights except in how they relate romantically and their experiences with prejudice.

They love America like straights do. They want to make the world a better place like straights do. They have what America needs to continue to be the world's greatest fighting force.

I have known plenty of straight people who love to commit the "unnatural acts" of sodomy (oral and anal sex), some of whom are in the military. Some of whom like to broadcast the gory details of their exploits to any poor soul who is around. Yet, they do not have a morality problem that keeps them out of the armed forces?

If gays were allowed in the military, the sexual discrimination policies that go unenforced would suddenly be as important to men as they are to women. Straight men who sexually harass women don't want to taste their own medicine.

Simply put, allowing gays and lesbians to serve in the armed forces would finally force the military establishment to end its misogynous discriminatory practices by giving all of the most qualified Americans the opportunity to serve our country as equals with dignity and without harassment.

Crime pays the bills

Uncle Sam is getting tough on crime. Again. The people of America are ready for a tougher, more punishing nation.

After all, crime rates are skyrocketing. All you have to do is glance at one of the full-color graphs on the cover of USA Today to see that.

Where's all this crime coming from? Well, for one thing, there are more criminals because there are more people. If you compare the statistics on violent crime to the population curve in major urban areas, they match almost perfectly. The percentage of people committing violent crime isn't rising much at all.

The biggest source of crime, however, is the legislators. They keep making more things illegal in more ways. The push in Congress right now is to make a lot more crimes into federal offenses.

This concerns some people, most notably the Supreme Court justices. Justices such as Anthony Kennedy and David Souter are concerned they will find themselves on a "police court," dealing with criminal cases more often than constitutional matters. Several justices are opposed to expanding federal jurisdiction on principle as well.

These justices, however, just haven't twigged to what Congress has known since the Reagan years: Crime pays.

Most citizens are scared of crime and simply haven't taken the time to appreciate the positive aspects of the crime wave we've created in our great nation.

Victimless crimes are the best because lawmakers can increase the number of criminals with a wave of their hands. One day, you're a decent, law-abiding citizen and SHAZAM, you're a federal felon.

Then we stuff the prisons full of these mostly harmless criminals because of mandatory sentencing, especially of drug laws, and we have to let the violent folks out.

These hard-core criminals, once on the street, commit more crimes and get a whole lot of publicity. The public gets more scared of crime, and that's the key to the whole thing. Crime pays as long as everyone's afraid of it.

Let's start with Bill Clinton's crime bill, for example. What do we need in this country? Jobs are what we need. The crime bill will give us 100,000 new ones in law enforcement alone.

Crime is a powerful economic stimulus, too. Thousands and thousands of pot smokers pay up to 20 times what their drug of choice is actually worth because it is illegal. They work hard to earn the money, and the drug dealers distribute the money back into the economy by buying shiny new cars and cellular phones.

As crime gets worse in areas that used to be suburbs, the rich folks have to move. They spend lots of money on new houses even farther away from the center of town, creating even more jobs.

Insurance companies make a lot of money off crime, especially when public perception of crime is worse than the actual thing, allowing these companies to raise their rates even farther above what they ever have to pay out.

Small-time business operations suddenly become big because of crime, such as the makers of "The Club." The American Dream came true for them.

Crime is one of the only things citizens are happy to pay taxes to help stop — taxes that go toward more jobs in prison construction, law enforcement and legislators' salaries. The money we pump at the crime problem trickles down into the everyday economy — so, keep it coming.

Sure, crime doesn't pay for the criminals (if they get caught), but it sure does for most of us. Remember to vote for those who will get tougher on crime, make things illegal in new ways and stuff our prisons to the bursting point. It pays.

► BYE BYE, BIG EIGHT Pickups and rednecks not all Texas has to offer

Dear Editor,

Being a native Kansan attending Baylor, I took interest in the opinions expressed in the editorial "Texas to break up Big Eight family."

I found it amusing that those attending a college whose athletic department has been little more than a Jayhawk punching bag for more than a decade would choose to describe themselves as "holding a can of whoop-ass."

The isolated fact that the K-State football team accidentally backed into a few more victories this year than last does not make it a national powerhouse. The coaching staff from K-State had better bring its clipboards and pens to the first several Southwest Conference schools because I'm sure it will be a clinic.

I enjoyed a healthy chuckle as the editorial author boasted of how much better K-State would fare on the hardwood than the new conference members.

It struck me funny that an institution that hasn't advanced past the second round in the NCAA tournament since being stomped upon by the KU in 1988 would be so quick to insult its new conference brothers.

Dear editors, brace yourselves. Here come the rednecked, pickup drivin', tobacco chewin', gas guzzlin', two-steppin' cowboys. And they're bringing the Rhodes scholars, Heisman Trophy candidates, a $70-million TV contract, a bit of soreness toward wildcats and all hell with them.

► ALCOHOL Proposed sale of alcohol in Union hypocritical

Dear Editor,

Hypocrisy, thy name is K-State. I read with amusement the recent endorsement of beer sales in the K-State Union. I seem to recall a previous debate against the sale of tobacco products in this same Union.

Perhaps I've not studied enough government reports, environmental-impact studies or press releases to fully grasp this situation. Or, is it entirely possible I missed the thousands of deaths due to smoking and driving?

I don't recall the Survivors of Smoking Parents groups coming out on "Donahue" telling us of their childhood horrors. Maybe I don't frequent enough Chewers Anonymous meetings to hear of the devastation spitting has caused.

I am not against beer in the Union, but I am flabbergasted by the hypocrisy of such a decision. Even the most inflated estimates of deaths due to second-hand smoke fall meekly aside in the face of drunken-driving deaths.

Most smokers stick to smoking sections of buildings, whereas drunks don't have, nor could they probably find, a drunken lane on the road.

A little perspective and thought would be appreciated the next time Union Governing Board condemns the evils of tobacco while actively promoting the use of alcohol.

► BOSNIAN WAR Muslims not innocent in bloody two-year conflict

Dear Editor,

The column "Western policy killing Muslims" that appeared on March 3 leaves much to be desired as far as comprehending the Yugoslav conflict goes.

Mohammad Ahsan argues that Western inaction and, specifically, an arms-trade embargo imposed in the region has resulted in the slaughtering of innocent Muslims by the all-powerful Serbs. However, none of the history and deeper reasons that brought this conflict about are presented, among them past Western interference.

The Serbs justifiably felt threatened when the former Yugoslavia started collapsing since they had been for centuries persecuted to the point of genocide by Muslims in the Ottoman Empire and more recently by Nazi collaborators in both Catholic Croatia and Muslim Bosnia.

Simply put, large numbers of Serbs who found themselves under the prospect of being incorporated into countries that had a history of oppressing them revolted against their neighbors, and what ensued was the tri-ethnic massacre we have witnessed for the past two years.

Moreover, Bosnia's president's past statements and writings about the need to return to "fundamental Muslim values," where Islam would be the only cultural and religious force allowed to permeate all spheres of life, did not help matters either.

This conflict would not have happened if Bosnia was not hastily recognized by Western powers, especially Germany — a country with a long and disastrous involvement in the region.

The path that was finally chosen — to give all of Bosnia to a Muslim-dominated government — was like creating another Israel in the Middle East.

Only in this case, the Serbs were not defenseless — a fact that was certain to lead to a bloody and lopsided war.

DEAR CASSIE

by Cassandra Duveau

Reader questions fake orgasms

Dear Cassandra,

The women at my workplace are constantly talking about their personal relationships with their partners, and their discussions have led this man to some questions about the mysterious opposite sex.

They insist that a man has been "faked out" quite often if he has been in a long-lasting relationship. I'm not so naive that I don't realize they are talking about faking orgasm. But, I have to know — have my partners been fooling me? Is it just for an ego boost, or am I below par in bed? Why would a woman fake an orgasm, and how can I tell if she is?

Signed,
Wish they were honest

Dear Wish,

You shouldn't concern yourself with the possibility of your partners faking orgasms. If she is willing to provide you with encouragement and a boost in ego, let her. It means you will try hard to receive this encouragement again, and she will ultimately receive more pleasure.

You could ask your partner if she is faking it, but what would that achieve? She might say yes, and your confidence about your sexual abilities would ultimately be in question. Your performance may even drop from lukewarm to rather chilly.

I wouldn't worry about your partners going around and talking with their fellow employees about fake orgasms. It's just locker-room talk. Join in sometime. Tell them how, often times, you fake erections.

NETTERS LOSE ON THE ROAD

The K-State Tennis team travelled to Fayetteville, Ark this past weekend. The team lost to Arkansas, 7-2 on Friday and lost to Baylor, 6-3, on Saturday.

The tennis team plays Michigan, March 12, South Alabama, March 13 and Brigham Young, March 19, all at Topeka.

Wildcats fall to ISU ending regular season

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

AMES, Iowa — K-State started slow against Iowa State, went cold in the second half and finished the game slow. The result was a 85-60 drubbing.

"We were basically dead from the start on both offense and defense, and I really don't know why," Coach Dana Altman said.

Deryl Cunningham scored the first bucket for K-State nearly two minutes into the game, after Iowa State jumped out to a six-point lead, making the score 6-2.

The Cyclones then stretched their lead to 10-2 before Demond Davis scored on an offensive rebound and lay-up.

"This is the best defensively we have played in a while," Iowa State coach Johnny Orr said.

Jones managed only six points in the contest. It marked the first time in 26 games in which Jones has not scored 10 or more points. It was the longest double-figure scoring streak in the conference.

His first basket of the game came with 10:18 remaining in the first half. It was also his first attempt of the game.

"Jones is a good player," Iowa State guard Derrick Hayes said. "I wanted to step up my defense and play harder when I was guarding him."

The Cyclones methodically built their lead throughout the first half, never scoring more than four points consecutively until finishing the first half off with a 6-0 run to take a 38-24 halftime lead.

"It was a very sad effort," Anthony Beane said. "The fire and emotion for the entire team was not there today."

K-State returned to the floor in the second half and cut the Cyclone lead to 11 on a jump shot by Beane — the closest the Wildcats would get.

From there, Iowa State took off on a 14-1 run, which stretched the Cyclone lead to 24 and effectively ended the contest for the visiting Wildcats.

"I'm very disappointed with our performance today," Altman said. "We were out-rebounded and gave up 85 points."

The run started with four free throws by Fred Hoiberg and Julius Michalik. Hoiberg made 10-straight free shots in the game and stung K-State for 27 points.

Michalik added 21 points and six rebounds to the Cyclone romp.

"They got whatever they wanted," Altman said. "We weren't taking away passing lanes, and we trailed behind them all day."

Iowa State pushed its lead to 30 on a steal and lay-up by point guard Jason Kimbrough.

Easy shots were readily available to Iowa State throughout the game. The Cyclones hit 28 of their 50 shots from the floor for 56 percent.

The Wildcats hit only 34 percent of their attempts, including six out of 26 from three-point range.

Beane led K-State in scoring with 16 points and seven assists. Cunningham pitched in 13 points and six rebounds.

The Cyclone subs let the lead dip back to 24 when Gavin sank a three-pointer with 54 seconds left.

The game concluded with two missed free throws by Anthony Beane with five seconds left.

"We can't think about this one too much, it was just one game," Jones said. "We've got to move on and look forward to the Big Eight tournament."

K-State enters post-season with loss

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

AMES, Iowa — Forget going out with a bang. The Wildcats went out with a whimper Sunday, ending their regular Big Eight season with a loss to the Iowa State Cyclones in Ames, Iowa.

Iowa State, sitting just below the Cats in the conference standings, didn't play like a cellar-dweller, outlasting K-State throughout the game.

K-State coach Dana Altman couldn't explain his team's lackluster performance.

"We were just dead from the start. We were sluggish both offensively and defensively," he said.

While some reporters wondered how important a meeting between the No. 6 and No. 7 conference squads was, Altman knew what it meant.

"There was a lot at stake. We were playing for pride, we were playing to get a little roll going in the conference tournament, we were playing for our four seniors," Altman said.

"It was very disappointing. Iowa State looked like they were playing for something, and they're in the same boat we are."

Playing to salvage something out of an up-and-down season, the Cyclones needed a win to have any hope for an N.I.T. bid or NCAA berth.

Coach Johnny Orr thinks they may just get both.

"That's a good way to end it at home," Orr said. "If we do well at the Big Eight tournament, we can get a N.I.T. bid. Who knows, we could win the Big Eight Tournament. Wouldn't that be something?"

The Cyclones were something throughout the game, with junior Fred Hoiberg going 7-11 with 19 points in the first half. With 7:39 left, the Cats came within four, but that was as close as it got.

Heading into the second half, Iowa State didn't even need what little "Hilton Magic" there was in the quiet coliseum, as the Cyclones led by 30 with 3:41 on the clock. Playing man-to-man throughout the game, the Cyclones shut down the Cats' offense, holding Askia Jones to just six points on the day.

Beane said while the Cats' didn't play with much spirit, they're not giving up.

"We just didn't come in focused like we should have been. We should have had that fire, but we didn't. We're going to keep our heads up and get ready to play Friday."

As K-State finishes the season with three consecutive losses, Altman is hoping his team can pull things together — soon.

"We've got to re-group here quick, and try to get a little run going in the tournament. We did it last year, and hopefully, this team will find a way to do the same thing."

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Brian Gavin sits on the bench and watches as the final moments of the game elapse. The Cats ended the season 17-11 overall and 4-10 in the Big Eight conference. K-State faces KU Friday in the first round of the Big Eight tournament.

After months of games, the intramural basketball season has come down to one game.

Ehlo takes on Tau Kappa Epsilon in the all-University championship game at 8 p.m. tonight at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

The game pits the topped ranked team, Ehlo, against the TKEs, who are ranked sixth.

Both teams enter the game with perfect records. Ehlo is 10-0 and the TKEs are 8-0.

Ehlo is the independent division champion and advanced to the title game with a win against Haymaker 4, the residence hall champions.

In the semi-final game Ehlo cruised to an easy 64-49 victory.

The TKEs, the fraternity champs, advanced to the title game with a narrow 64-60 victory against the six-foot and under division champions, the Gators.

These four teams had each won their individual divisions to advance to the semi-finals. Ehlo and TKEs will now play each other for the title.

For Ehlo, the game plan appears to be more of the things that took them to the title game. Ehlo has used a balanced inside-outside attack all year long.

"We play really well together and understand the team concept," Ehlo captain Oliver Salmans said.

"(Matt) Wingert is a very good outside shooter and (Dave) Schmale is a real horse down low to guard."

The TKEs are expecting nothing new out of Ehlo tonight.

"I don't think they will change anything," Spence

Wallace, TKE team member, said.

"Their guards like to penetrate and then dish the ball off. They have five really talented players on their team."

For the fraternity champs, the key appears to be controlling the tempo of the game.

The TKEs prefer a quicker pace with their pressure while Ehlo plays primarily a zone defense.

"We like to pressure on defense, and on offense we like to run and create a transition game," Wallace, a junior in marketing, said.

"I think being able to run will be important since we have 12 players and they don't have as many players on their bench."

Ehlo's strong, physical inside game and passing are the biggest concern for its opponents.

"We haven't played anyone who could pass the ball the way they could," Haymaker 4 team member Skip Pankewich said.

"We couldn't stay with them defensively or keep them off the boards."

K-State team ends skid with wins against Eagles

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The K-State baseball team ended a three-game losing skid by sweeping three games from Northeastern Illinois this weekend at Frank Myers Field.

The Wildcats (8-4) beat the Golden Eagles (1-4) 10-4 yesterday, then went on to defeat the Eagles 11-6 in the first game and 14-2 in the second game on Saturday.

K-State coach Mike Clark said he was pleased with the sweep, but his team should have done better in the final game.

"Mentally, we weren't ready," Clark said. "Maybe it was the way we handled them the day before. We have to come ready to play. Our main concern is us.

"These were games we should have won and did, but we didn't do well, fundamentally," he said. "We can't do those things and expect to win."

The Cats committed four errors as starting pitcher Rob Merriman (3-1) struggled through five innings with six walks and gave up three earned runs, but he was able to get the win.

"Rob has been inconsistent, but he is a better pitcher than he is showing," Clark said.

One bright spot for Clark was the performance of right fielder Chris Hess. Hess went 6-for-8 at the plate with a home run, double, scored five times and had five RBI.

"Finally, I got some confidence," Hess said, whose batting average moved up to .400 after this weekend. "I saw a lot of good strikes."

Hess was able to see the good pitches because designated hitter Matt Miller batted beside him in the first and third games. Miller batted 5-for-7 for the weekend with three RBI, including 3-for-3 yesterday.

Clark said he is getting better performances out of the bullpen this season.

"I'm happy with our relief pitching, especially with David Johnson and Shane Hicks," Clark said. "They both did a fine job this weekend."

Hicks struck out five Eagles in 2 1/3 innings to pick up his first save of the season in the first game Saturday. Johnson didn't give up a hit in four innings in the final game for his first save.

Jon Albrecht (3-0) went 4 2/3 innings for the win in the first game, and Jon Oiseth (2-1) gave up the only hit of the second game to Northeastern Illinois in the second game.

K-State returns to action this afternoon with a game against Missouri Western — the first pitch is at 3 p.m., followed this week by two games with Wichita State and then at College Station, Texas, for the Texas A&M Classic on Friday.

K-State comes close, unable to overcome 18-point deficit against Oklahoma State

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

SALINA — The scoreboard in the Bicentennial Center read Oklahoma State 38, K-State 20 with 16:02 left in the game.

Because the Wildcats were down by 18 points, some of the K-State faithful started to head for the exits, thinking that a comeback seemed out of the question.

However, K-State went on a scoring burst to cut the Oklahoma State lead to three points with 5:07 left in the game.

Nevertheless, that was as close as the Cats could get as they lost 61-51 to the Cowgirls in the first round of the Big Eight Conference Tournament Saturday night.

Despite the loss, K-State coach Brian Agler said the team's effort was courageous down the stretch.

"We made the shots and got back in the game," Agler said. "Then we got within striking distance and couldn't get over the hump."

The Cats' comeback attempt was sparked by three-straight buckets by five-foot-six guard Stacy Neal.

Two of Neal's baskets were three-point bombs from the corner of the right baseline.

For the season, Neal had been only averaging 12.4 minutes of play per game and only 1.9 points per game. Against the Cowgirls, she played 15 minutes and scored 10 points.

The Cats also got another big spark from the bench as freshman post player Andria Jones scored eight points on four-of-eight shooting.

Six of her eight points came during the Cats' run.

Jones also hadn't seen much playing time this season as she averaged only 3.3 minutes a game, and she was also averaging 1.8 points per game.

"I'm really proud of the group of people that played out there and got us back in the game," Agler said.

"It was an alignment that we don't even practice with."

"We had four perimeter players and a freshman post player who averages three or four minutes for us."

"I think that more than anything they hooked it up defensively for us. They also knocked some shots down and got us back in the game."

Jones said it was a good experience to get to play a lot in such a big game after hardly playing this season.

"I felt like I was confident tonight," Jones said.

"At the end, I could tell my lack of experience came through, though."

"We got down by three points, and I made some mistakes that I shouldn't have made. I'm happy that I got in, but I don't feel like I played like I should have."

When the Cats cut the OSU lead to three points, Cowgirl point-guard Yogi York took over.

After Neal canned her final three, York drove to the basket and got fouled. She then stepped up to the line and calmly nailed both free-throws.

Following an OSU stand on defense, York drove to the basket again and scored on a floating jumper to give the Cowgirls a 54-47 lead with 3:43 left.

In the closing moments of the game, she added two more free throws to ice the game with 34 seconds left. She finished with 26 points.

"I thought that I had to just take the ball at them," York said. "We weren't moving on offense, and everyone was standing around. I took it upon myself to take the ball to the hole."

In the first half, the Cats fell behind early as OSU jumped out to a 21-9 lead when Stacy Coffey nailed two free throws. Her free throws completed a 10-0 run for the Cowgirls.

"We obviously dug ourselves a hole," Agler said. "Their offense is based on turnovers, and we want to try and keep the turnover-to-assist ratio low. We had 13 turnovers in the first half."

The foul that sent Coffey to the free-throw line was whistled on Shanele Stires, the Cats second-leading scorer on the season, which was her third foul in just 12 minutes of play.

That sent the Salina native to the bench for the rest of the first half with only two points.

In the second half, Stires got back into the game, but she committed two more quick fouls and was out of the game with 11:46.

She finished with only four points, which was a season low.

K-State's leading scorer was Shawnda DeCamp, who finished with 11 points, which was eight points below her 19.7 scoring average.

DeCamp also had three rebounds and four assists in the loss to Oklahoma State.

The loss ended the Cats' season, but it finished with a 13-14 and a 5-10 Big Eight record.

The five conference wins are four more than the team had last season, when it went 1-13 and finished tied for last place.

K-State will return all but three seniors to next season's squad, and three of the five K-State starters will also return.

Andria Jones battles for the ball with Oklahoma State's Stacy Coffey during the Wildcats' 61-51 loss to the Cowgirls. Jones had 8 points in the contest.

Buffaloes to face Tigers in championship game

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

SALINA — The women's Big Eight tournament continued Saturday with both semi-final games.

Colorado continued its domination during Saturday's semi-finals while the Missouri team continued its run toward the championship game.

In the first game of the day, Colorado, the No. 1 seed, defeated No. 4-seeded Nebraska 77-67. Later in the afternoon, Missouri, No. 7 seed, won against No. 3-seeded Oklahoma State.

Jamillah Lang showed why she was the Co-Big Eight Conference Player of the Year in the victory against Nebraska.

In the win at Salina's Bicentennial Center, the senior all-American candidate and 1992 tournament Most Valuable Player scored 32 points including five-for-five from three-point range.

"Jamillah was on fire out there," Colorado coach Ceal Barry said. "She's worked hard all summer long on shooting from three-point range."

Lang got the Buffaloes started out on the right foot when she swished a three-pointer from the top of the key. She then made a free throw and another basket to give her six points in less than two minutes of play.

"Jamillah was in one of those zones," Nebraska coach Angela Beck said. "She couldn't miss from three-point range."

The 32 points for Lang was a career high, and it was the highest in the Big Eight Tournament since Oklahoma State's Althea Cox scored 36 points against Oklahoma in the semi-finals of the 1990 tourney.

Colorado extended its lead to 23-12 in the first half before the Cornhuskers started to warm up from the field.

The Huskers rallied to cut the CU lead to 34-29 at halftime, behind three baskets by Nafeesah Brown.

Nebraska continued to stay close throughout the game.

DeCelle Thomas was CU's second-leading scorer with 15 points. Amy Palmer also added 10 points off the bench.

Nebraska's leading scorers were Brown and Kate Galligan, who both had 18 points. The loss dropped Nebraska's record to 17-13 and put it on the bubble for the NCAA Tournament.

"I hope that our season isn't over," Galligan said.

Nebraska's Meggan Yedsena moved into first place on the all-time assist leaders chart during the game.

Colorado's victory moved its record to 25-3 and into the championship game tonight at 7 p.m. Barry said it doesn't concern her who she plays in the championship game.

"I don't care who we play, because it's going to be a tough game," Barry said. "It's going to be a struggle. Everyone is shooting for us now, like they have been all season."

Missouri continued to shock people in Salina, as they continued to roll with a 76-68 upset win against Oklahoma State in the second semi-final.

This marks the Tigers' second upset in two days.

"It's pretty nice," Missouri coach Joann Rutherford said. "We keep packing things up every day, and now we have to unpack again. It's a great time to peak now."

The Tigers built a 37-32 lead in the first half behind 18 points by Nikki Smith.

"I felt really good today," Smith said. "The team did really good as a whole though."

In the second half, the Tigers continued to roll behind 12 points by Desiree Wallace. She was successful against the Cowgirls three-zone defense by breaking the zone with back-door layups.

The Cowgirls did make things interesting as they cut the Tigers lead to four points with 5:37 left, but the Tigers hit clutch free throws to secure the win.

Oklahoma State coach Dick Halterman said the Tigers beat them in every category.

"They wanted it more than us," Halterman said.

The victory for Missouri puts it into the championship game with No. 3-ranked Colorado. Rutherford said the Tigers will be ready for the challenge.

"Colorado is a fine team," Rutherford said. "We played them very close in both of our games this season. They have a lot of weapons. Jamillah Lang is really a great player for them."

"We're going to prepare like we always do," she said. "We have a lot of confidence coming right now."

Tigers upset Jayhawks 72-66 on way to finale

TREY JOHNSON

SALINA — Saturday was a good day for Missouri.

The men's basketball team completed a perfect 14-0 Big Eight Conference season in Columbia by downing Nebraska 80-78, and the women's team upset No. 2-seeded Kansas 72-66 during the first round of the Big Eight Conference Basketball Tournament at the Bicentennial Center.

The Tigers erased a 39-22 first-half deficit to post the victory.

Kansas led 61-50 with 10:09 remaining in the game, before Missouri went on a 22-5 run to end the game.

"It's been a long, hard season, and we wanted to come out here and start a brand-new season," Missouri coach Joann Rutherford said.

"This team worked hard all week and had a lot of determination."

Not since 1989 have the Tigers won in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament.

That year, the Tigers defeated

Iowa State 87-70.

"I want to congratulate Missouri," KU coach Marian Washington said.

"They played a fine game. We came here with great aspirations, and anything can happen when you get to this point."

The first-round opening loss was the first by the Jayhawks since 1990, when they fell to Oklahoma State 66-65.

The Tigers were led by sophomore Erika Martin with 28 points.

During the first half, Martin scored 15 of Missouri's last 18 points. It was Martin's eighth double-double of the season.

KU's Angela Aycock, who shared Big Eight Player of the Year honors with Jamillah Lang of Colorado, was held to just 14 points during the loss.

"It is always difficult when you lose," Aycock said. "You have to take the positive out of this. This loss hurts, but it's not the end of the world."

Missouri continued its run toward the championship game with a 76-68 upset win against Oklahoma State.

Brownback says domestic programs should be cut to decrease deficit

CRISTINA JANNEY

Collegian

Sam Brownback, republican candidate for Kansas' second congressional district, said the U.S. government has placed a mortgage on students' futures by not controlling spending.

Brownback, a former K-State student body president, talked to 15 students in the K-State Union, Friday.

"We absolutely have to do something about the budget," Brownback said.

He said he would like to see a special commission, similar to the military commission on base closings, created to look at ways domestic programs could be cut.

Brownback said he also supported the line item veto, the balanced budget amendment and privatization as means to reduce the deficit.

"The economy is up, and we are not fighting a war," he said. "We should be paying down our deficit."

Expensive domestic entitlements are the source of the government's over-spending problems, Brownback said.

"Government should deal with the core functions it does well, such as providing a military," he said.

Some students expressed concerns about the possible closing of Fort Riley.

Brownback said the military had considered going from 12 to 10 divisions, which could mean more base closings.

However, he said the information on the base closings that was in the media came from an unofficial military newspaper. Brownback said he did not think the military would be reduced further.

"We need a strong military," he said. "It is still not a safe world."

Brownback said the government needs to be prepared to compete in a global economy. He said the United States needs to push to open trade barriers in Japan.

"The Japanese love the beef we produce, but there is a 50-cent tariff added to it," he said. "That is a lot to pay."

On another issue, Brownback said the government should deal with health care incisively and not like a butcher.

Many families are scared that the health-care reform will result in a huge bureaucracy, Brownback said.

"I am afraid that they will push something through, and it would evolve into something worse than what we fundamentally have," he said.

Brownback had no position on government loans and grants for higher education.

The government has overextended itself by guaranteeing millions of dollars in loans. It does not have the money to guarantee the loans if they go into default, he said.

Sam Brownback, Republican candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives from the 2nd congressional district, visits with a student Friday in the K-State Union Little Theatre. He spoke about the future of the United States and future roles students will have.

Unexpected heart attack claims life of John Candy

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — John Candy died of a heart attack in his sleep just hours after completing what colleagues called a classic comedy scene for his new film "Wagons East." The portly comedian was 43.

Candy's body was found early Friday morning in his residence on the Durango, Mexico, set for the film in which he played a drunken stagecoach driver.

The veteran of some 40 movies, including "Uncle Buck" and "Stripes," was dead before paramedics arrived, Hector Partida, a representative for the government of Durango state, said.

"John Candy was a gentleman and a great comic talent," comedian Steve Martin said. Martin starred with Candy in "Planes, Trains & Automobiles."

"I count myself extremely lucky to have had the opportunity to work with him."

People who were working with Candy in Mexico said he showed no signs of ill health. His death was not necessarily a result of his estimated 275 pounds, an expert in heart disease said.

"The relationship between weight and heart disease is not as great as some people think," James Dwyer, an associate professor in preventative medicine at the University of Southern California, said.

Dwyer, an expert in the field, but not a doctor for the actor, said more important factors were smoking, high blood pressure, high cholesterol and a lack of exercise.

Candy, who was 6 feet 3 inches tall, smoked, and associates said his weight in recent months was startling. He had dieted at the Pritikin Longevity Center and lost 75 pounds for 1985's "Summer Rental."

"Obese people tend to be less active and people who are overweight tend to have higher cholesterol levels and higher blood pressure," Dwyer said. "But it is not a fact that an overweight person is three to four times at risk of a heart attack."

William Sanderson, a bit player in "Wagons East," said Candy had a bad back but otherwise appeared well.

Sanderson, the film's co-star Richard Lewis, and its producer Gary Goodman all said Candy's performance as a 1860s wrong-way stagecoach driver was outstanding.

"God willing, the world will get to see this performance," Sanderson said, noting that Thursday night Candy had been stellar in a scene reminiscent of the famed Western spoof "Cat Ballou."

Candy first gained fame on the cult hit TV series "Second City T.V." He went on to star in "Splash," "Volunteers," "National Lampoon's Vacation" and "The Great Outdoors."

The Canadian citizen co-starred in last year's "Cool Runnings," a hit film about the Jamaican bobsled team. He also had small part in the comedy blockbuster "Home Alone" and Olive Stone's "JFK."

In the wake of the mosque massacre, Israel tries to resume the Middle East peace talks.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israel took fresh steps to crack down on Jewish militants Sunday as it sought to reopen direct talks with the PLO and salvage the Middle East peace talks.

Since the massacre of 30 men and boys in a mosque in the West Bank town of Hebron on Feb. 25, the PLO has said it will not return to the talks until Israel removes radical Jewish settlements in Arab towns and permits an international peace-keeping force in the territories.

But Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's government hesitated on a decision to uproot Jewish settlements.

The government fears that could look like caving in to PLO demands — and possibly ignite a rebellion among the settlers and their supporters.

The Cabinet did vote to order the attorney general to charge anyone who praises the mosque massacre with incitement, punishable with several years in prison.

The killer in the mosque massacre was a Jewish settler.

Israel TV showed settlers rejoicing and dancing when they heard about the massacre.

Palestinians and moderate Israelis alike were incensed.

The government has already sought to curb militant settlers, ordering the arrest of six leaders and the disarming of 18 others.

But there have been widespread calls for tougher action.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres is trying to arrange a meeting with PLO chairman Yasser Arafat.

Such a meeting may come this week, through Egyptian intermediaries in an effort to revive direct contacts with the Palestinians.

Peres' spokeswoman, Bahira Burdugo, said the meeting would deal with the Palestinians' demands — except for their demands about the settlers.

Arafat arrived in Cairo, Egypt, on Sunday for consultations with President Hosni Mubarak about reviving the peace talks, but refused to talk to reporters.

There was no immediate response to the Israeli moves from the PLO.

Rabin opposes dismantling any of the 144 settlements in the occupied territories, where some 120,000 Jews live alongside 1.8 million Palestinians.

Over the last few days, a growing number of Cabinet ministers have come out in favor of removing 400 militant settlers living among 80,000 Arabs in the heart of the West Bank town of Hebron.

At least half the 14 ministers advocated removing the Hebron settlers at Sunday's Cabinet meeting, said Tourism Minister Uzi Baram.

Ministers against removing them said they were opposed only because the time is not right.

"It would look like we're really accepting the opinion of the PLO," said Agriculture Minister Yaakov Tzur.

Rabin refused to allow a vote on the issue and deferred further discussion until next week, Baram said.

Homosexual visibility key to empowerment

He said one way bisexual, gay and lesbian organizations could create change and empower themselves was by communicating better with organizations on other campuses.

Shepard also proposed empowerment through visibility. He gave examples of some of the thousands of gay organizations and networks around the country that showed the involvement and diversity to be found.

"We are so diverse that at the (Washington) D.C. Pride Weekend last year, the gay animal rights groups heckled the gay rodeo," he said. "We are not a movement, but a movement of movements."

The number of gay and lesbian campus groups has grown also, Shepard said, as well as their involvement in student government.

More schools than ever have policies that ban discrimination based on sexual orientation, and more than 50 colleges and universities offer benefits to lesbian and gay domestic partners, he said.

Those gains are the direct result of visibility, Shepard said.

"It's visibility that has enabled us to identify one another and reach out to one another to build self-esteem, relationships, organizations, institutions and communities. It's visibility that has allowed us to organize around, educate about and challenge bigotry."

Shepard said being out and open about sexual orientation is a matter of survival.

"Given the pervasiveness of homophobia in our society, I would argue that it is impossible to have a positive lesbian, gay or bisexual identity in isolation, secrecy and silence."

Also, gay and lesbian groups can find empowerment through allies and coalitions, he said.

These organizations can foster equality and create safety by educating heterosexuals, Shepard said.

Virtually all leaders in government, religion and business come out of universities, he said, and that is a good opportunity to reach people.

"We need to change the campus consciousness about queers and create a new generation of thinkers and leaders who come to their work with a new understanding of sexual orientation."

Gaining heterosexual allies is not enough, however, Shepard said.

Homosexuals also need to educate themselves about oppression against women, people of color and economic oppression, he said.

"When one group is oppressed, we are all oppressed. We need to take a stand against all forms of bigotry and hatred, even when it's not immediately clear that we ourselves are targets."

Shepard said it was a misconception that the gay rights movement was a coastal phenomenon.

Some of the healthiest and most effective organizations could be found in midwestern institutions, he said.

"The Midwest is where a lot of the hardest and most important work is being done in the struggle for civil rights for lesbians, gay men and bisexuals. The coasts have nothing on you."

Shel Barry, fifth year senior in interior architecture, said the conference was something different for Manhattan and that a lot of people were enjoying it.

"Manhattan has evolved a lot in five years," Barry said. "It (the conference) has raised a lot of points as far as getting politically involved."

ing procedure. This includes sounding the sirens at K-State and also a message will be broadcast over the Emergency Broadcast System, Tipping said. For the next couple of months, the National Weather Service from Topeka, along with WARN, will be doing programs on severe weather in Manhattan, Topeka, Lawrence, Emporia and Marysville.

These programs will have slides and videos designed to give people an idea of what goes on during severe storms.

"On a basic level, it gives you information on how severe weather develops and it gives you information on how to react during storms," Tipping said.

One meeting will be at 7 p.m. tonight in Cico Park's Pottorf Hall.

Education during severe weather season is important because severe storms can kill people, Julie Eichem said, who works with the Riley County Emergency Preparedness.

The Riley County Emergency Preparedness and the National Weather Service also try to keep people informed when severe weather exists, she said.

Program relocates to new college

JOHN MEIROWSKY
Collegian

Speakers said they approved of the speech pathology/audiology department's move from the College of Arts and Sciences to the College of Human Ecology Monday.

Patricia Rogenmoser, president of the student speech, language and hearing association, told Faculty Senate committee members that speech pathology students are in support of the proposal.

"If not for this proposal, there might not be a program at K-State in speech pathology. Faculty, students, as well as others, do not want to see it discontinued," she said.

The change would make graduates better educated to work with people who have hearing disorders, Rogenmoser said.

"The College of Human Ecology course requirements can provide us with a better background to serve people with communication disorders. For example, the human services classes required in Human Ecology will provide us with a better understanding of people," she said.

Rogenmoser said students were concerned that the transition would not be smooth.

"At this point, the faculty will be housed out of Justin Hall. And the clinic will be in Leasure Hall. This is a concern of ours," she said.

Another concern of the proposal was the loss of one graduate teaching assistant, Rogenmoser said.

"We'd like to have all the students benefit from financial assistance of one GTA," she said.

Rogenmoser said the demand for speech pathology graduates is so great that students will be able to find jobs with a degree from either college.

Denise Klimek, laboratory technical director at Memorial Hospital, said she was glad that the department will remain because her 18 month-old son has speech therapy twice a week.

"He started at the speech pathology department when he was four months. He has steadily improved in all areas of development because of the therapy," she said.

"The main concern I have is that the service remains intact and not lose any of the services. There is no one else in the area that will handle the number of children that K-State does," Klimek said.

With the approval of the speakers, the committee decided to approve the transfer of the department and rename the department of Human Development and Family Studies to the School of Family Studies and Human Services.

Committee members plan to rework several items before sending it to the Faculty Senate floor.

Clinton promises cooperation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said Monday he had been unaware of two White House meetings in which his advisers discussed the Whitewater investigation with Treasury Department officials involved in the probe. He forcefully defended his wife and said he was sure she had done nothing wrong.

At a White House news conference dominated by the Whitewater investigation, Clinton said the White House was cooperating fully with investigators and scoffed at Republican comparisons with Watergate.

"There will not be a cover-up. There will not be an abuse of office in this White House," Clinton said, defending his conduct both as president and as Arkansas governor, when most of the episodes under investigation took place. "We're not covering up anything. We are opening up."

In addition to ordering his staff to comply with subpoenas issued Friday by the special counsel investigating Whitewater, Clinton said he had them going the extra mile and determining whether there were any other meetings or contacts that might be of interest to investigators.

Clinton was on the defensive throughout the news conference but got angry and thumped his podium when defending his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, and suggesting Republicans were unfairly attacking him.

"The American people will be outraged if anybody uses this as an excuse for not doing the people's business," Clinton said.

Earlier in the day, the White House ordered its staff to scour trash cans, burn bags and files for subpoenaed paperwork, and Attorney General Janet Reno rejected a GOP request to suspend Webster Hubbell, an associate attorney general and Clinton confidante.

Reno said that there was no basis for such action.

Friday's subpoenas were issued after the White House acknowledged three meetings in which Clinton aides discussed the government's Whitewater investigation with Treasury Department officials. Clinton said he had been unaware of two of those, and said the third dealt with some press matter.

Also, he said he was informed last October that the Resolution Trust Corp. was investigating whether his gubernatorial campaign had received improper donations from a Little Rock savings and loan. But Clinton said he could not recall who told him, or exactly when he was informed. The savings and loan was run by the Clintons' partner in the Whitewater Development Corp.

Many of the questions about Whitewater centered on Hillary Clinton, who did legal work for the savings and loan run by James McDougal. When asked about a report that she had law firm records shredded, Clinton said firms dispose of documents all the time and said there was no evidence that the records dealt with the Whitewater land deal or Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan.

From there, he launched into an assertive defense of his wife. "Her moral compass is as strong as anybody's in this country," Clinton said. "I do not believe for a moment that she has done anything wrong."

Again and again as he was peppered with questions, Clinton insisted there was no evidence that his staff had done anything wrong. And he said there were no allegations that he had done anything illegal or improper as Arkansas governor, either.

White House employees returned to work after a remarkable weekend: A special counsel subpoenaed 10 administration officials Friday to find out more about private White House briefings on a

► UNEMPLOYMENT RATE UP FROM DECEMBER

TOPEKA — The Kansas unemployment rate jumped to 7.2 percent during January, an increase state officials on Monday partly attributed to a change in the way the data is collected.

The Department of Human Resources said the state's jobless rate went from 4.7 percent in December to 7.2 percent in January.

Department officials said about 1 percent of the upswing in unemployment was due to normal seasonal changes. The rest was because of a new method of data collection, they said.

► COLOMBIAN DRUG CARTELS, MAFIA TIGHTENING LINKS

MIAMI — Italian police seized 5 1/2 tons of cocaine, a European record, after a shootout in a Turin warehouse, an Italian liaison to the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration said today.

No one was wounded in the exchange of gunfire Sunday night. The operation, which resulted in 10 arrests, showed that Colombian drug cartels and the Mafia are tightening their links, U.S. and Italian officials said.

"This has the signature of the Cali cartel — the container right through the ports," Jim Shedd, Miami DEA representative, said.

Details of the operation came from the Italian official, who spoke on the condition his name not be used.

Programs prepare students

CARON CITRO
Collegian

The College of Business Administration is going international, but some people may not agree with the way it is doing it.

Dan Short, dean of the college and professor of business, said an emphasis on international programs in the college is needed to prepare students for a global economy.

The college is planning to hire one new professor to develop an international curriculum.

To do so, $50,000 of the $241,974 the college provides to the International Trade Institute will be reallocated to provide the college's new international curriculum. The reallocation will start June 17.

The trade institute provides international contacts, research and translation services for Kansas businesses.

Students can gain international experience by working at the International Trade Institute, which was created in 1980 as a part of the College of Business Administration.

The institute staff currently consists of 20 students, but it will be reduced to four after the reallocation, Short said.

The money being reallocated will be used for a larger number of students and international programs.

"We need more international programs in front of all the 2,100 students in the College of Business," he said.

A committee was formed to review the situation.

"In any resource-constrained environment, you find yourself unable to do what you want to do," Short said.

"The faculty and the committee both recommended that we devote more resources for the 2,100 students."

But some student employees have said the trade institute will be limited in its ability to fulfill its mission when the money is used elsewhere.

"The whole University could be affected if they cut us down to bare bones," Karma Brooks, junior in the pre-health professions program and institute employee, said.

The institute is identified as one of the country's strongest existing programs dedicated to international trade and export understanding, according to a 1984 U.S. Congressional report.

Carmela Nabors, graduate student in economics, said she is worried this will diminish service to such a point that the institute will fail.

The institute has the largest library in Kansas for information on subjects such as export documentation, trade shows, international contacts and cultural differences, Nabors said.

"The Department of Commerce is the only other place to go to for this information in Kansas," she said. "How will they keep that up with such a small staff?"

Kevin Almeida, graduate student in business, is also employed at the institute.

"There are a lot of reasons for this we don't know about," he said.

However, some students

Rich Becker, Republican gubernatorial candidate, said there needs to be more efficiency in education and more economic development in Kansas.

Becker, mayor of Lenexa and advertising sales manager for KSHB-TV Channel 41, spoke to about 10 people in the K-State Union Monday night.

He said 83 percent of the state budget goes to education and Social and Rehabilitative Services.

"If we don't get those under control, we're heading for real problems," Becker said.

The hot potato issue is efficiency in schools, and consolidation may be a possible answer, he said. The money saved through consolidation could go to buy new equipment such as computers for schools, Becker said.

"Those schools that can't produce students efficiently need to be consolidated," Becker said. "Take the

► SINATRA SUFFERS HEAT EXHAUSTION IN CONCERT

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. — Frank Sinatra rested at his desert home Monday, a day after collapsing from apparent heat exhaustion in front of thousands of stunned fans at a concert in Virginia.

Sinatra, 78, felt fine and should be able to resume his concert tour in a few weeks, publicist Susan Reynolds said.

"It's very, very good to be home," Sinatra said through Reynolds.

Sinatra was nearing the end of his concert Sunday night at the sold-out Mosk Auditorium in Richmond, Va., when he passed out while singing his trademark song, "My Way."

Sinatra banged his head against a stage monitor and was unconscious for about 10 seconds. He suffered a small cut on his forehead.

"He's feeling fine. He became very hot on stage. It was heat exhaustion," Reynolds said.

Several times during the performance, Sinatra wiped his face and complained about the heat. Suddenly, he stopped singing and asked for a chair.

As paramedics and stagehands whisked him offstage in a wheelchair, Sinatra blew a kiss, and the 3,700 fans responded with a standing ovation.

► BUDGET INCREASED FOR EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS

TOPEKA — A proposed budget for the state's public school system, which contains a $25.4-million increase in spending on special education programs, won House approval today.

The vote was 72-52. It went to the Senate.

The bill would appropriate $1.96 billion to the state Department of Education for fiscal year 1995, which begins July 1. That would represent a 8.3-percent increase over its current budget of $1.81 billion.

The bill contains $178.9 million for special education programs. The state would pay for 85 percent of the excess costs school districts face in having special education programs.

But the measure keeps the base budget for all school districts at $3,600 per pupil, the same amount it has been since the 1992-93 school year.

The measure drew opposition from some House members who thought the bill should increase the base budget figure and from others who were concerned the state cannot afford the increase in special education funding.

► DEMOCRATS LOOK FOR NEW LEADER

WASHINGTON — From health care to campaign finance, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said his new lame duck status won't hamper progress for President Clinton's ambitious legislation program.

"I've never threatened anyone," Mitchell said at a weekend news conference. "I've never attempted to obtain revenge on anyone who disagreed with me."

"I believe that my influence with my colleagues will not be diminished since they know in advance they have nothing to fear from me, even if I were going to be majority leader for six or 12 more years," he said on Saturday, the day after the surprise announcement that this term would be his last.

As majority leader, Mitchell has been instrumental in the Democrats' attempt to end the gridlock that characterized the previous four years and usher in a period of cooperation between a White House and Congress controlled by the same party.

Public to respond to library proposal

$2.7-million project would include parking area

MELISSA REYNOLDS

Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission will hear public response to a proposed $2.7 million public library expansion tonight.

The design was presented to the city commission for the first time at the Feb. 22 work session. The commissioners will decide tonight whether or not to finance the expansion.

A study was done in 1993 by the library's governing board to indicate the areas of the Manhattan Public Library that need to be expanded.

The traditional children's area will be enhanced and enlarged. Also, the blind and handicap section will be brought to the first floor, Fred Atchison, library director, said.

The city has purchased and moved a house at 618 Houston St. for expansion of the library and the parking lot.

No tax dollars were spent in the purchase of the lot, which was made possible by the sale of the old Sears Automotive store. The library owned one-half of the building. When it was sold in summer 1993, power to do anything to the property until the owner relinquishes it. He salvages his rights when he vacates the premises."

The 31,000-square-foot expansion, funded through city bonds, will be added directly to the east side of the present building, Atchison said.

The decision to expand was brought to the library's attention by concerned members of the library's staff.

"When the library was built 20 years ago, it was not designed for CD-ROMs and computers," Judith Edelstein, assistant director, said.

Technological advances such as CD-ROMs and videos were crammed into existing space, and the Children's Program area was lost.

"The sacrifice that we were making was people space," Atchison said.

K-State students make up a large portion of the public library's users. "During the Farrell Library expansion, we predict even heavier K-State use," he said.

The children's activities sometimes disturb people using the study areas, because the areas are cramped together, Atchison said.

The renovation will allow the library to be divided into zones, which would cut down on noise and conflicts.

the library collected its investment.

Controversy arose last summer when the city offered to buy another lot at 612 Houston St. to further expand the library.

The neighbors expressed their concerns at the second public meeting on the expansion.

The reason the residents gave for not wanting the house to be moved was that many of the old houses were built and owned by the first downtown merchants.

Some community members said they felt too many of the old buildings are being torn down, and that history is lost each time a home is demolished.

"We don't want to see the house destroyed," Atchison said. "We would like to see it moved to a good location. The 612 lot allows us more room to do what we couldn't do otherwise."

"The city doesn't have the

"Because the library is now at total capacity, K-State students have to study amidst children and they don't have enough space to spread out their books," Rosie Pettie, assistant director, said.

Since many people use the library's information differently, the library soon realized the need to increase its flexibility," Atchison said.

Parking lot safety is an important concern and one of the main reasons for expansion, Atchison said.

"The parking problem here is similar to the problem on the K-State campus. There isn't enough," Atchison said.

The present parking lot at the library is difficult to enter and exit because of the straight stalls.

Also, the sloping berms that run along Juliette Avenue attract children to play on them, he said.

SGA opens group activity center

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Student groups now have a full-service office on campus thanks to the newly opened Student Activity Center.

The Center is located in back of the Student Governing Association office and has four Macintosh computers, a telephone, fax machine and photo copier.

The Center was funded by SGA to reduce the costs for student groups. SGA has historically made allocations to pay for student groups' photo copies and phone calls.

"The Center is open to all of the groups on campus," Amy Smith, senior in political science and chairperson of the Union Activities Board, said.

"We're trying to reduce the costs for student groups who need to use the equipment."

The use of the computers and the telephone are free and the fax machine and copier are available at reduced prices.

The Center is available to representatives from student groups to conduct business for the benefit of the organization. Individual students are not allowed to do their homework on the computers.

"I just made a brochure to promote Phi Beta Lambda, which is the Future Business Leaders club," Patrick Carney, junior in political science and arts and sciences senator, said.

"The Macintoshes are the basically the easiest computers to use and it's not hard to make an eye catching pamphlet," Carney said.

Students can reserve computer time or just drop by the SGA office, Smith said.

"I think this center will be a positive influence on campus once everyone finds out about it," Carney said.

"This activity center might encourage more groups to register with UAB," Stacy Dalton, junior in marketing and business senator, said.

A group needs at least five members to register. The group officers fill out a simple form available in the SGA office.

The student senators talked about creating the Student Activity Center this fall.

"We wanted to centralize the services and have a place where the students can get advice and help," Smith said.

Clinton's turn for special prosecutor

If the Clintons are indeed innocent, the truth is on their side, and there should be nothing for them to worry about.

The practice of partisan politics is taking another swing at President and Hillary Clinton, but this time it might actually accomplish something useful.

Whitewater. Watergate. Whitegate. (Not to mention Iran-Contra.) Every dog will have his day, and every president will have his own special prosecutor. It appears to be Clinton's turn.

Questions and speculation are, in a word, flying. The White House staff has been ordered to sift through trash cans for anything Whitewater-related. For once, as is rare in Washington, things are as they should be.

This is one scandal that calls for the kind of attention that it is being given. It might not be Watergate (yet), but it doesn't have to be. The "may haves" alone are enough to warrant the attention Whitewater is receiving.

President Clinton may have taken improper donations from a Little Rock, Ark., savings and loan for his gubernatorial campaign.

Hillary Clinton may have resisted giving Whitewater files to federal investigators and worked against the appointment of a special prosecutor. The list goes on.

In a fit of executive denial, the first lady called Whitewater criticisms the wildest kind of paranoid conspiracies. And the president, in a speech reminiscent of the Reagan years, said that he didn't remember when or by whom he was told about the impending investigation.

He actually said he didn't think much about it at the time. He doesn't want anyone else to think about it either. Amazingly, the White House has sunk to the level of the "they're just picking on us about something unimportant" defense.

"I'm just telling you, the American people can worry about something else," he said.

If the Clintons are indeed innocent, the truth is on their side, and there should be nothing for them to worry about.

In the words of Sen. Robert Dole, "If there's been no wrongdoing, there should be nothing to hide."

Here's the solution to K-State's tallest problem

I think I have an idea for K-State's tallest problem on campus — a 130-foot light pole in the center of the Union parking lot.

How about putting a large K-State flag on it?

Most people probably haven't even noticed the large pole between the meter lot and the permit lot. It used to be the only light for the six-acre parking lot. The pole had 12 1,000-watt Lucalox lights on a large circle that could be raised or lowered when the lights needed to be fixed.

During the 1970s, the lighting system was praised for its low operating cost and effectiveness. It was said the lights on this pole were so bright you could see them when you got off I-70 at the Manhattan exit.

Unfortunately, this lighting system came to an end when the cable that was used to raise and lower the lights broke, and the lights came crashing down.

It was determined it would be too expensive to replace it, and the University instead decided to invest its money in the current lighting system of several small individual lights spread throughout the parking lot.

Despite the new lighting system, the pole remains because of the expense in removing it. This leads to the question of what we should do with it.

I see only three possibilities for what could be done with it: leave it alone, take it down, or put a huge purple and white K-State flag on it.

After conducting an informal, one-person survey, I noticed only one building on campus has a flag on it, and that is Military Science Hall, which has a U.S. flag flying above it.

In addition, the Aggieville entrance to campus has a U.S. flag, a Kansas flag and a K-State flag. But to the best of my knowledge, there are no more.

I think converting this pole into something useful would be beneficial for the University and not too terribly expensive.

■ It would change a useless eyesore into something useful.

■ It is perfectly located right in front of the Union in the middle of the parking lot. The base of the pole is surrounded by flowers, bushes and trees.

■ The University of Kansas has a flag in front of its administrative offices to show school pride. And we would hate to be less supportive of our school than our fine friends at that other university.

■ We would have three different flags to chose from. A purple flag with white lettering reading "State" diagonally with a large white "K" written over it. A second possibility is a purple and white flag with the University's seal on it, and a third possible flag is a purple and white one with Kansas State written in purple on the white strip that runs diagonally through it.

■ Funding for the flag could come from the KSU Foundation, thereby allowing alumni to show support for K-State.

The only problem is the cost and difficulty of converting the current light pole into a flag pole in Manhattan.

To put a flag on the pole, you would have to add a pulley system, and that would involve reaching the top of the pole. Which leads us to the problem: There are no cranes tall enough to reach the top of this pole. A crane would have to be rented from Kansas City to do the job.

However, despite this problem, I do not think it should be the only reason for stopping this idea. I hope with some creativity and money from the foundation, it can be done.

Bike regulations need more scrutiny

Let me begin by saying I'm not automatically against some sort of fee to pay for bike racks and bike paths. I don't even ride enough to make it worth my while.

Unfortunately, the bicycle registration plan now in the works at Parking Services smells like a simple revenue grab.

This is not about bike racks. This is about raising the money to enforce seven pages worth of new regulations, and I've yet to hear many convincing arguments why such a drastic and potentially unpopular measure is necessary.

The proposed decals certainly won't, as has been claimed, do much to help locate stolen bikes. Removing the damning evidence would be the thief's first priority.

Keeping a record of make, model, color, size and serial number is the only hope of recovering a stolen bike, and sharing this information with the authorities should be free and voluntary.

Safety? It doesn't come from confining bikes to the streets. According to Thursday's Collegian, of the 10 bike-related accidents in 1993, six involved automobiles — including the only one that involved a pedestrian. Ironically, it seems the safest place for bikes is the sidewalk.

Nor will the stickers do much to curb moving violations. The main offenders (i.e., those jerks who ride like they are in a slalom race with human obstacles) ride at such a clip that numerical identification is impossible.

The only way to truly combat the problem is to physically stop these weasels — an action that does not necessarily involve a fee process and that may even pay for itself.

Of course, some aspects of the new plan have merit. The idea of enforced dismount zones (where one walks the bike through heavy traffic areas) is long overdue.

But if there are to be "bike monitors" present to catch transgressors (as the new plan entails,) and they have the power to issue violations (they will,) why not work off the student's I.D. or driver's license number and save those who obey the rules the $5 and the ugly sticker.

Another needed rule in the plan states, "Parking in any manner that creates a hazard or impedes access will be subject to immediate ticketing and impoundment." (Italics mine.)

Again, I think it would be possible to punish those who ignore clearly marked no-parking zones without dragging everyone else into the process.

As for the person whose bike I saw harmlessly chained to a sign post between Durland Hall and the "bike" paths the other day, I say leave this person the hell alone. (The new plan won't.)

I guess the thing that bothers me the most is how the whole plan just dropped right out of the sky. Like most folks, I didn't hear about it until the article in last Thursday's Collegian. On Friday, the paper's Editorial Board had already applied the rubber stamp. Hold up, folks.

I've read the new rules (which, by the way, have existed at least since last December), and they are heavy. Too heavy, if you ask me, and if you'd ask the bike-riding students at K-State, they would probably agree. But as far as I know, asking and agreeing has not been a part of this process.

Implementing this plan without the input, if not guidance, of the student body will cause bitterness and outrage among those cyclists who are both paying for and being most affected by the new system.

It will also prevent the possibility of finding alternative, less dramatic solutions to the "bike problem."

I may be overreacting, and I may just be misunderstanding the plan due to the limited nature of the coverage that has been afforded the issue by the Collegian.

But so far, the only thing I've seen promised the bikers (aside from the threat of a host of new fines) is that K-State "may" get more bike racks and "possibly" new bike paths.

If bike riders are going to be the object of the new laws and subject to the fees and fines needed to enforce the code, then the least Parking Services owes them is an honest assessment of what K-State will get in the way of new bike paths (not narrow suicide chutes painted on the streets) that afford easy access to convenient new bike racks. A little say in the matter might be nice, too.

► GAYS

Military still no place for sexuality — especially not homosexuality

Dear Editor,

I guess I don't get the big picture, and I guess I'm "homophobic," but what I fail to see is why this newspaper has become an oracle for the gay community at K-State.

Homosexuals do not belong in the military. In fact, this is the last place they belong. If people are gay, that's their business, but they lose their right to privacy when their behavior adversely affects the other members of the unit.

In my nine years of naval service, I have been sexually harassed by a supervisor who is gay. I was at work to maintain a helicopter, and the last thing I needed was having to fend off a sexual advance.

That happened when I was ashore; I don't want to think of how it would have impacted me if I had been at sea with nowhere to go.

Furthermore, ask the sailor stationed on an aircraft carrier home-ported in Mayport, Fla., who was raped by his drunk supervisor last summer how he feels about this subject.

The problem with gays (or women) is not their sexuality. How a person expresses their sexuality is their business. At least until it has an adverse effect on another person's ability to fight when called upon.

The advantage to a naval commander of having a straight all-male crew is that sexual politics are eliminated entirely from his ship. There is no room for distractions and the mistakes they cause of any kind.

► GAY PRIDE?

10 percent of 10 percent hardly indicative of gay pride

Dear Editor,

I'm a bit confused. It seems as though there was a "Communicate, Educate, Celebrate: Taking Pride in Our 10 %" conference this weekend.

Yet, Monday's article announced 130 attendees (and, apparently, not all were from K-State, as a photo of a KU student graced the cover).

At last check, 19,209 students were attending K-State this semester. My calculator said 10 percent of that is 1,921. Where were the other 1,791 homosexuals supposedly on our campus? Well, 130 of 19,209 is .00676, or not even 10 percent of 10 percent.

I realize a few probably had prior commitments or something, but could this account for such a discrepancy? I think not.

The conference did educate me in regard to one thing. Apparently, there is either no such thing as "gay pride" or no such thing as "10 percent."

► DIVERSITY

Hart's views a perfect example of need for multiculturalism

Dear Editor,

John Hart's column, "Diversity overlay will prove ineffective," indicates an apathy for any view except for his own, ethnocentric one.

This kind of opinion is an appalling reminder of why there is a need for the diversity overlay. Mr. Hart claims there has been "almost no evidence" to prove that the diversity overlay will be effective.

Mr. Hart's opinion is based on the assumption that there must be a revolutionary change in all who take a class that fulfills the diversity overlay.

The math requirements in no way make mathematical wizards out of all who take the class, but the students do come out with a working knowledge that may or may not help them in the real world.

That is the objective of the diversity overlay — a working knowledge of the diversity that exists within our society and our global village.

One way this nation can be unified is through the recognition of our strength of diversity. We have so many different cultures within the United States that to ignore, hate, or commit ethnocide on one for unity is self-destructive for us as a nation.

Hitler expelled the ideas of some of the greatest German intellectuals due to their ethnicity. We need all of our Einsteins, Marxs and Freuds to succeed. If all members of society, regardless of ethnicity or sexual orientation, were applied to unification and strengthening of our nation, we could alleviate many of the social ills of our time.

► WESTERN INFLUENCE

If you blame U.S. for Bosnia, then give it credit for other atrocities

Dear Editor,

I would like to commend Mohammad Badrul Ahsan for his insightful March 3 piece on how the West, but more specifically the United States, is murdering people throughout the universe.

When America was elected Sheriff of the World, our goal was to eradicate the human population as it was deemed "good business." As our country enters its 218th year of existence, I would like to point out other atrocities we take full responsibility for — the Spanish Inquisition, the Roman practice of throwing Christians to the lions, Vlad the Impaler and the thousands of years of religious fighting in the Middle East.

To be honest, I also think we are responsible for the human sacrificing in Ireland and South Africa, but no one wants to give us credit for that.

Finney refuses bill approval, will let pass without signing

BRIEFLY
Gov. Joan Finney opposes the death penalty bill now being considered in the Kansas Legislature, but said she will let it become law without her signature if the bill is passed.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Gov. Joan Finney said Monday she doesn't want the Legislature to pass a death penalty bill, but insisted she will let it become law without her signature if one does pass.

When Finney was asked if she thought there was a chance she'd veto a capital punishment bill, given her personal opposition to the death penalty, she replied, "No, I don't."

Then she added, "I have made that commitment, and I believe trust is very important."

"I believe every life is precious, and we should not take human life."

"I don't want one (a bill) at all. But if they are going to send me one, they must know they're going to be held accountable."

Aides have characterized Finney as torn between her conviction that capital punishment is wrong and a 1990 campaign pledge to allow a bill to become law without her signature.

She is said to be determined not to go back on her word, as she said she thinks former Gov. John Carlin did.

Carlin pledged to sign a "constitutional" death penalty bill, then vetoed four of them, saying his conscience would not permit him to let it become law.

On other subjects, Finney said she is concerned about talk of a settlement in the military veterans income tax refund case because of the cut lawyers would take for the legal work they've done.

"My concern is the attorneys' fees, which are going to be very costly," Finney said.

"I believe we should see what the courts decide before there is a settlement. Attorneys want a settlement, and they want to look at the entire amount. As I understand it, they'd get about a third of it."

She will not approve any Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. rate review bill that is not what she considers to be fair to the ratepayers.

She said the company's profits would dictate the fairness of any version of the TeleKansas II plan that passes the Legislature.

"If it's not fair to the ratepayers, I would veto any bill," she said. "We've got to look at the profits of the company. We've got to continue to review each case that comes before the (Corporation) Commission and do what is in the best interest of the ratepayers."

She won't sign off on any casino legislation that doesn't treat Indians fairly and give them the economic advantage that Congress intended when it passed the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act.

RENEE MARTIN

Some buildings on campus have more than faculty and students in their classrooms.

Last semester, while investigating a rustling noise, Chris Jones, sophomore in landscape architecture, peered under his desk expecting to see paper blowing in the wind.

He said he was surprised to discover the wind was actually a brown, furry creature with four legs and a tail.

"I looked down and saw this nose peek out, and it was a mouse chewing on paper," Jones said. "We tried catching it, but it ran away."

The mouse was the second one Jones encountered in Seaton 320 during the fall semester. The other one was discovered dead in a mousetrap.

Joe Daly, senior in landscape architecture, also spotted a mouse in Seaton 306.

"A girl that sits next to me opened her shelf, and a little mouse was sitting in her popcorn bag," Daly said.

"She put a trap on the floor, and I guess it was wiggling in it until the janitor came. She doesn't keep food in there anymore."

Although Jones and Daly said mice are probably still in the building, they haven't seen any since last semester.

"In the beginning of the semester, the problem was worse because it was colder out," Jerry Varriale, general maintenance repair technician, said. "The mice would get in buildings just about any way they could."

He said mousetraps baited with peanut butter are successful in catching mice and keep the population on campus low.

"We caught about 30 on campus last semester, and that's not that bad because it is farmland around here," Varriale said.

Another mouse was caught in Anderson Hall this semester, but he said that building usually doesn't have trouble with mice.

However, other campus buildings do have frequent problems.

"I caught some in Kedzie, Calvin and Seaton. Those are the main buildings we've found them in," Varriale said.

"I don't know why they like those buildings. They just get in," he said.

Mice also have been found in Waters Hall because of the flowers kept in the basement, Varriale said.

Vickie DeWitt, facilities training and safety manager, said people who find mice in campus buildings should call campus pest control.

"The workers will survey the situation to see what is the problem," she said. "If they are able to act on it, they will."

If mice are found, she said, the crews will set mousetraps and monitor them on a regular basis.

"They check whatever traps are in the building each morning so the workers won't have to deal with it when they come in," DeWitt said.

Pest problems in the form of ants also plague Seaton Hall.

"They like Seaton for some reason. It's the only building we've found them in," Varriale said.

He said it may be from students leaving food around.

The ants found have been pharaoh ants, small red ants that infest human dwellings, and students have said they are a nuisance.

"You start to eat a cookie, and two minutes later ants are crawling all over it," David Rienstra, sophomore in architecture, said. "They are everywhere. We have sprayed the walls, but they keep coming."

Varriale said the ants are difficult to kill.

"The pharaoh ants are impossible to get rid of," he said. "They can move a whole nest in 20 minutes, so it's hard to get them all."

The crews use traps baited with poisonous food that the ants take back to their colonies.

Jones said the traps solved the ant problem in Seaton 320.

"We set ant traps, and we started cleaning up better," he said. "We don't have them anymore."

However, in Seaton Court 109, the ants are still there, Rienstra said.

Chris Norstrom, sophomore in architecture, said students have learned to deal with the ants. They throw away empty containers and try not to keep food in the room.

"You can also take a brush and get them off your projects, and I rinse out all my cups," he said.

Bars offer place to dance, kick back and relax

AMY ZIEGLER

Editor's note: This is the fourth in an ongoing series of reviews of local taverns.

■ BERLIN

Drink, dance, sweat — Berlin.

The windows were steamed up from the outside, and when I stepped into Berlin, I could see why.

The dance floor was on fire with spirit and energy. Disco lights danced across the small floor, and people from all walks of life bopped up and down to the rhythm of the technomusic.

REVIEW

One wall had spray-painted New York City-style graffiti, and the other was covered with a sheet of paper that was designed by sketches and comments from the Berlin customers.

On the dance floor, everyone had a different style of dancing and a new way to move and groove.

Men with dog tags and buzz haircuts and women with long flowing dresses, T-shirts and crop tops jumped back and forth, up and down, in groups and in couples.

"The crowd is diverse," Amy Weldon, freshman in business administration, said. "There are a lot of people who are really into techno and the rave scene, but when they come here, they don't know how to dance."

The people who came to Berlin to drink rather than dance hung out around the bar or watched the crowd on the dance floor.

"It's my kind of music," Eric Penkauskas, Fort Riley resident, said.

"I come here just to drink, unless someone asks me to dance. It's different than the army, which is why I come here."

■ BOWINKLE'S

Bowinkle's struck me as a typical average Joe bar.

Men in their 40s with baseball hats, scruffy beards and worn flannel shirts sat on the black bar stools sharing a laugh and a cold pitcher of beer.

The dusty blue wall was covered with genuine canoe oars, a golf bag, historic photographs of the K-State football and baseball teams and team pennants.

Although the bar had a sports theme, the working-man atmosphere shined through the decor.

None of the customers had their eyes glued to the skiing competition on the big-screen television.

The men were more interested in meeting up with old friends and talking about the price of beer and work.

Bowinkle's is a hot spot for workers in Westloop and the surrounding area.

The customers generally want to escape from the pressures of work while avoiding the young college crowd of Aggieville.

"I come here to sit down and relax and have a beer. This bar is laid-back, not loud, not fast, and not Aggieville," Stanley Burke, Manhattan resident, said.

Bowinkle's has two levels, including a bar with stools and round tables and an upper level with family-style booths, a dance floor, karaoke stand and a pool table.

The soft music and crowd of regulars around the bar gave Bowinkle's a relaxing effect.

Bowinkle's isn't flashy or unique, but it gives the locals a place to come to drink and be themselves.

SALINA — The glass slipper fits. Missouri, No. 7 seed, lived up to its Cinderella title by upsetting the No. 2-ranked Colorado Buffaloes 79-71 in overtime at the final of the Big Eight Conference Tournament last night.

The Tigers were trailing by two points with two seconds left in the game when Erika Martin nailed two free throws to knot things up at 62-62 and send the game into overtime.

Martin said she knew that she had to make the free throws.

"I knew that I had to put them in," Martin said.

Then in overtime, Missouri jumped out with four quick points by Martin to give the Tigers a 66-62 lead.

Colorado then evened things at 66-66 on a basket by DeCelle Thomas and two free throws by Raegan Scott.

Then on the defensive end Colorado was called for five fouls, sending Missouri to the free-throw line 11 times.

The Tigers didn't show any signs of pressure as they canned 10 out of 11 free-throws to take the victory away from the No. 1-seeded Buffaloes.

"This is a special win. It's been a tough season, and I'm really happy for the seniors," Missouri coach Joann Rutherford said.

Rutherford said no one expected this to happen.

"People were counting us out. We were never out of any of our regular season games. We just couldn't get the breaks, until now."

With four minutes left in the game, Missouri was trailing by eight points. However, they rallied behind two baskets by Martin and two free throws by Stacy Williams to put the Tigers in position for Martin's tying free throws.

The victory allowed the Tigers to become the first team in tournament history to win with such a low seed.

The Tigers are now 12-17 and heading to the NCAA Tournament as the automatic qualifier from the Big Eight.

The Tigers' second-leading scorer in the championship game was Nikki Smith, who finished with 18 points. Smith's performance, along with her 23 points and 13 points in the first two games of the tournament, made her the media's choice for Most Valuable Player.

Smith said it still hasn't sunk in on her that she won the award.

"I was just in a zone," Smith said. "It didn't even feel like I was shooting the ball. I was nervous all weekend, and coach kept telling me to settle down. I hope that I don't have to leave the zone."

Colorado coach Ceal Barry said the Buffaloes couldn't get the breaks at the end of the game when they needed them.

"In the last three minutes of the game, we couldn't get any shots to fall," Barry said. "They picked up more rebounds than we did, and that's the ball game."

Post-season tournament time has arrived and with it comes the yearly dose of upsets. Monday night's championship game was no exception.

Tau Kappa Epsilon upset Ehlo 77-67 in the all-University intramural basketball championship.

Entering the title game as the favorites, Ehlo were top-ranked and carried a perfect 10-0 record. However, the TKEs, who were ranked sixth, controlled the game from the start and held on late with some clutch free-throw shooting to post the win.

Prior to the game, TKE team member Spence Wallace said controlling the tempo would be key, and they did take control early.

Jason Weigel, TKE player, started the scoring just 10 seconds into the game with a three-pointer. This was the start of a 10-2 opening run.

Ehlo recovered from the TKE run with a 11-2 run of its own, taking a 13-12 lead with 13:47 left in the first half.

Both teams were hot from the floor in the opening half as the TKEs shot 53 percent and Ehlo shot 56 percent from the field.

"We got a lot of good shots tonight. All year long, someone has stepped up and hit the shots," Weigel said.

Ehlo played catch up most of the night, thanks to the TKE's hot shooting.

"They were hot the whole game and we weren't shooting quite as well as we have in the past. We just got beat," Ehlo team member Dave Schmale said.

In the second half, Ehlo made several runs, but each time the TKEs hit a big shot to stop the momentum. Two points were the closest Ehlo was able to get in the second half.

The TKEs used the three-point shot to pull away down the stretch as they made seven treys in the game.

"The three-point shot is part of our offense, and tonight we shot real well from out there," Weigel said.

Weigel and Wallace both hit three shots from three-point range and Wallace led the TKEs in scoring with 15 points.

"I thought we played very hard tonight. We just came out and played the way we have all year long," Wallace said.

In the final three minutes, Ehlo was able to get no closer than eight points thanks to the freethrow shooting of the TKEs. They were 8-11 from the line in the final two minutes holding off Ehlo.

How to watch the Big Eight tourney spending $8 per day

The Big Eight Tournament has had its share of K-State basketball highlights during the past few years.

Mitch Richmond, so close to pulling off another upset of Oklahoma in 1988.

Steve Henson's half-court three-pointer that ended the Jayhawks' season in 1989.

There was nothing wilder than the Wildcats' wacky romp to the championship game last year with

over

Nebraska

and Kansas.

But

even if

K-State is a non-factor in this season's tournament,

you can still enjoy some of the best basketball in the nation just a couple hours away.

This is how you go about doing it:

Tickets to the first round are actually the most difficult buy of the entire tourney, for two reasons.

First, no one has been eliminated yet. You have 18,000 seats divided among eight schools.

By Saturday, the number of schools will drop to four, greatly increasing your chance of grabbating a seat.

Secondly, the quarterfinal games on Friday are divided into two separate sessions, and any ticket will only get you into one of the two.

If you plan on seeing K-

State/KU Friday night, you will have to get a ticket for session

No. 2.

That session will begin with the other two teams in K-State's bracket, the Oklahoma

State/Iowa State game at 6:10 p.m. K-State/KU will tip off after the conclusion of that game.

It's true that the tournament is sold out months in advance, but unbeknownst to most fans,

there are other ways to get tickets than being a fat-cat donor or alum.

It's not well publicized, but every Big Eight Conference school gets an allotment of tickets to be distributed to fans and alums.

The tickets aren't earmarked for an individual team but for the session in which it's playing.

Call the K-State ticket office today and see if it has any general-admission tickets left to session 2.

These usually run in the $20-

30 range.

Even if they don't, you're not totally out of luck.

Call information and get the numbers of the ticket offices for the schools in K-State's bracket.

You can pay for your ticket by credit card and have it mailed to you before Friday.

Last year, the Buffaloes were in K-State's session, and I knew a couple of people who got their Friday tickets through that university.

But this year, CU plays in the other bracket, and so you'd see the team beaten by Missouri in the noon game, followed by what looks to be a barn-burner in Oklahoma/Nebraska.

You could always take a chance that you'll find someone with a ticket to the second session who is willing to part with it.

Kemper Arena is about a two-hour trip from Manhattan. Just get on I-70, go east, and just after you get into Missouri, there will be a marked exit as you go over the Missouri River.

Every day in the parking lot, you'll be assaulted by scalpers hawking tickets. But they should be your last resort, especially if you're planning an economy trip.

Once you've got a ticket, it becomes much easier to see the games the rest of the way.

To see the Saturday and Sunday rounds, start to prey off the losers.

For various reasons, Iowa State, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska bring the largest contingent of fans to Kemper.

As soon as one of those teams lose, it's a buyer's market for tickets.

Go into the concourse area surrounding the arena and walk the tunnel. You'll find beleaguered losers who just want to get the heck out of Dodge.

When K-State upset Kansas last year, hundreds of tickets to the championship game against Missouri on Sunday could be purchased for as little as $5 from disappointed Jayhawk fans.

Circle like a buzzard and cut your own deal.

Another item you should consider is your sleeping accommodations. Most hotels in Kansas City, Mo., will be booked up, but you will be able to find Motel 6s and such in Overland Park that aren't more than a 20-minute drive to the arena.

If you're severely strapped, look up that long-lost KC relative or invite a KC-area friend. Moch for a night on a couch.

Food is way expensive in Kemper, so try to eat before and after you get there.

Tourney T-shirts run around $15, although shirts from the women's tourney in Salina usually have better designs.

If your only interest is in K-State, no matter how you rate the team's chances, always plan on them doing the unexpected.

That means taking enough clothes, or you'll end up as I did last year — wearing the same thing for three days.

But the most important thing — if you're going, you've got to decide that NOW.

Not tomorrow, not Friday.

NOW. No matter who wins, it'll be a spring break you'll never forget.

Nominee for Best Picture features stellar performances

TRENT FRAGER
 Collegian

"In the Name of the Father," one of this year's Oscar nominees for Best Picture, is a fiery, passionate drama with one of the best performances ever from Irish actor Daniel Day-Lewis.

This is the true story of Gerry Conlon (Day-Lewis), an Irish man who was unjustly imprisoned in England for allegedly being involved with the Irish Republican Army's 1974 bombing of a pub. The fact is that Gerry was guilty only of being in England at the time of the politically motivated bombing.

After authorities pressure Gerry into signing a confession statement, they also imprison his aging father, Guiseppe (Pete Postlethwaite), for being an accomplice. And, while they are both truly innocent, the controversial Prevention of Terrorism Act, enacted only days before their arrests, makes way for the prosecutors to torture them with solitary confinement and ignore the confession of the real culprit.

The film stages an energetic affair of helplessness and eventually rising hope. Yet, some of the energy and purpose is lost in the overdevelopment of detailed retrospect. Nevertheless, "In the Name of the Father" is historical drama we Americans are seldom privy to in our lives of domestication and conscious neglect of past international affairs.

Day-Lewis, who is nominated for a Best Actor Oscar for this role, is the standout in the film. But there are two other exceptional Oscar-nominated supporting performances that contribute to the explosive synergy of talent. Postlethwaite, as Guiseppe, sympathetically ingratiates himself to the audience, and Emma Thompson, as attorney Gareth Pierce, delivers with sensitivity and conviction. The acting is definitely the forte of this film.

First, we see Day-Lewis' character as a man without direction who lives for "dope and free love." Gerry foolishly pays little attention to the severity of the charges brought against him, until the late-in-the-film denouement when he seeks redemption for his acceptance of what the law has audaciously done to him and his ill father. Gerry is overwhelmed with rage and overcome by madness. This transformation shows how great Day-Lewis can act when given the right script.

Despite the problems of some overdevelopment in detail and a sharply abrupt finale to the conflict, "In the Name of the Father" is a rebellious drama that is sure to derive support from the audience against the preposterous interpretation and execution of a law that is supposedly protective in nature.

Prizes awarded for poetry

ROBIN KICKHAERER

Collegian

If you think you rank up with the Emily Dickinsons and Robert Frosts of the world, now's the time to prove your stuff.

KSDB-FM 91.9 is now accepting entries for its second poetry contest. The theme for this year is "One World: Hand in Hand."

The goal of the contest is to promote the idea of cultural awareness and acceptance in every community.

DB92 is accepting poems in five categories: elementary school, middle school, high school, college and the community.

"The poems have to be original and pertain to the theme," Nolan Schramm, DB92 assistant promotions director, said.

In each category, a first-place prize of $25 will be awarded. Second-place recipients will be awarded $15, and $10 will be given to the third-place finishers.

People wishing to submit poems can pick up an entry form in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Union, the International Student Center and the information desk at Manhattan Town Center.

Poems should be typed or neatly printed. They should be no longer than one page of 500 words or fewer. Entries should be mailed to KSDB's Poetry Contest, 104 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506 by March 14.

Winners will be announced at 4:05 p.m. April 10 on DB92's "International Forum."

DEAR CASSIE

by Cassandra Duveaux

Roommate fears 3rd testicle

Dear Cassandra,

My roommate and I are on the best possible terms. We do everything together. Now the problem comes from the fact that he is a senior in nuclear engineering. I've noticed what I swear is a very slight greenish glow that tends to emanate from my roommate's side of the room. What should I do? Buy a lead blanket or hope I don't grow a third testicle?

Sincerely,
 Neon's roommate

Dear Roommate,
 You might talk to him about this. It may not be a reaction to the nuclear lab at all. He's probably just been going for seconds at the residence hall dining center. Tell him to cut down on the tater-tot casserole.

Dear Cassandra,

This letter is in response to the person writing about her abused friend. I can only reinforce your answer to him, for I too was abused by a family member, and it severely affected my entire life. Years later, after I could no longer deal with it by myself any longer, I decided to seek help through counseling. Although the therapy was difficult, I am immensely glad that I chose to talk with someone about it.

All I can say to the person who wrote is please, please get your friend to a counselor. This type of thing does not go away and only gets worse with time, and getting help for your friend will be the best thing you could ever do for her.

Signed,
 Been there

Dear Been there,
 Thanks for writing. An advice columnist can only prescribe counseling so often before sounding like a broken record with nothing new to say. It means so much more coming from a person who has experienced the same pain and confusion.

No-shows hurt job offers

"They help you from the very start, to finding a job. They even help you with your résumé."

Sophomore in accounting

Many K-State students may beat down doors to get jobs. But, at the same time, some are turning down prospective job opportunities.

"Everyone says they're really dying for jobs, but no one is signing up for interviews," Jim Akin, director of Career and Employment Services, said.

The center, students and faculty are concerned about the reputation of K-State in the eyes of recruiters, he said. Students are either not signing up for interviews, or worse yet, they are signing up and not showing up, Akin said.

"We've had a number of no-shows," he said.

"I'm convinced that if a company comes here a couple times in a row without interest, then they will stop showing up."

The center is designed to link companies and students together to help each other. Companies come here looking to recruit students directly out of college, he said.

The pattern of no-shows and the lack of interest not only scares the center, but also faculty and students, Akin said.

Students who sign up for interviews are taking slots someone else could have used, Mike Ahern, instructor of marketing, said.

"Students should be concerned because they could have had that spot," he said.

"One or two people not showing up really leaves a bad taste in their mouth," Ahern said.

Ahern has used his classes to discuss the problem with students.

"Mike is one of the faculty who is very involved in getting jobs for students," Akin said.

The placement service contacted Ahern and other faculty members to try to alleviate the problem.

However, one student said she is leery about the placement service getting her a job.

"I think the placement service is good, but I don't know whether it will get me a job," Sheila Wilson, senior in marketing, said.

Wilson said she thinks the interview sign-ups should be full because companies like Hallmark, Dillard's and Walt Disney recruit at K-State.

"Everybody wants them," Wilson said.

Wilson interviewed with all three companies.

"The people who I had interview me weren't very good. He really didn't know what he was doing," Wilson said. "Most of his time was spent asking me if I had any questions."

Another student said he thinks the center offers great advantages.

"You're not going to be able to get interviews like these once you're out of college," Brent Varzaly, sophomore in accounting, said.

The center offers a lot of services that assist students, he said.

"They help you from the very start, to finding a job. They even help you with your résumé," Varzaly said.

The center is very accessible to the companies and the students, Varzaly said.

Whether it is accessible or not, some students still aren't showing up.

Ahern said he thinks there might be reasons behind some of the no-shows and lack of interest.

"Maybe somebody already got a job, or sometimes the jobs aren't as great as they want," he said. "Instead of doing the right thing and canceling, they just blow it off."

Akin said, "It's saying they have different priorities other than working with that particular company."

Companies might think students don't have their acts together, he said.

If companies think K-State students do not have their acts together, then they might decide to recruit elsewhere, Ahern said.

He said he is worried some companies have lost faith already.

"There are companies that are questioning whether they are coming back," Ahern said.

Companies have told the center they are aware of the problem, Akin said.

"It's also a phenomenon on other campuses, but it's really increased here," Akin said. "Right now we don't understand the problem well enough yet."

Truckers denounce Eurotunnel

LONDON — The tunnel linking Britain and France got a thumbs-down Monday when a survey revealed that British trucking companies have big doubts about using the tunnel and that most truck drivers would rather ride a ferry.

"The tunnel has some way to go before it secures the support of the road transport industry," said Dieter Merz, the top British-based executive for the Swedish truck-maker Scania, which commissioned the survey.

The trucking executives interviewed were "the decision makers who will directly influence the success or failure of the tunnel," Merz said.

Two-thirds of the truckers called the creation of the 31-mile Eurotunnel between Folkestone, England, and Calais, France, "the most significant transport event of the century in Europe."

But a mere 4 percent of respondents said they had decided to use the tunnel, leading Scania to believe the tunnel operators will need to undercut ferries on price.

Operators of Eurotunnel called the survey, which was conducted in January, outdated because they recently negotiated pricing levels with trucking companies that carry most of the freight across the British Channel.

"We've agreed on commercial terms," Eurotunnel representative Sarah Rogles said. However, she acknowledged, "It doesn't mean they're going to use us."

Eurotunnel had planned to offer services to freight customers beginning Monday but abandoned that deadline weeks ago because of persistent technical glitches.

The tunnel and its operators have also incurred the wrath of British immigration officers, who said they would boycott work on Eurotunnel rather than have to bunk in France overnight without pay when their shifts end.

The Scania survey included responses from 82 British trucking executives and 20 French trucking executives. Scania wasn't certain of the survey's margin of error but said it talked to companies that make as few as 10 cross-channel journeys a year as well as big operators with more than 500 trucks that cross more than 1,000 times annually.

The French apparently like the tunnel better than the British. Three-quarters of the French truckers gave either a great deal or a fair amount of thought to using the tunnel, while two-thirds of the British had given it little or no thought.

Pricing will be a key factor as truckers decide which way to travel.

Eurotunnel hopes to take up to 25 percent of the freight market on the heavily traveled route to Calais by 1996 but declines to say how much money it hopes to make from truckers.

Rogles would not discuss freight prices other than to say they are competitive with ferry prices.

The tunnel recently announced passenger car fares that in many cases are more expensive than ferry fares.

Former Soviet Georgia faces U.N. forces

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said Monday he would support sending United Nations peacekeeping forces to embattled Georgia under certain conditions.

It would be the first such U.N. presence in the former Soviet Union.

Clinton told Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze that if peace negotiations lead to a lasting political settlement and a cease-fire with the separatist forces in Georgia's Abkhazia province, the United States would support a U.N. peacekeeping operation in Georgia.

This operation, Clinton said, would not involve U.S. military units.

The White House began sounding out Congress about backing such a mission, which could require tens of millions of dollars for the U.S. share of the cost.

Clinton, addressing a news conference with Shevardnadze at his side, said the United States supports the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia, which still has Russian troops on its soil.

Shevardnadze will go to New York late Tuesday to ask the United Nations for peacekeeping troops. The Abkhazian leaders and Russia also have requested the force.

The U.N. has a small observer mission in Georgia now, but not a full-fledged peacekeeping operation.

The peacekeepers are needed to ensure the safe return of refugees who were driven out of Abkhazia last fall by separatist forces seeking to establish an independent state, Shevardnadze said.

Clinton also announced the United States this year will provide $70 million in mostly humanitarian aid for Georgians, including nearly 300,000 refugees displaced by the Abkhazia war.

Clinton said more technical and economic assistance would be forthcoming as Georgia moves toward peace and domestic reform.

Shevardnadze said Georgia will abide by the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty and he signed with Clinton a bilateral investment treaty to promote market-oriented policies to investment.

Georgia, once dep Russia for economic a security, is experien Shevardnadze called a tough time.

"If it were not for the assistance of the American people and your support, Mr. President, our people, the Georgian people, in the fullest sense of the word would be starving."

In response, Clinton said, "We long for the day when you will not need it any more, and we know you do, too."

The United States has provided $225 million in humanitarian aid during the past two years.

Shevardnadze's visit to the White House was his first as leader of Georgia.

He was well-known in Washington during his days as the Soviet Union's foreign minister who helped retire the Cold War under former President Mikhail Gorbachev.

He is seeking U.S. aid and American business investment, and told a gathering of the Overseas Private Investment Corp.

Worldwide abuses cloud Women's Day

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The United Nations marks the annual observance of International Women's Day Monday, at a time when women and girls worldwide face limited access to education, employment, health care and even food.

Women today are slaves, spoils of war, victims of mutilation and targets of rape by soldiers and outlaws, according to a host of human-rights reports.

Some improvements are occurring, such as increasing prominence of professional women in Turkey, Mexico and Thailand. But women still live under harsh conditions and perform much of the hard farm labor and child rearing.

Internationally, there is increasing attention to such inequity, with grassroots groups gaining prominence. The United Nations is creating a special investigative unit on violence against women, and a U.S. congressional working group is being formed to spotlight serious international cases.

"Culture and tradition cannot excuse gross and systematic violations of human rights," Assistant Secretary of State John Shattuck, said.

the annual U.S. human-rights report.

The Clinton administration has pledged to push for improving women's status worldwide.

Shattuck said U.S. pressure has led to prosecution of some wealthy Kuwaitis who abused and raped their domestic servants and to creation of a commission in India to investigate "dowry murders," which occur when a woman's dowry is considered insufficient.

"Human rights for women are going to be mainstream aspects" of U.S. bilateral relations, he said.

Advocates are waiting for proof.

The administration has yet to seek Senate approval of the international Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women, a treaty that languished under Presidents Reagan and Bush after President Carter committed to it at the end of his term.

U.S. officials said they are only waiting for the Senate to complete a treaty on racial discrimination first.

"We're out of the closet where women's human rights are concerned, but we are still in the kitchen where foreign policy is concerned," Dorothy Thomas, head of Human Rights Watch's women's project, said.

provides police $4 million year in narcotics-control aid, yet the U.S. government said police are in collusion with prostitution traffickers.

confidential government inquiry into Whitewater.

And the controversy claimed its first victim Saturday, with White House counsel Bernard Nussbaum announcing his resignation.

To comply with the subpoena, deputy counsel Joel Klein issued a four-page memo today detailing how to gather documents — including electronic mail — relating to the briefings and ordered the paperwork turned over to his office by 8 p.m. EST.

The subpoena requires the White House to provide the documents by Thursday.

"Each staff member must take personal responsibility for complying with this subpoena in full," said the memo.

Staff members were required to sign statements vouching for their efforts to comply, and department heads were made responsible for their workers' compliance.

"We could have done things a lot better here at the White House," senior presidential adviser George Stephanopoulos said.

"But," he said, "I would point out as well that we have been fully cooperating with the special counsel in every way."

Rep. Jim Leach of Iowa, the ranking Republican on the House Banking Committee, said that "unless this White House operates with a greater sense of the law ... it is going to find itself in far worse shape than it has any reason to be."

The Washington Times reported Monday that during the 1992 presidential campaign, Hillary Rodham Clinton summoned couriers from the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock to the Arkansas executive mansion, where she gave them records to be shredded.

Special prosecutor Robert Fiske has subpoenaed White House officials involved in the Whitewater briefings.

Fiske is trying to learn whether funds from the failed Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan were diverted to the Whitewater Development Corp.

extra money and get the schools up to date."

Becker said he believes in higher education and the right for everyone to have the opportunity to go to school. Kansas community colleges can help those who do not want to go to a four-year institution get an education, he said.

"It's important that college students are on the leading edge of technology," Becker said. "I think the community colleges of the state should be the backbone for those who don't want to go to college."

The office of governor should sell economic development, Becker said. One way to do it is to promote and aid entrepreneurship by setting up a fund, he said.

"Many people can start their own entrepreneurship in many towns but don't have the money, and they can't get it from the bank," Becker said.

Becker, who has been the mayor of Lenexa for 11 years, said 15,000 new businesses have moved to Lenexa in six years.

Becker said he takes pride in that he is the only candidate, Republican or Democrat, who has traveled to all 105 counties, and he plans to visit the counties again when he starts his campaign in April.

agree with the changes.

Sergio Barahona, graduate student in business and institute employee, said the changes were the right thing to do.

"They need the money, and there is nowhere else to get it," Barahona said. "He's responsible for the forest, not the trees."

Bill Richter, the assistant provost of International Programs, also said he agreed with the changes.

"We're delighted that the college is looking for ways to broaden its international programs," Richter said.

These changes will also bolster the school's accreditation efforts when it is revisited during the 1998-99 school year, Charles Hickman, director of projects and services at the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business, said.

The accreditation process has recently undergone a change. A school will now be evaluated against its own mission statement, Hickman said.

"Schools have many different missions," Hickman said. "Now it's pick your own and prove you're doing it well."

"The old standards were a one-size-fits-all policy," he said.

"We're looking for results," he said. "Show us that students are graduating with an understanding of global business."

However, Short said he knew there still would be people who think he's doing the wrong thing by reallocating the funds.

Stealth undergoes changes

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Air Force is studying changes in the design of its next-generation F-22 fighter jet to correct "some shortfalls" in the stealth features that make the aircraft difficult to track on radar.

An announcement by the Aeronautical Systems Center at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Ohio late Friday did not elaborate on the exact nature of the problem but said work already was under way to correct it.

Air Force representative Capt. Tracy O'Grady-Walsh said Monday the problem stemmed from numerous small features of the aircraft rather than its overall design.

O'Grady-Walsh said the flaws are associated with such features as panels that allow access to the inside of the plane for maintenance, drain holes, engine inlets, and "bulges" on the specially treated surface of the aircraft.

In its announcement, the Air Force said a review team of stealth experts from the Air Force and the aerospace industry was "working to identify and evaluate design changes" to ensure that the F-22 meets the expected level of radar-evading capability.

"Because of early identification of this issue, there is time for the design to be corrected," the Air Force said.

The exact stealth specifications of the F-22 are classified as secret.

O'Grady-Walsh said the review team was to report back in April, and the F-22 program director believed the problem could be fixed without affecting the plane's development schedule or adding to its cost.

The F-22 program is scheduled to produce 442 aircraft to replace the F-15 Eagle as the Air Force's main fighter after the turn of the century. Its projected cost of $86 billion has made it a target of some budget cutters in Congress, and the design problem could also affect political support for the program.

The Air Force statement stressed the value of new analytical models that enabled the Air Force to discover the problem and "fine tune" the design early in the F-22 program. It noted that the plane's design will not be final until February 1995 and the first test aircraft is not scheduled for delivery until 1997.

The plane is scheduled to enter service in 2004.

Representative pushes hunger awareness

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Congress has failed to acknowledge the problem of hunger in America, U.S. Rep. Alan Wheat said Monday during a forum held in a warehouse of an organization that distributes food to the needy.

Wheat, D-Kansas City, said reformers in Congress were shortsighted when they eliminated a congressional committee that examined hunger problems.

"In the name of so-called congressional reform, we eliminated the Select Committee on Hunger," Wheat said.

"We literally begged and pleaded with the new members of Congress not to do this. But they felt the $700,000 dollars budgeted for the committee would be better spent in the overall budget of the Congress."

Expansion estimated to cost $9.2 million

TONY ISLER
Collegian

The K-State Union renovation committee met Tuesday night to address questions concerning the proposed expansion and enhancement plans.

The main focus of the meeting was to answer any questions that students and members of the committee might have regarding the Union project before the legislation goes to Student Senate for first readings on Thursday.

"What we really need to do is find out what the students want to have in their Union," Skyler Harper, associate University architect, said.

"There are many possibilities for the Union, and students will have to decide what they want to see in their building," Harper said.

Presently, the plans are calling for the addition of about 20,000 square feet and the renovation of the remaining area at an estimated total cost of $9.2 million.

The new and improved Union would be made to accommodate retail and food vendors, updated recreational lounge areas, a convenience store and possibly outside seating/dining areas.

"The new plans will make better use of the existing space and will make way for a new, enhanced interior," Harper said. "We could do a lot to the Union, but we must look at what is priority."

The plans call for the replacement or enhancement of such items as lighting, acoustic paneling, carpet and other cosmetic features that have been a part of the Union for more than 30 years.

If students vote in favor of the referendum, it is then passed on to the Kansas Board of Regents and finally to the Kansas Legislature. Students could then expect the completion of the renovation/expansion project as early as the fall of 1997.

"The current time line is slated to have the Union completed by September of 1997," Harper said. "There is the possibility that the project could be delayed a year pending state Legislative approval of the final project proposal."

If this does occur, the Union project would not be complete until approximately the fall of 1998. Until then, the focus of the project

Republicans push for hearings

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Unbowed by President Clinton's pledge against any Watergate-like shenanigans, Republicans pressed harder Tuesday for congressional hearings into the White-water affair.

A day after Clinton pledged, "There will not be a coverup," Republicans on the House Banking Committee released a list Tuesday of 40 Whitewater witnesses they want to call before a panel hearing scheduled for March 24. They don't have power to force them to testify.

"Congress has an independent obligation to investigate and to inform both itself and the country," House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said Tuesday morning on NBC.

One Republican went to the extreme Tuesday of calling for the president's resignation. "He should resign," Rep. James Quillen, R-Tenn., said. But Quillen stood alone; no other Republicans have characterized the affair so severely.

Clinton predicted confidently Monday that federal prosecutors will find no wrongdoing in his Whitewater dealings, or with three briefings federal regulators gave his staff regarding the confidential inquiry.

"If I did something wrong, it will come out" in special counsel Robert Fiske's investigation, Clinton said. "They will find the truth. Let them do it. And let the rest of us go on with our business."

He moved quickly to replace Bernard Nussbaum, the chief White House lawyer who resigned Saturday, a victim of the controversy. On Tuesday, Clinton named former Carter White House counsel Lloyd Cutler as his special counsel, serving up to 130 days while Clinton seeks a permanent successor.

Clinton sternly defended his wife against unconfirmed reports that she had ordered the shredding of documents at an Arkansas law firm.

"The American people can worry about something else," Clinton said. "Her moral compass is as strong as anybody's in this country."

A poll released Tuesday found more than a third of Americans — 36 percent — believe both the Clintons acted illegally in their Whitewater dealings. Forty-nine percent said Whitewater was a serious matter.

Former Carter official to serve as counsel

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton Tuesday named Lloyd Cutler, a pillar of Washington's legal establishment and a former Carter administration official, to serve as temporary White House counsel.

Cutler, 76, succeeds Bernard Nussbaum, the mentor to first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Nussbaum resigned as White House counsel Saturday, a victim of the Whitewater affair.

Clinton announced the four-month appointment at a White House news conference.

He said Cutler was a fitting person to fill this important role.

"I wanted a Lloyd Cutler-type of lawyer, so I decided to go to the original and see how I would do," Clinton said.

Cutler served in the same job in the Carter White House.

Clinton called him "a seasoned veteran" with "impeccable professional credentials and the highest ethical standards."

Commission approves library bond issue

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The city commission unanimously voted to approve a $2.7 million bond issue for the expansion of the public library at a meeting Tuesday night.

The commission, after a three-and-a-half hour debate, voted 3-2 against an August referendum on the issue.

Residents from an overflow audience spoke for and against the expansion.

The opposition centered around a historic house at 612 Houston St. that would have to be moved or torn down to make room for a parking lot for the library.

Bretta Ellis, resident at 600 Houston St., said the city staff had not adequately looked into the historical value of the house at 612 Houston St.

Ron Fehr, assistant city manager, said the staff had contacted the historical society and had not found any information to lead them to believe the house had historical value.

Ellis said the house was built in 1886 and was the residence of an early Manhattan businessman.

She said she had written the state historical society, and it had responded that the house did have historical value. The house is scheduled to be considered for placement on the state historical register at its next meeting.

A house at 618 Houston St. has already been moved to build the a 27-space parking lot for the library.

Helen Cooper, city commissioner said, "Building a library without parking would decrease the value of the library."

Dennis Law, Manhattan resident, said the city has not made a good effort to preserve historic homes in the city.

He said the commissioners have spent tremendous political capital on the seven parking spaces that would be built

Mideast violence result of massacre

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli warplanes bombed guerrilla targets in southern Lebanon Tuesday, and troops killed two Palestinians in the occupied lands in more violence launched by the mosque massacre at Hebron.

The bombing in Israel's buffer zone in southern Lebanon was in retaliation for guerrilla attacks Monday that killed nine Lebanese affiliated with the Israeli-backed South Lebanese Army.

A statement by the Israeli army representative's office said the attack targeted the Iranian-backed fundamentalist Islamic Hezbollah, or Party of God.

There have been no reports of casualties in Israel's eighth air strike in Lebanon this year.

In the occupied Gaza Strip, troops at a checkpoint shot to death two members of Izzedine al Qassam, the military wing of the Muslim fundamentalist movement Hamas, after one of them pulled a gun.

In an Arab neighborhood of east Jerusalem, a march for International Women's Day turned violent.

Police shot a photographer for the French news agency and a police horse trampled an AP photographer. Both were in good condition.

Elsewhere, four West Bank towns are under total curfew.

Palestinians defied the curfew in Hebron to mourn two youths killed by sniper fire in stone-throwing clashes with the army Monday.

Violence since the Feb. 25 massacre by a Jewish settler of at least 30 worshippers in a Hebron mosque has left an additional 31 Arabs and two Israelis dead and more than 450 wounded.

Students in China have two views of what their government is like, said the chief commander of the 1989 demonstration for democracy at Tiananmen Square in Beijing, China.

Chai Ling, who spoke Tuesday in the K-State Union Forum Hall, said Chinese students have the propaganda they learn in school and from the government.

Those sources tell students they have a great government and a wonderful way of life, she said.

But in reality, Ling said, Chinese students experience something much different.

"People constantly live in fear and hatred. There is a circle of violence," she said.

Ling, now living in exile from China, said students in America may wonder why the Chinese students risked their lives for freedom and democracy.

"There is no law or constitution that guarantees people in China of their basic human rights. The students wanted to empower the people and protect their basic rights," Ling said.

Ling said she remembered the beginning of the Tiananmen Square demonstration as being beautiful. It was springtime, all of China had pulled together to support the students, and there was a feeling of freedom and hope, she said.

On the evening of June 3, 1989, when the communist leaders of China declared martial law and the tanks began to roll, the demonstration of unity and hope for a democratic government

► REBA McENTIRE, ALAN JACKSON TOP AWARDS LIST

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. — Country music torch queen Reba McEntire and Southern cowboy Alan Jackson were top nominees Tuesday for the 29th Academy of Country Music Awards.

McEntire and Jackson got seven nominations apiece, including entertainer, record and song of the year. They will be hosts of the May 3 ceremony, to be televised on NBC.

Other multiple nominees were Clint Black with five and Linda Davis, Vince Gill and Garth Brooks, last year's entertainer of the year, with four apiece. Getting three nominations were Brooks & Dunn, Little Texas, Travis Tritt and Wynonna, as the former Wynonna Judd now prefers to be known.

Winners of the academy's "Hat" trophies in 11 categories will be determined by the 2,500-member Academy of Country Music. Ballots will be mailed March 25. The academy's Board of Directors picks the video winner.

The academy will also present its Pioneer Award and Career Achievement Award during the ceremony and announce instrumentalist, radio station, disc jockey and nightclub of the year winners.

► EXCAVATION EMPLOYEE CRUSHED BY CONCRETE

WICHITA — A 50-year-old excavation company worker was killed when a concrete slab toppled on him on the Wichita State University campus.

The victim in Tuesday's accident was identified as Jose Ortiz of Wichita.

Employees of Sooter Excavating Co. of Wichita were digging a trench next to Hubbard Hall on the campus in preparation for waterproofing work on the basement, said Wichita State Police Chief Charles Rummery.

Ortiz was in the trench and was trapped when a concrete slab 4 feet wide, 5 feet long and a foot thick fell on him. He was pronounced dead at a nearby hospital.

When emergency crews arrived at Wichita State, other workers had lifted most of the slab off Ortiz, but he still was trapped by his right leg. Paramedics reported he wasn't breathing.

The cause of the accident was under investigation.

► PLANE HIJACKED BY MAN ARMED WITH TOY PISTOL

NAIROBI, Kenya — A man with a toy gun hijacked a Saudi Arabian jetliner to Nairobi, where he released all but the cockpit crew and demanded enough fuel to fly to London. Police stormed the plane Tuesday, freeing the hostages, injuring the hijacker and arresting his two accomplices.

Aside from the hijacker, who was taken to a military hospital, no other injuries were reported, Police Commissioner Shadrak Kiruki said.

The hijacker commandeered the plane after it took off from the Red Sea city of Jiddah late Monday for Addis Ababa, the Ethiopian capital. The plane, with 138 passengers and a crew of 15, belonged to Saudia, the kingdom's national carrier.

The man, about 25 years old, was armed with a toy pistol, Kiruki said, "but there was no way of telling that."

The plane landed in Nairobi, and everyone except the pilot and co-pilot were allowed to leave. About 16 hours after the hijacking began, security forces stormed the plane, freed the hostages and arrested the hijacker and two women, whom Kiruki described as accomplices.

Their names were not immediately available, but Kiruki said all three were from Ethiopia. The hijacker's condition also was not immediately available.

Kiruki said the three originally wanted to go to Rome, then changed their minds and demanded fuel to fly to London.

► FAMILY GRATEFUL FOR SUPPORT

HATTIESBURG, Miss. —

The widow of a civil rights worker killed in 1966 thanked Forrest County supervisors for seeking a new trial of an ex-Ku Klux Klan leader accused of masterminding the attack.

The supervisors Monday adopted a resolution backing District Attorney Glenn White's new investigation of the 1966 killing of Vernon Dahmer.

"My family and I are grateful for your support," his widow, Ellie Dahmer, told the panel. "We've always had support from the white community. We just had too many white enemies on Jan. 10, 1966."

That was the day Dahmer, 58, died when members of the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan set fire to his house and store just north of Hattiesburg. Dahmer stood in the doorway of his home and returned the attackers' gunfire while his family escaped out a back window.

► RATES BOOSTED FOR NEXT YEAR

WASHINGTON — Paying bills, writing to Aunt Maude or sending out a Valentine will cost a bit more next year. The post office wants to boost the price of first-class stamps to 32 cents.

That three-cent increase will cost the average household between 60 cents and 75 cents a month, the agency said Tuesday.

But it means nearly $3 billion in added revenue for an operation that lost $1.7 billion last year and is struggling to hold the red ink to $1.3 billion in 1994.

Alumni to gain help in job search

LISA ELLIOTT

Collegian

K-State alumni looking to relocate can now turn to the KSU Alumni Association for assistance.

The Alumni Association has joined the SkillSearch program, an electronic database used by corporations and businesses nationwide to recruit employees.

Forty universities across the United States are SkillSearch members, including the University of Kansas, the University of Nebraska and Oklahoma State University.

More than 500 companies nationwide use SkillSearch when looking for employees.

"We just became involved in the program last fall," said Amy Renz, Alumni Association vice president, who is in charge of SkillSearch.

The SkillSearch database is an electronic résumé. To qualify for the service, a person must have two to three years of work experience.

"It's really a program that is not for entry level positions," Renz said.

However, some non-traditional or returning students may be able to use the program.

"In many cases, a lot of our graduates would qualify," Renz said.

The annual fee for the service is $49 for an Alumni Association member and $65 for other alumni. Alumni who sign up before March 31 will receive their second year free.

To activate a file, alumni fill out a data sheet that highlights career accomplishments, talents and skills. The information is then put into the database, where it can be pulled up and sent out to a company.

Employers will contact

SkillSearch and request a specific skill that they are looking for, Renz said.

All files that meet skill requirements may be pulled and viewed by the employer. Then, the employers can decide whether they would like to contact the person.

The information in the file is strictly confidential. Alumni can choose to keep their records from being shared with certain companies.

"It allows people to search for a new job opportunity without going on a full-scale job hunt," Renz said.

GUBERNATORIAL RACE

Candidate supports funding for education

Health care, Fort Riley are other issues of concern

CRISTINA JANNEY

Collegian

Bill Graves, Republican candidate for governor, said he supports increases in state funding for higher education.

He said he supports the Partnership for Excellence and a bill that would bring Washburn University, in Topeka, into the state system.

However, he said he didn't think the two plans should be linked together.

"I think we have an obligation to the state schools first," Graves said.

Graves stopped in Manhattan before visiting Fort Riley Tuesday.

He said the state needs to support the base and do whatever possible to prevent its closing.

"The base is of tremendous importance to us," Graves said.

The Kansas Legislature is considering several bills on crime this session. Graves said laws such as stiffer penalties for crimes and juvenile gun-control laws would help reduce crime in Kansas.

On the health-care issue, Graves said the state would have to wait until the federal government passes legislation before it could tackle health reform.

"It is hard to predict what the federal government will do," he said. "But I think we can focus on some common elements."

Kansas needs more primary-care physicians to serve rural areas. Graves said the state needs to develop incentive programs for students studying to be primary-care physicians and practicing physicians to work in rural areas.

Graves said Congress is also considering a bill that would place the responsibility for welfare in the hands of the state.

The federal government, in return, would pick up the entire tab for Medicaid.

He said the state is better equipped to deal with welfare than the federal government.

The state shouldn't pull all support from those on welfare once they get their first job, he said. A person's first minimum-wage job may not be enough to support a family.

"The state may have to support a person through their first two or three jobs, until they reach a place they can be self-supported," Graves said.

However, he said he didn't think people deserved a free ride.

"I clearly think able-bodied Kansans should not receive benefits from the state without meaningful work in return," he said.

Graves, who is finishing his second term as secretary of state, said he has learned that most issues are a matter of money.

"Health-care reform, welfare reform — they all have a price tag," he said. "I think the main issue in this governor's race is who is going to effectively deliver services to Kansans."

IN OUR OPINION

Proposed bill may limit penalties on DUI

Ignition interlock devices may help make roads safer, but only if other restrictions are maintained.

Drunken driving laws don't need to be any easier on offenders in Kansas than they are right now.

A bill introduced at a legislative committee hearing on Tuesday would reduce penalties of convicted, drunken drivers if they agreed to use ignition interlock devices. Cars with ignition interlock devices will not start until someone blows into a tube. If the person is intoxicated, the car will not start.

At first glance, the device sounds like a great way to keep drunks off the road — it may be that it will make roads safer.

But using the device should in no way be a replacement for drunken driving penalties. That is just what this bill would do. It would reduce the 330-day license restriction to 210 days if offenders agreed to use the ignition interlock devices and cover the cost of them.

Kansas already has a tough time keeping intoxicated people from driving — most likely due to the fact penalties are not nearly harsh enough to work as deterrents.

Attorney General Bob Stephan spoke against the bill, saying it would probably lead to more offenders ending up back on the roads sooner than they should.

"People who choose to drive while intoxicated, thereby risking the lives of other people, should be held more accountable," Stephan said.

Using ignition interlock devices with the 330-day license restriction is one way to hold offenders more accountable. Requiring the devices without maintaining current restrictions or making them tougher will only compound the problem of drunken driving.

Hillary no showpiece; she's overqualified

Let me just start by saying the Republicans have been laying in wait for Hillary Clinton since she wore a headband in the campaign.

Remember the headband?

Everyone wanted to know the significance of the headband. In a campaign that should have been about the economy, the deficit and the poverty rate, people wanted to know the significance of Hillary's headband.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

I'll tell you what the significance of the headband was. It was to keep her hair out of her eyes. She got rid of it, though. Just to make people less nervous.

I knew then it was going to be a long rough ride for Hillary.

Hillary is a lawyer, just like Marilyn Tucker Quayle.

Yes, Marilyn Tucker Quayle. Marilyn's main asset was that she acted like the traditional showpiece of a vice president's wife.

Odd since Hillary Rodham Clinton was mocked by the Republican party for using her maiden name.

Here's news for everybody. Hillary is her own person with her own name. She's not just an extension of Bill.

Barbara Bush read stories to children. Nothing threatening about that. Nancy Reagan ... well, Nancy had an astrologer who planned Ronnie's schedule according to the stars. It was also reported she told him what to say in his speeches.

Now, Bob Dole is calling for full disclosure in the Whitewater.

Well, hell, he's been in a snit since the Republicans lost the White House.

I guess full disclosure only applies to Democrats. When the Iran-Contra investigation was released, all that was talked about was how much was spent investigating Reagan and associates. The investigation turned into a joke.

Ronald Reagan, George Bush and Oliver North all did these things while they were in Washington — Reagan and Bush while they were in the White House.

I must say that this is the first time I have seen the president's wife attacked in such a manner.

Oh sure, Nancy was attacked, but no one suggested a special prosecutor to see if all her brain cells were working.

Hillary is the first since Eleanor Roosevelt to actively prove she had her own mind. Rosalyn Carter came close.

But it hasn't been easy. From the beginning, she has been attacked for her mind, her will and, above all, her driving ambition. She was put through all the paces that a formerly "traditional" woman or homemaker was required to do. To ingratiate herself to the people who were threatened, an intelligent woman who had aspirations beyond those of wife and showpiece had to prove she could bake cookies.

On the trip to Japan, she was expected to go to libraries and greet children. That's fine, but in these changing times, she can offer a lot more.

Personally, I love the argument that we elected Bill and not Hillary.

Of course we did. As his wife, she can offer insights into governmental objectives. Anyone who doesn't think a president's wife doesn't do that anyway is naïve. Even Barbara Bush did it.

So, she's the head of health-care reform. People (mostly men) gripe about that, too. As the president, Bill can appoint who he wants.

As for the qualification thing, I have only one thing to say.

Dan Quayle. How qualified is a vice president who goes to Latin America thinking he's unprepared because he doesn't speak Latin?

Anybody remember the "what a waste it is to lose one's mind" speech to the NAACP? This man was a heartbeat from the presidency.

I think Hillary is more than qualified to run health care.

You've got it, Robert — regulations not fair

Dear Editor,

Bravo, Robert Gorton! Your column, "Bike regulations need more scrutiny" in Tuesday's Collegian, hit the nail on the head.

There is no plan for improving bicycling on campus. There is just a plan to charge bicyclists $5 and a lengthy list of poorly designed regulations.

I have read a copy of the proposed regulations and found many of the same problems Robert did. I, too, have major reservations about the process by which these regulations were formed.

Where was the public input? These regulations will affect everyone on campus (and potentially all of Manhattan). Why weren't we consulted in the process?

Bicyclists, don't let this proposal go unquestioned. This proposal does not have to be accepted as is.

Call Parking Services or Student Governing Association and ask for a copy of the proposed regulations so you can see them for yourselves. If you have objections, make them known as soon as possible to your student senators, the Department of Public Safety and members of the KSU Council on Traffic, Parking and Police Operations.

A public hearing regarding these proposed regulations is scheduled for 3 p.m. on April 14 in the Union Big 8 Room. Be there for sure.

► SPORTSMANSHIP

Don't leave games early; get some respect, Wilcats

Dear Editor,

I am writing this letter because I am a very angry Wildcat fan.

In the three years of my college career, I have rarely missed a K-State football or basketball game. I am sick and tired of people calling themselves true fans when in reality they are fair-weather fans.

The March 2 game against Missouri was certainly no exception.

I was thoroughly ashamed and embarrassed to be a Wildcat that night.

The Cats played well against the Tigers, despite the disrespectful audience and the final score.

When it comes down to the final minutes of the game, 90 percent of the "fans" leave, rushing to be the first out of the parking lot.

Some of the most exciting plays come in the final minutes.

Why do people bother coming if they aren't going to stay the entire game? And which team are these fans for, anyway?

The derogatory poster aimed at Coach Dana Altman was the worst display of sportsmanship I have ever seen.

Not to mention the nasty remarks made toward the athletes, coaching staff and referees. C'mon, K-State fans, show a little respect.

Gay-rights activists cry for tolerance; but they demonstrate the opposite

The ideas surrounding the March 5 Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian conference once again demonstrate the homosexual community's reliance on propaganda to advance its agenda.

The propaganda sought to demonize the opposition, impose a feeling of guilt on those who disagree, deliberately understate the breadth of the gay-rights agenda and flat-out lie when beneficial.

I almost didn't write this column because the gay-rights movement has been so effective in demonizing the opposition, whom they define as Christian religious organizations.

As a person who follows Christ, I find it deeply frustrating that the gay-rights issue has been portrayed as a polarized conflict between us and them, where they are Christian groups.

I attribute this phenomenon to the Phelps factor that pits homosexuals against the "radical religious right."

In reality, few people who claim to love Christ either hate or fear homosexuals, although most regard homosexuality as a sin. I also find it deeply frustrating that too often the destructive sin of judging homosexuals to hell is ignored.

Yet, in no uncertain terms should I sit in silence while the gay-rights movement steamrolls its agenda across our campus and nation.

It's fascinating how the gay community has exploited the Phelps factor for its own gain. It seeks to damage the opposition by associating those who disagree with the Topeka preacher.

The following statement is a classic example of how the gay-rights movement accomplishes this by attempting to make those who disagree with their goals feel guilty.

One organizer of the conference said, "What I hate to see is when homophobic people see him (Phelps), they go, 'See, I'm not as bad as he is.' But they'll still be homophobic. Don't think because you're not carrying a 'God hates fags' sign that you're OK. Subtle discrimination can be even worse."

This manipulative argument essentially says that if you disagree with us, you might be "even worse" than a man who pickets funerals of AIDS victims. Furthermore, if you don't conform to our rigid ideas, you're not OK.

By condemning anyone who disagrees with their agenda as homophobic, gay-rights activists are guilty of the same self-righteous judgment they deplore in the "radical religious right."

Gay-rights activists also claim they don't want special rights but equal rights. They want sexual orientation enumerated as a protected class in the law along with race and gender, for example.

Yet, the gay community is fully aware of the fact that those protected classes are subject to federal affirmative action laws and are consequently awarded special rights.

Gay-rights activists also claim that another "equal right" should include homosexual couples enjoying the same legal status as married heterosexual couples. Yet, this special goal would not only fundamentally redefine the meaning of our most basic social unit but is at present unconstitutional.

In Jones v. Hallahan, the U.S. Supreme Court said, "Marriage was a custom long before the state commenced to issue licenses for that purpose ... In all cases, marriage has always been considered as the union of a man and woman, and we have been presented with no authority to the contrary."

JOHN HART

The conference's most pronounced example of untruth was in its title, "Communicate, Educate, Celebrate: Taking Pride in Our 10 Percent."

This famous figure is based on Alfred Kinsey's 1948 study estimating that 10 percent of the male population is homosexual.

The study, whose control group consisted of mainly prison inmates, has since been thoroughly discredited.

The Alan Guttmacher Institute released a national study last year showing that only 2 percent of American men have engaged in homosexual sex, and a mere 1 percent are exclusively homosexual.

The University of Chicago's National Opinion Research Center reported that 2.8 percent of American men are exclusively homosexual. A 1991 French study said that only 1.4 percent of its respondents acknowledged gay relations in the previous four years.

Therefore, the theme of the entire conference was a lie.

The gay-rights issue is not us against Christian groups, or us against homophobics. It is us against the majority of Americans who refuse to allow the gay-rights agenda to be shoved down our throats through propaganda and lies.

John Hart is a junior in political science.

By condemning anyone who disagrees with their agenda as homophobic, gay-rights activists are guilty of the same self-righteous judgment they deplore in the "radical religious right."

State parks damaged in floods last year reopen

KIM GIFT

Collegian

With a little help from Mother Nature and the state, Kansas Wildlife and Parks has the six state parks damaged in last summer's floods open with limited services.

Earlier budget problems threatened to temporarily close four to six parks and eliminate 20 jobs, but the new budget will allow all 24 state parks to remain open, with a full staff and limited services.

"The new budget allows us to keep all of the parks open, but it only covers 20 percent of the cost of repairing the damaged parks," Chris Havel, Kansas Wildlife and Parks program specialist, said.

"The amount of time it will take to open all of the damaged parks with all services offered depends on the weather and how badly the park was damaged," he said.

Havel estimated it would take one to three years to have all the parks up and running.

Total damage to all of the parks and wildlife areas is estimated at almost $5.4 million. About half of that amount is for Glen Elder State Park in Mitchell County, which will have limited access this summer.

"In Glen Elder, we can repair the roads for access to the boat docks and the Marina, and we can open primitive camping sites," Havel said, "but the bathhouse and other structures will have to be completely rebuilt. All of the trees and grass are dead. We have to start over. These extensive repairs will take longer than a year to complete."

Havel said some state parks benefited from last summer's heavy rains because the rains replenished the low reservoirs.

The parks that had big storage reservoirs designed to hold flood waters, which included Tuttle Creek State Park, were the ones that were damaged.

Tuttle Creek should be fully operational this spring. The River Pond Area, the spillway, Fancy Creek and North Randolph should all be fully accessible, Bill Porter, Tuttle Creek unit supervisor, said.

All areas are essentially open to the public right now, Porter said. In the River Pond Area, the beachhouse is damaged, but the park service plans to have it repaired by the middle of April.

There are also some repairs to be made on the spillway, which should be done by the first part of May, he said.

Porter said the repairs to this point have cost about $20,000, but that number doesn't include some of the major repairs.

Congress calls institute racist, sexist, political

Cancer institute not recommending regular exams

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The National Cancer Institute was accused by members of Congress Tuesday of being sexist, racist and political in its abrupt decision last year to stop recommending regular mammography cancer exams for women aged 40 to 49.

"It seems wholly irresponsible of NCI to change course so dramatically at this time," said Rep. Eldolphus Towns, D-N.Y., chairman of a House subcommittee that conducted a hearing on the new NCI guidelines. He predicted the change will lead "to many unnecessary deaths from late detection of breast cancer."

Mammography is an X-ray procedure designed to detect lumps in the breast and is widely used as a screening technique for breast cancer.

Starting in 1987, the NCI recommended annual mammography exams for women older than 50 and exams every other year for women 40 to 49. In December, the agency said data supporting the value of mammography screening for the younger women were inconclusive.

Towns charged that NCI made the decision to drop the younger women from its mammography exam recommendation to save money in President Clinton's proposed national health-care reform plan.

Rep. Steven Schiff, R-N.M., said there was a suggestion that the NCI decision was "actually dollar-driven, not medically driven."

"It's absolutely frightening that we might be setting treatment standards based on medicine second and on dollars first," Schiff said.

Dr. Samuel Broder, NCI director, strongly defended the action of his agency and said the recommendation was changed after it became clear that the scientific community was evenly divided on the value of mammography exams for younger women.

"On this issue, there is a polarization of thought unlike any I've seen in 22 years in government," Broder said.

Towns said the NCI action was based on European and Canadian research studies that included very few nonwhite women. Black women in the United States die of breast cancer at a disproportionate rate.

"I fail to understand how NCI can take this unprecedented move based on a science that evaluated Swedish, Canadian and English population groups lacking the ethnic and minority makeup of the American women," Towns said in a statement opening the congressional hearing.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., the first witness at the hearing, said the NCI recommendation change "fits in with how the federal government has treated women's health issues all along the line."

"They play it very fast and loose with women's health," Schroeder said. "We are very, very tired of it. This is one of the final insults."

on the 612 Houston lot. He said the community members needed to be more involved in the planning of this project.

"There is something wrong when something gets this far, and there are this many people this upset about it," Law said.

Members of the library board, the library association and library staff were present at the meeting to show support for the expansion.

Ed Horne, president of the library board, said the board had been planning the expansion since 1989 and was very pleased with the current plans.

"We believe it is the time to improve and upgrade the library," he said.

The project would add about two mills every year to the tax levy for 10 years.

It would expand the library about 31,000 square feet, adding room for new administrative offices, a children's area, electronic work stations and restrooms.

Mayor Roger Maughmer said the historical value of the house was not an issue.

The city has already entered into a contract to purchase the land for the parking lot.

The owner, according to the contract, has the right to sell the house.

Maughmer read a letter from the owner of the house, which said the owner has already found someone willing to buy and move the house.

Stewart named top Big Eight coach for 1993

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Norm Stewart, who led third-ranked Missouri to a rare unbeaten Big Eight season just five years after conquering cancer, was unanimously selected Associated Press Big Eight coach of the year.

The announcement Tuesday of Stewart's selection by a panel of 16 media representatives marked the fifth time in 27 years at Missouri that he was honored as coach of the year.

Stewart won his eighth conference championship this season, compiling a 14-0 Big Eight season.

"I know coaches are always saying that it's the players who did everything and not the coaches. But it's never been more true in this case," Stewart said.

Stewart was named AP Big Eight coach of the year in 1987, 1983, 1982 and 1972.

Husker coach asks for inquiry into Saturday's officiating during game against Tigers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRIEFLY
Nebraska coach Danny Nee is asking for a formal review of calls made during the Huskers' 80-78 loss to the Tigers on Saturday.

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska basketball coach Danny Nee said he thinks one of the officials from Saturday's Cornhusker loss at Missouri should be benched for the Big Eight Tournament.

Nee said Monday he wants a formal review of calls made late in Nebraska's 80-78 loss.

The Husker coach wouldn't say which of the three officials he thinks should be punished, but he wants him to sit out the league tournament this week in Kansas City, Mo.

Nebraska athletic director

Bill Byrne is carrying the complaint to Big Eight Conference executives, who are meeting in Kansas City.

Nee, whose team meets Oklahoma in the tournament's first round Friday, also faxed a letter to John Erickson, Big Eight assistant commissioner and supervisor of basketball officials. Nee asked for a formal review of the officiating crew that worked Saturday's game against the Tigers.

Four decisions made by the officials in the final 59 seconds went against Nebraska, which had a three-point lead evaporate into an 80-78 loss.

Three judgments were made by official Ron Spittler, including one in which Nebraska guard Jaron Boone appeared to have been bumped over the sideline on an inbound play with no foul called.

That gave Missouri the ball with 59 seconds left.

Spittler then called an intentional foul on Eric Piatkowski to give the Tigers two free throws and an additional possession with 26.4 seconds to go.

After a double-foul call wiped out what at first was called charging against Missouri's Melvin Booker, Spittler called a foul on Nebraska's Jamar Johnson and counted a basket by Booker after it appeared the Missouri guard dribbled, then shot after the foul.

"What I'd like to see done? I'd like to see the official suspended for the Big Eight Tournament," Nee said, without naming the person.

"I just think when they study the films, they can just see (who) it is. But I don't think it can be tolerated."

Late Monday, Erickson called Nee and defended the officials.

"Now it's over," Nee said. "Now our job is to get ready to play Oklahoma."

The Cornhuskers face the Sooners at 2:20 p.m. Friday in Kemper Arena. Nebraska (17-8) has lost twice this season to Oklahoma (15-11).

Tourney season brings Vitalisms back to TV

It's March Madness time, and he's everywhere. There's a life-size cutout of him in Wal-Mart. He's written a book. His cartoon character stars in the latest ESPN commercial with Chris Farley.

It's Dicky Vee, Babe! Love him or hate him, TV viewers everywhere will have to deal with the biggest mouth in sports these next few weeks, as Dick Vitale rocks ESPN for the super slam bam jam of March Madness. It should be awesome, baby, with a capital A!

Vitale, the chrome-domed, monster-mouthed basketball commentator for ESPN, has not only invaded the airwaves but also has quickly become a cult figure to college students everywhere, packing in the crowds at basketball arenas across the country.

Just watch ESPN anytime Vitale is in the house. The students at the game flock to him and make banners to welcome him. Vitale is sometimes bigger than the game, like he was when I first met him.

Yes, I was lucky enough to experience the Dicky Vee phenomena my freshman year when he made an appearance at Northwestern University to kick off the 1991-92 basketball season.

The attendance that night was better than it was for the Michigan game, as Vitale was a one-man show. The guy never quit talking, even as he ran the length of the court with the microphone strapped to his warm-ups. Even after this exhausting display, he still made time to meet with his fans, signing autographs and posing for pictures.

Vitale even found five minutes to talk to me personally about why Rex Walters left Northwestern for KU. I've got to admit that having Dicky Vee say, well actually, yell, "You've got beeyootiful eyes, baby!" was one of the biggest thrills of my life.

However, no matter how popular he is among the college crowd, Vitale has come under fire recently from critics who say his commentary is nothing but hot air. Take TV sports critic Norman Chad, a writer for the Washington Post, who blasts Vitale for his "colorful" commentary.

In Chad's latest book, "Hold On, Honey, I'll Take You to the Hospital at Halftime," he nails Vitale for his sometimes relentless routine.

Taking some popular Vitalism's to a new level, Chad imagines how Dicky Vee would do the play-by-play for events as Custer's Last Stand.

"Down goes the General! Down goes the General! Little Bighorn is rockin'! These Indians are gonna get out of here with a W!"

While there's no question that Vitale may go a little overboard at times, he works for ESPN, not CNN. When people flip from "News Update" with Bernard Shaw to Vitale and Chris Berman on "Sports Center," they do it mainly to be entertained and to take a break from the real world.

After all, sports are supposed to be fun, no matter what Bobby Knight says or does, so it makes sense to have people like Vitale calling the games.

By pairing him up with someone like his announcing partner, Mike Patrick, who actually studied journalism, ESPN achieves a good balance in the broadcast booth.

Behind that big mouth of his also lies a big heart, as Vitale makes countless visits to hospitals to cheer sick fans. According to Sports Illustrated, Vitale takes down addresses wherever he goes, sending kids basketballs, books, hats and even autographed copies of his latest book.

So to those who are in Excedrin City after five minutes of Vitale, grab the remote and hit "mute" these next few weeks. Otherwise, enjoy the game and count how many times the Vee man says "Baby!" in a single night.

As for me, I want that life-size cutout of him from Wal-Mart to enhance my basketball viewing pleasure, baby!

Looking at competition a good way to evaluate Cats

BRIAN ANDERSON/Collegian

With the regular season finally finished, it's time to sit back and evaluate the performance of the K-State Wildcats. One of the best ways to do this is to compare the record of the Cats to the final records of the teams they played against.

K-State ranks 47th in the country in the rating percentage index, or RPI, one of the computer services used to select the 64-team field for the NCAA Tournament. These selections will be made Sunday afternoon.

Jeff Bollig, Big Eight service bureau director, said there are three factors that decide a team's RPI rating.

"It is the team's overall record, your opponents' record and your opponents' opponents' record" that set the RPI, Bollig said. "I won't know what the ratings for each team will be until after the season."

Jim O'Connell, an Associated Press college basketball writer, said K-State is one of 19 teams on the bubble for a tournament berth. The Wildcats have a good record among the bubble teams at 17-11, and the Big Eight has the nation's best non-conference record, 86-19.

O'Connell said he predicts Missouri, Oklahoma State and Kansas will likely be in the tournament, while Nebraska (17-9), Oklahoma (15-11) are on the bubble from the Big Eight. K-State is on the farthest edge of the bubble but could improve with a strong showing in the Big Eight tournament.

"No system exists that allows looking into the future with certainty," O'Connell said. "But if we couldn't venture guesses on who's in and who's not, there wouldn't be a whole lot of fun leading up to the day the bids are announced."

K-State's opponents' records are a combined 280-231, and three of the Wildcats' 12 non-conference opponents have chances to go to the NCAA Tournament.

Coppin State (23-7) won the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference regular season, and the Western Kentucky Hilltoppers (20-9) are the Sun Belt Conference regular-season champions.

Southwest Texas (26-6) received an automatic bid last weekend for winning the Southland Conference Tournament title.

K-State assistant basketball coach Brian Fish said K-State had a good non-conference schedule.

"We start making our non-conference schedule a year or two in advance," Fish said. "We knew Coppin State would be good, and Hawaii and Southwest Texas signed a couple of good junior-college players who have helped them."

"People criticize us for not having a big-name school on the schedule. But if you look at a team like Indiana, they probably play the same teams we do."

Between Oklahoma, Nebraska and

K-State, the Sooners have the best RPI ranking at No. 23, while the Cornhuskers are No. 50.

O'Connell listed 29 teams that are locks for the tournament and 19 teams from the top-10 conferences in the nation from the RPI ratings.

The Big Ten Conference has as many as seven teams going to the tournament, while the Atlantic Coast, the Southeastern and the Big Eight conferences each have six possible squads.

If the Wildcats don't get an automatic bid by capturing the Big Eight Tournament this weekend, they will have to get one of the 29 at-large berths for the NCAA Tournament. The other 35 bids go to the league champions.

FISHING

BRIEFLY
Ice fishing allows a person without a boat to fish in the middle of a lake.

Ice fishing more than suffering freezing temperatures

BRENT BROWN/Collegian

Cold weather doesn't keep Kansas fishermen away from the water.

Many lakes and reservoirs in the northern half of the state are locked in thick layers of ice, Mark Shoup, associate editor of the Kansas Wildlife and Parks magazine, said.

"Sleds have replaced bass boats," he said.

Proper equipment is the key to ice fishing, and people should always make sure they bring enough clothing, Shoup said.

Kevin Becker, an avid ice fisherman and Kansas Wildlife and Parks employee, said having the right kind of fishing rod might help one's chances for successful ice fishing.

"A light, sensitive, good-quality rod works great for sensing light strikes," Becker said.

Becker said in cold water, strikes can sometimes be hard to feel without a light rod.

Caution should be every ice fisherman's first priority, however, Mike Miller, editor of Kansas Wildlife and Parks magazine, said.

"Wait for an extended period of near-zero temperatures before going out, and then make some test holes to check the thickness and strength of the ice," he said.

The most commonly caught fish in ice fishing is a white bass, but the striped bass is another popular catch, he said.

Miller said ice fishing is gaining popularity, especially in the northern part of the state, where the weather is colder.

Comedic play deals with male-female relationships

ROBYN NASH
Collegian

A lesson about life will be taught when the Lunchbag Theatre presents "A Need for Brussel Sprouts" at 11:30 a.m. Thursday in the Purple Masque Theatre.

"A Need for Brussel Sprouts" stars Travis Cloer, senior in theater, and Renee Hochanadel, junior in theater, and is directed by Charlene Widener, graduate student in speech.

The play is about an actor and a policewoman who meet and become close, and about their struggle to define their relationship.

"It's about how hard life can be and how hard relationships can be, when you get down to it, with a little comedy thrown in," Cloer said.

The two meet when Leon, the actor, plays his stereo too loud and his neighbor Margaret, the policewoman, comes down to complain and ends up writing him a ticket.

"He tries every possible way to get out of it," Widener said.

After a while, the two begin to talk about other things.

"They start to relate to each other on a personal level. He discovers she's really a person under the nightstick and gun, and she discovers he really can care about people after you get over the actor's glamour," Widener said.

But Margaret is wary of the relationship because they both have been married a couple of times before.

"It's a strange combination because she's really cynical, and he's really high on life," Hochanadel said.

Hochanadel said the play takes its name from a scene where Margaret explains to Leon that it is too difficult for men and women to get together. There should be a third species for men and women to talk to, she says, so that there is not the pain that occurs when men and women relate.

Margaret thinks a vegetable would be a good alternative, so Leon suggests brussel sprouts.

Cloer said the play has been exciting to work on.

"It's pretty much intense rehearsals since the rehearsal time is so short, but I always enjoy rehearsing since that's what I want to do," Cloer said.

Cloer and Widener both said the play has really come together.

"The comedic parts are very funny. I think the audience is going to like them," Cloer said.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Daughter embarrassed by 'pigsty,' worries about mother's health

Dear Cassandra,

I go home every weekend to see my mom and her boyfriend of almost one year. I like Billy a lot, and my mom is the greatest person I know, but there is something that really bothers me about them.

They live in the grossest pigsty of a house I have ever seen.

I try to clean it as much as I can when I'm there because it is embarrassing to bring my boyfriend, whose mother keeps her house immaculate. I've tried and tried to tell my mom that the way she lives is unsanitary and could make her very sick. But she doesn't seem to care.

Is there any solution to this problem? I am willing to help her clean it up, but after that, I think it should be her responsibility and not mine.

Sincerely,
Not a swine

Dear Not a swine,

Your problem reminds me of a comedy skit by Bill Cosby. Cosby used to believe his mother was an authority on pigsties.

"This is the worst looking pigsty I have ever seen," Cosby's mother said.

Cosby's mother could not convince Bill that he needed to clean his room up, but she had one tool to get him to do it — punishment.

Unfortunately, you do not have this tool.

Your mother is an adult, and she is free to keep her house however she likes it, just as your boyfriend's mother has the option of keeping her house immaculate.

If the situation is truly a detriment to her health, get her a housekeeper or make lots of weekend visits.

Too bad Bill didn't have that option.

Airlift ready if needed

BRIEFLY
Air Force Secretary Sheila Widnall told the Senate Armed Services Committee that the U.S. airlift system faces a shortfall through the year 2000.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The U.S. airlift system is ready for a crisis, the Clinton administration said Tuesday, responding to criticism from its military commanders about the ability to fly soldiers and equipment into battle.

Air Force Secretary Sheila Widnall told the Senate Armed Services Committee that the transport planes needed in a war crisis are in place.

"The airlift system is a ready system in terms of mobilization," Widnall said. "I would not characterize it as being 'broken.'"

That was the word Marine Corps Gen. Joseph Hoar, chief of the United States Central Command, used last week before the same committee to describe the nation's airlift capability. Hoar said the military lacks the airlift ability to wage one large-scale foreign war, let alone two, as called for in President Clinton's defense plan.

Gen. George Joulwan, commander of U.S. forces in Europe, said at the same hearing that Hoar was "absolutely correct."

Widnall said that in peacetime, airlift appears inadequate because the military relies on reserve and national guard units, which cannot participate in military exercises without advance notice. In wartime, however, they participate fully.

But Widnall said in her written testimony that, "While our airlift capability will improve as the C-17 fleet increases in number, we will still face an overall airlift shortfall for regional conflicts through the year 2000."

All three service secretaries attended the hearing, but lawmakers focused on the Air Force. In addition to problems with the C-17 airlift plane, lawmakers questioned Widnall on problems with the F-22 fighter and reductions in the Air Force Bomber fleet.

Newly reported problems in the design of the F-22 that could compromise its ability to avoid radar detection can be solved with "slight" design changes, Widnall said.

"There's nothing fundamentally wrong with the aircraft," she said.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the committee chairman, questioned administration plans to reduce the conventional bomber fleet to 100 aircraft when the Pentagon's defense review last fall estimated that many would be needed to fight one regional war.

Widnall described the bombers as a "swing force" that could shift quickly from one military theater to another. Nunn, who said the administration should consider building more B-2 stealth bombers, was unconvinced.

"I don't see how a bomber force can swing," he said.

Widnall said the Air Force plans to rely on the B-1 bomber as the "backbone" of its bomber force. The aging fleet of B-52s is gradually being retired and the administration and Congress have agreed to build no more than 20 B-2 bombers.

SOUTH AFRICAN ELECTIONS

Mandela: ANC won't consider delay in S. Africa's elections

ANC favored to win in the country's 1st all-race elections

ASSOCIATED PRESS

THOHOYANDOU, South Africa—African National Congress supporters would rebel against the group's leaders if the ANC delayed South Africa's first all-race election or if it lost, Nelson Mandela warned Tuesday.

The ANC, the nation's leading black group, is heavily favored to win the April 26-28 election and lead the first post-apartheid government.

Dissident groups have called for a postponement of the vote to permit further negotiations and international mediation of their demands for autonomous or independent states.

Mandela told reporters Tuesday the ANC refuses to consider any delay.

"There is no possibility whatsoever of us shifting on this stance," he said. "If we did that, even our own members of the ANC would hang us."

He later told several thousand cheering students at the University of Venda they must work hard to ensure an ANC victory in the election.

"If we fail to win the election, our own people will hang us," Mandela said. "If we fail to deliver victory, they will hang each and every one of us."

Mandela also began setting parameters for the international mediation he agreed to with Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi on the Zulus' claim of a sovereign kingdom.

The ANC opposes what it says would amount to a secession by the KwaZulu homeland in the northeastern province of Natal.

Mandela said the ANC would accept only United Nations mediation. Buthelezi has said he wants constitutional experts to mediate the dispute over the powers of regional governments.

At the news conference, Mandela repeated his rejection of a whites-only homeland demanded by right-wing whites.

He said he has made his position clear in talks with leaders of the Afrikaner Volksfront, an umbrella organization of pro-apartheid whites claiming to represent the nation's 3 million Afrikaners, the Dutch-descended white settlers of South Africa.

Mandela also condemned Lucas Mangope, president of the Bophuthatswana black homeland, which has allied itself with the pro-apartheid whites and Buthelezi in seeking autonomy.

Bophuthatswana and KwaZulu are two of 10 tribal homelands created under apartheid.

The ANC plans to reincorporate Bophuthatswana and the other homelands into South Africa after the election, but Mangope has vowed to resist.

Mandela accused Mangope of refusing to allow free political activity. He called on the central government to cut funding to the homeland, which generates only 26 percent of its own revenue.

The Bophuthatswana Cabinet decided Monday not to register for the April election but said its Parliament would meet March 15 to discuss the issue.

However, the deadline for registering to participate in the vote passed Monday night, and it was not clear if parties would be allowed to register late.

The Transitional Executive Council, which is acting as a watchdog on the government until after the April election, called Tuesday on Mangope to allow campaigning in his homeland.

If he fails to comply, the council said the government should consider cutting funds to Bophuthatswana.

Unrest mushroomed across Bophuthatswana Tuesday. A series of strikes, openly supported by the ANC, have crippled the homeland, home to 2.5 million people and the Sun City golf-and-gambling resort.

Thousands of public servants in Bophuthatswana are refusing to work, in part over pay issues, in part to press Mangope to take part in April's election and to allow the homeland to return to South African jurisdiction.

Police stormed a broadcasting station Tuesday to break up strikers.

And, according to the Pretoria News newspaper, police used tear gas to break up a meeting of 2,000 striking teachers at a stadium near Mmabatho, the homeland capital, about 120 miles west of Johannesburg.

Astronauts participate in hands-on experiments

Columbia crew studies gravity during 2-week trip

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Columbia's astronauts exercised, drew blood and lounged in a vacuum sack Tuesday while scientists on the ground handled the major work.

It's a preview of life on NASA's proposed international space station, a combination of hands-on and remote-control experiments for weeks on end, dull perhaps for TV viewers but electrifying for scientists.

University of Maryland physicist Robert Gammon was excited with the results of an experiment he was conducting from NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala.

It's one of 11 primary experiments aboard Columbia, almost all of which are controlled from the ground.

Gammon was investigating properties of the element xenon, a gas used in very bright lights, by painstakingly altering the temperature of a sample by 20 millionths of a degree at a time.

All this was for an experiment hampered on the ground by the effects of gravity.

It's pure physics research with knowledge being the only immediate payoff, Gammon said.

Columbia's five astronauts took turns pedaling on a stationary cycle, doing sit-ups and pulling on stretchy bungee straps.

Exercise is part of every space flight, but it is particularly important on long trips to help prevent muscle flabbiness.

Columbia's two-week voyage, one-third complete on Tuesday, will be the second-longest shuttle trip yet if all goes as planned.

Commander John Casper and Charles "Sam" Gammon pricked their fingers for blood samples.

Gemar and pilot Andrew Allen wiggled one by one into a waist-high container that uses reduced pressure to force blood from the arms and chests into the legs.

Doctors believe this mimicking of gravity reduces the dizziness often experienced by astronauts once they return to Earth.

At the end of the workday, astronaut Pierre Thuot serenaded his crewmates by strumming a small instrument he described as "a backpacker's guitar."

"This is Pierre's round-the-world tour," Gemar said.

Activist says China changing

turned into a bloody massacre, she said.

"That was when our peaceful demonstration began to turn ugly and brutal," Ling said.

Ling said she regretted the loss of innocent lives in the massacre, but also said the attitudes responsible for the killings were part of the reason the demonstration was necessary.

"It's not right for a government to send tanks to massacre its own innocent people," she said.

The massacre could have been prevented if a leader within the government would have stood up, if the soldiers would have refused to shoot or if there had been more international support given by other world leaders, she said.

However, she said she believed China is on its way to reform.

Ling gave the time span of two to five years until China is a democratic nation instead of a communistic one.

"China is undergoing fundamental and dramatic changes," she said.

There are several reasons why changes are taking place in China, Ling said.

The Chinese citizens don't believe in communism anymore or that it is the best way of government, she said.

Also, China is moving toward a capitalistic system, and a middle class is beginning to emerge.

This means less dependence on the government by impoverished people, she said.

Chinese people have also become less afraid of the secret police who work for the communist government.

People have stopped watching and being suspicious of each other and have bonded together to work toward reforms, she said.

There are ways that the world community can bond together and bring freedom and human rights to China, too, Ling said.

"The United States government has leverage over China and can push China for more human-rights reforms," she said.

One audience member said she was honored by Ling's presence and admired her for her persistence in the movement toward democracy.

"I'm in awe of her bravery. She is a model for human-rights activists and for women everywhere," said Jeana Bolton, sophomore in speech and women's studies.

Another student said that, although he disagreed with some things in the speech, there needs to be some kind of reform in China.

"Human rights in China need to be reformed as she described, but I don't think that we should disrupt or damage economic growth either," Wenzhi Xue, research associate in pathology and microbiology, said.

Expansion discussed

is to get students to vote in favor of the April referendum.

"There will be media kits put together and distributed, promotional materials on display and an unveiling of the proposed plans," Travis Rink, education senator and senior in secondary education, said.

"Our theme for this campaign will be based on an 'It was, It is, It could be' idea and will hopefully appeal to the students," Rink said.

Students must remember that along with the proposed referendum, there is a slight increase in fees.

The student enhancement fee would be set at $25 per semester for full-time students and $12.50 per semester for part-time students for 26 years.

For students who are currently enrolled at K-State, the $25 fee would be offset by the $10 decrease in the Lafene Health Center fee, thus making the actual increase $15. New students would have the full $25 applied to their fees.

Poll shows GOP perceived as Clinton bashers

But the Republicans in Congress got low marks, too — 58 percent of those polled said the Republicans were pressing the issue just to score points against Clinton.

The telephone survey of 525 adults, conducted Monday for ABC News, has a margin of error of plus or minus 5 percent.

The GOP wish-list for Whitewater testimony amounted to a who's who of the Whitewater affair: Arkansas figures, senior White House aides, officials of the savings and loan cleanup agency and federal prosecutors.

Among them: James McDougal, former head of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan; White House Chief of Staff Mack McLarty; former White House Counsel Bernard Nussbaum; Jean Hanson, general counsel of the Treasury Department and Roger Altman, deputy treasury secretary and interim head of the Resolution Trust Corp.

The names were in a letter Republicans sent to Banking Committee Chairman Henry B. Gonzalez.

The GOP lawmakers, who have a right under House rules to call their own witnesses, wrote they are "doubtful that certain of the witnesses will voluntarily appear."

The Republicans indicated they would seek a committee vote to approve subpoenas, a request Democrats are almost certain to resist.

Gingrich disagreed with Fiske's contention that congressional hearings would pose a severe risk to his investigation.

Gingrich noted that it took six years for an independent counsel to investigate the Iran-Contra scandal. Sen. John Breaux, D-La., also appearing on NBC, maintained that congressional hearings "clearly are not necessary" in a partisan setting such as Congress.

"We don't need political hearings. We need legal hearings," he said.

The White House was threatened with paralysis, as glum aides scoured trash bins, burn bags and files for documents sought under a grand jury subpoena.

Ten administration officials, including six at the White House, were given individual subpoenas ordering them to appear in federal court Thursday regarding the briefings.

Most, if not all, have hired private attorneys.

White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said the staff was determined to get about its business despite the distractions.

Clinton, who arrived in the Oval Office unusually early this morning, went ahead with a planned health-care speech this morning.

"We're determined not to let this interfere with our other business," Myers said Tuesday.

However, White House officials under subpoena, including Communications Director Mark Gearan, were under orders not to discuss the three briefings, and they kept a low profile.

Clinton said Monday he had been unaware of two of those meetings.

He did not directly address the third meeting, but said he did find out somehow that federal regulators were confidentially investigating a failed Arkansas thrift and its ties to him.

Hillary Rodham Clinton also did not know about the meetings or the investigation until she read about them in news accounts, deputy press secretary Neel Lattimore said.

The special counsel's investigation into Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan involves the tangled Whitewater land venture, co-owned by the Clintons and Madison owner McDougal and his wife at the time. Fiske wants to know whether the White House was meddling in the inquiry by meeting with Treasury officials three times.

disadvantage of the full and associate professors now but would get the assistant professors' salaries up so they will be where they need to be in the long run," he said.

McCulloh said the fundamental problem is that by the time a person becomes a full professor, an assistant professor could be earning a higher salary.

"People's salaries aren't growing as they should over time. The concern is that people who are low on the salary scale want something to reward them equally," he said.

Dubois said professors in the past could get promoted from an assistant to an associate professor without receiving a higher salary.

"Full professors rose up through the ranks without any monetary increase, but the new faculty promoted will get the best of both worlds," Dubois said.

After the Faculty Senate voted to defeat the amendment, it continued discussion on the proposal.

Arlo Biere, professor of agricultural economics, said the proposal was counterproductive and a bad move for the University.

"We ought to be encouraging good people to stay here to strengthen our faculty. The signal is very strong to professors to 'get out of here quickly,'" he said.

"The professors who receive a strong rating year after year will receive smaller pay increases and will be easier to be bought by other universities," Biere said.

Cowgirls end Wildcats' basketball season

SALINA — K-State's women's basketball team ended its season with a 61-51 first-round loss to Oklahoma State at the Big Eight Tournament last Saturday.

The Cats were down by 18 points with 16:02 left, but they rallied behind the three-point shooting of Stacy Neal. Neal canned two three-pointers in a row from the right baseline.

Neal's last three ended a comeback by the Cats, cutting the Cowgirls' lead to three points, but that was as close as K-State could get.

"We made the shots and got back in the game," K-State coach Brian Agler said.

"Then we got within striking distance and couldn't get over the hump."

When the Cats sliced the OSU lead to three points, Cowgirl point guard Yogi York took over.

After Neal drilled her final trey, York drove to the basket and got fouled. She then stepped up to the line and was successful on both free-throw attempts.

Then York stole the spotlight again when she hit a jumper to give the Cowgirls a 54-47 lead with just about three minutes left in the game.

K-State's two leading scorers, Shanele Stires and Shawnda DeCamp, were having trouble getting on track all day, as they both scored below their averages.

Stires finished with only four points, and she fouled out early in the second half. DeCamp, on the other hand, had the shots but just wasn't connecting. Normally, DeCamp averages 19 points, but against the Cowgirls she finished with only 11.

"The shots were there," DeCamp said. "They just weren't falling for me tonight."

K-State did receive help with scoring from its bench, as Neal finished with 10 points and freshman post Andria Jones scored eight points.

Both Neal and Jones had been averaging fewer than two points per game this season, and Agler said he was pleased with their performances.

"I'm really proud of the group of people that played out there and got us back in the game," Agler said.

"It's an alignment that we don't even practice with. We had four perimeter players and a freshman post player who averages three or four minutes for us."

Jones said it was a good experience to get to play in the Big Eight Tournament.

"I felt like I was playing confident tonight," Jones said.

"At the end, I could tell that my inexperience came through."

"We got down by three points, and I made some mistakes that I shouldn't have," Jones said.

With the loss, the Cats ended their season with a 13-14 overall record and a 5-10 Big Eight Conference record.

The five conference wins are four more than the Cats had last season, when they went 1-13 and finished tied for last place in the league.

Martin keys Tigers' win in championship game

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The fate of the Missouri women's basketball season laid on the shoulders of sophomore Erika Martin as she stepped up to the line with two seconds remaining and the Tigers trailing by two points.

The pressure didn't seem to bother her. Martin coolly stepped to the line and swished both shots, sending the championship game of the Big Eight Tournament championship game into overtime with Colorado.

"No pressure at all," Martin said. "I just stepped up to the line, and I made them. However, I did realize that I had to make them. My teammates told me before I shot that I had to make them. They went in, and I knew it all the way."

In overtime, Martin continued to dominate the game as she scored four points in the extra period to lead the No. 7-seeded Tigers to a 79-71 upset victory against the No. 1-seeded Buffaloes.

Colorado was also ranked No. 2 in the nation.

"This was a special win for our seniors," Missouri coach Joann Rutherford said. "We were counted out at the beginning, but we were in all of our games throughout the regular season."

People probably had a good reason to overlook the Tigers, since they were a No. 7-seed team. They entered the tournament with only a 9-17 record, but with the win, the Tigers are heading to the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1986.

It was the lowest-seeded team in the Big Eight Tournament history to win the championship.

"We were down by eight points, and we had to play hard and come back," Rutherford said. "The girls come to practice every day, and they never quit."

The Tigers fell behind 8-0 early in the first half, and it was at the 14:11 mark before the Tigers scored on a lay-up by Nikki Smith.

Missouri then started to heat up from the field and outscored Colorado 16-4 in the next four minutes. They finally evened things out 20-20 with 5:41 left in the first half.

At that point the game became a see-saw battle, with both teams exchanging blows until Colorado came out on top 28-26 at the half.

Nikki Smith keyed the Tigers attack in the early part of the second half, and she finished the game with 18 points. Smith was also selected the tournament's Most Valuable Player. In her previous two games, she scored a combined 36 points.

"It hasn't sunk in on me yet," Smith said. "I'm happy for the whole team. I guess that I'm in a zone now. I didn't even feel like I was shooting."

Colorado coach Ceal Barry explained the loss in one sentence.

"The difference in the game was that we got out-rebounded," Barry said.

With the loss the Buffaloes' record falls to 25-4, and the Buffaloes are now looking forward to the NCAA Tournament where they are expected to receive a No. 1 seed.

"We've got to take something positive from this loss," Barry said. "It's just disheartening to know that you were up by eight points and end up losing. It will take about 48 hours for me to get over the loss."

Lang, Jones now standouts at Colorado

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

They lived in the same city together. They played at the same high school and on the same team for a season. They are even the same height, and both were highly recruited out of high school.

Now Jamillah Lang and Tiesha Jones, two former Kansas City, Kan., standouts, are playing basketball for the No. 2-ranked team in the nation — Colorado.

Lang is probably the more recognized of the pair because she recently won the Big Eight Conference Co-Player of the Year award.

The 6-foot senior all-America candidate has averaged 18 points per game this season, and she scored 32 points against Nebraska in the semifinals of the Big Eight Tournament last Saturday in Salina.

In the game against the Cornhuskers, Lang was 5-for-5 from three-point range.

Lang is also Colorado's team leader on the court. Whenever the Buffaloes need a basket, she's the one who usually gets the call.

"In high school, I wasn't the type of scorer like I am now," Lang said. "Our team had several really good players, and I only averaged about 15 points a game."

"Now I have more of a scorer's mentality."

On the other hand, Jones, a freshman, is the Buffaloes' sixth player. She is usually the first person off the bench for Coach Ceal Barry, and most of the time it is to give Lang a rest.

Throughout the season, Jones has only averaged 1.7 points, but she plays almost 10 minutes a game. Against Nebraska in the semifinal game of the Big Eight Tournament, she scored four points while playing more than 10 minutes.

SHANE KEYSER/File

Colorado's Jamillah Lang fails to block Shanele Stires' shot. Lang and her teammate, Tiesha Jones, are both from Kansas City, Kan.

Sisters travel from Mexico to run track at K-State

JARED SAVAGE
Collegian

Irma Betancourt did not think she would be running track for K-State two years ago. In fact, she wasn't even sure she would be attending college in the United States.

But after a chance encounter at the Nebraska Husker Invitational, Irma came to run at K-State and set the precedent for her sister, Elizabeth, to also attend.

The Betancourts are from Mexico City, Mexico. With Spanish being their original language, both have had to learn English upon coming to the United States. While Irma speaks nearly fluent English, Elizabeth still must mainly talk with Irma as an interpreter.

"I was running very well that year and came to run at the Husker Invitational," Irma said.

"I was planning on going to Washington to study, but one of the coaches here told one of the coaches here that I wanted to study here in the United States. They offered me a scholarship, so I came."

Elizabeth, the younger of the two, also came for the chance to study in the United States and to run for K-State.

Speaking little English, Elizabeth spent most of the time talking with her sister acting as an interpreter. "I also came because Irma was here," she said.

Both Betancourts are on full scholarships and compete in the 800- and 1,500-meter races. Irma also competes for the K-State cross country team.

One might think this would foster family competition, but their Irma (left) and Elizabeth Betancourt, pictured here at the Ward Haylett Track in Ahearn Field House, are from Mexico City. The two, who are sisters, run track for the Wildcats.

CARY CONOVER
Collegian

age differences preclude them from racing at the same time.

"She's younger than me, so we have different levels. We usually don't compete in the same races," Irma said.

"But she usually wins," Elizabeth said in reply.

Though Irma has not competed this season because of a back injury sustained in a cross country meet in Pennsylvania, both she and Elizabeth continue to train with the rest of the team. Both attribute much of their success to the coaching staff they work with.

"Terry (Drake, assistant track coach) has helped us a lot," Irma said.

"We also have a coach who is from Mexico who helps with the workouts."

"When I started, I did a little at a time and slowly increased," she said.

The combination of training, learning the language and culture of a new country and maintaining strong grades has put pressure on the Betancourt sisters.

Irma said the hardest part is when an injury occurs.

"I have to be very careful and make sure not to hurt myself anymore than I am now. The hardest part is for me to take care of myself," she said.

For Elizabeth, maintaining intensity is the most difficult part. "The workouts are usually hard, and I'm nervous all the time," she said.

"I know it's important to do well during the workouts because if not, we don't do well during the competitions," she said.

Both Irma and Elizabeth have found that besides their training, academics are also a challenge.

"I think we have to study more than other people do to keep up, especially with our English. I've quit taking English classes, but I'm in the library all the time to learn more English. We don't have a lot of time because we need to sleep for competitions and be up early," Irma said.

Elizabeth said she agreed with Irma.

Irma said she is thankful for the chance to attend K-State.

"I'm just happy to be here. Sometimes people don't realize what they have, and it's important to us to be here," Irma said, commenting on her opportunity to run for K-State.

"It's cold here, but I'm glad I'm here," Elizabeth said.

Wildcats' national ranking marks 1st in school history

CRAIG PINKERTON
Collegian

For the first time in school history, the K-State women's tennis team is ranked.

In the latest Rolex Collegiate Rankings, the Wildcat netters and New Mexico are tied for 37th with 63 votes.

This is just the second time ever that the Cats have received votes in the poll.

Receiving this recognition in the polls will be a bonus for K-State when it comes to recruiting, K-State coach Steve Bietau said.

"It's certainly a plus for recruiting," he said.

"I don't think it's the way it should be, but a lot of prospects judge by where you are in that group."

Texas remained at its No. 1 ranking with 300 votes.

Six other Big Eight teams are listed among the top 50 in the poll. Kansas leads the way at ninth, jumping up six spots after being listed at the 15th position in the previous poll.

Oklahoma State picked up 82 votes to be ranked 35th, Oklahoma is 48th with 20 votes and Colorado is 49th with 19 votes.

Iowa State also received votes, but was not ranked in the top 50.

With seven teams receiving votes, 1994 is going to be one of the toughest years in a long time in the Big Eight.

"We've got a good conference," Bietau said.

"Kansas is clearly the favorite and is doing a great job this year."

"This is one of the best years that our conference has had in a long time," he said.

Karina Kuregian dropped from her previous ranking of No. 20 down to No. 23 in the singles poll. The cause of her drop was not due to losing any matches though.

Players who were listed behind her in the previous poll had picked up victories against higher rated opponents, allowing them to move ahead of Kuregian.

Texas' Lucie Ludvigova is the top-ranked singles player in the nation.

K-State's doubles team of Kuregian and Masha Meidell also slipped in their ranking, but not because of any losses.

The two are tied for 30th with Florida State's Audra Brannon and Elke Juul.

The previous poll had Kuregian and Meidell ranked 26th.

Meidell wasn't disappointed at the drop though they played well.

"In this case it's not like we played good and went down or played bad and went up, it's just that we didn't play together much," Meidell said.

Michelle Anderson and Angela

Lettiere of Georgia jumped into the No. 1 position from their previous No. 7 ranking.

The rankings are administered by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association and are accumulated several times during the spring season. There is also a poll before and after the fall season.

The ITA National Ranking Committee, which is made up of five collegiate coaches from around the nation, does the voting.

Coach Dana Altman takes off his glasses in disbelief as the final moments of the K-State-Iowa State basketball game elapse. The Cats lost to the Cyclones 85-60.

Altman looks for shooters to get on track

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State's formula for success hasn't changed one bit: If Askia Jones and Anthony Beane are on track, the Wildcats usually win.

But if those two variables in that game-winning formula are out of sync, so are the Cats.

To see this demonstrated, Coach Dana Altman had to look no further than K-State's first meeting with Iowa State in Bramlage Coliseum, which the Cats won 76-70. Jones scored 25 points, and Beane had eight points and four assists.

"Anthony and Askia shot well against them," Altman said, whose Cats drew a No. 6 seed for the Big Eight Tournament. "Look at the games that we've won — both of those guys have shot well and played well offensively."

"When they don't, we usually get beat because we don't have any firepower to overcome them."

K-State, having lost seven of its past eight conference games, will play No. 3-seeded Kansas in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament at 8:20 p.m. Friday at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo.

The Cats' equation for winning games held true in their first meeting with the Jayhawks. K-State shocked then-No. 1 Kansas 68-64 at Allen Field House. Jones scored 26 points, while Beane added 18 to the win.

However, the formula works the other way as well.

Case example No. 1: Missouri downs K-State 63-43 in Columbia; Beane and Jones combine for just 23 points.

Case example No. 2: K-State loses to Oklahoma State 71-61 in Bramlage Coliseum; Beane and Jones combine for only 21 points.

The Cats have beaten the Jayhawks in two of their past three meetings. In K-State's drive to the Big Eight Tournament title game last year, the Cats knocked off the Jayhawks 74-67 in the semifinals.

Altman said both teams should be inspired considering the tradition of the intrastate rivalry.

"Any time we play Kansas, we hope there is some emotion," he said.

"I'm sure Kansas will get excited since we beat them last year. They are on a three-game winning streak and want to continue that going into their NCAA bid."

Kansas coach Roy Williams said another Wildcat the Hawks will have to contain is senior Deryl Cunningham, who averages 10.8 points and 10.4 rebounds a game in conference play.

"For size, he is the best rebounder in the league," Williams said. "You need a plan to stop him. He gets a lot of second shots."

Friday's contest will mark the 11th meeting between K-State and Kansas in the tournament, with the Cats capturing seven of those games.

"We've got to re-group here quick and try to get a little run going in the tournament," Altman said. "We did it last year, and hopefully, this team will find a way to do the same thing."

MISSOURI

MISSOURI LOOKS TO COMPLETE SPOTLESS SEASON

The Missouri Tigers' 1993-94 campaign can be summed up in one word. Perfect.

Missouri does not have an individual in the top four of any statistical category though. The only statistical category the Tigers lead is winning percentage.

So, why can't anyone in the conference beat them?

"Missouri can do anything with their depth," Colorado assistant coach Scott Sanderson said. "One guy can come off the bench to replace another and not lose anything."

Five of Missouri's players have averaged 9.9 points or more in conference games this season.

Melvin Booker leads the Tigers in scoring with 17.8 points per game.

Nine players have seen action in 12 of the Tigers' 14

Big Eight Conference games this season.

The Tigers' undefeated season was the first in the Big Eight since Kansas conquered the conference in 1971.

Stewart said being undefeated never seemed a burden to his team.

"It was more of a motivator to me," Stewart said. "The closer we got, the more of a motivator it was."

COWBOYS TRY TO ESCAPE CYCLONES FOR 3RD TIME

The No. 2-seeded Oklahoma State Cowboys move into the first round of the Big Eight Tournament against the No. 7-seeded Iowa State Cyclones at 6:10 p.m. Friday.

Statistically, it looks as if Oklahoma State, with its tremendous size advantage, should win easily.

The size advantage in the form of Bryant Reeves was obvious.

"In the two games against them, we've shut out Hoiberg and Michalik, but somebody for them has stepped up," Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton said.

Oklahoma State leads the conference in three-point field-goal percentage, hitting 41.4 percent of its attempts from beyond the arc.

Thompson and Rutherford both rank in the top four in individual three-point percentage. Thompson leads the conference, shooting 47.5 percent.

"We played pretty well in conference games, just losing four games," Sutton said. "All four of those were games we were in all the way. I think our team has played very well."

The Cowboys lost all four of their conference games by an average of four points.

Listed below is the bracket for the 1994 men's Big Eight Tournament, which is March 11-13 at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo. The K-State-Kansas game is the most-played series in the tournament, with the Wildcats winning seven out of 10.

SOONERS LOOK TO END LATE-SEASON SKID AGAINST BLAZING HUSKERS

Oklahoma and Nebraska are two teams heading in two entirely different directions.

The Sooners, who drew a No. 5 seed in the Big Eight Conference Tournament, have lost four of their past five league games, while the Cornhuskers, a No. 4 seed, have captured three of their past four contests.

Both teams will meet in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament at 2:20 p.m. Friday at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo.

Oklahoma buckled at the end of the regular season, losing four of five games. The Sooners' only win during that span was a 92-84 victory against No. 8-seeded Colorado.

The Sooners and the Cornhuskers have tangled four times in the post-season tournament, each winning two games.

Oklahoma is 15-11 overall and finished 6-8 in the conference. The Sooners closed the regular season with an 84-81 loss to Kansas at home.

WIN AGAINST CATS MORALE BOOSTER

In a pre-season interview earlier this year, Iowa State coach Johnny Orr could barely contain his excitement about his Cyclone squad and the rest of the Big Eight.

"Whooo boy! We're going to have a good team, and they're going to play like hell, boy!"

Although the Cyclones' 4-10 conference record wasn't what Orr was expecting, he's still upbeat about his team's chances going into this weekend's Big Eight tournament.

"I think my boys have high confidence right now after beating K-State," Orr said. "I thought we just did an excellent job — it was a real morale booster. If we do well at the tournament, we can get an NIT (National Invitational Tournament) bid. Who knows, we could win the Big Eight Tournament. Wouldn't that be something?"

It sure would be something, after the tough breaks Iowa State has dealt with all year.

TIGERS DON'T INTIMIDATE BUFFALOES

Even though Colorado has lost its past seven games, assistant coach Scott Sanderson said the Buffaloes — the No. 8 seed with a 2-12 league record — do not fear the Missouri Tigers.

"We did the best job of anybody against Missouri," Sanderson said of his team, which lost to the Tigers by eight points in Boulder, Colo., and 12 points at Columbia, Mo.

"I think the kids have confidence of going against them."

"This is a new season, and anything can happen in the tournament."

CLASSIC SPORTS RIVALRY HIGHLIGHTS 1ST ROUND MATCH-UP FOR TOURNEY

With the Big Dance just around the corner, the Kansas Jayhawks are looking for a solid performance in the Big Eight Tournament to help boost their play during the NCAA Tournament.

The Jayhawks will enter the Big Eight Tournament 24-6 overall and 9-5 in the conference.

The Hawks are seeded No. 3 in the tourney behind Missouri and Oklahoma State.

In the first round, KU will meet intrastate rival K-State at 8:20 p.m. Friday. During the regular season, KU and K-State split their two-game series. K-State pulled off an upset win, 68-64, in Lawrence.

"I think in the first game, they wanted it much more than we did," Williams said. "Over there in the first half, they wanted it more again. In the second half, we were more aggressive. We used our size advantage and won."

KU returned the favor, defeating the Wildcats in Manhattan 65-56.

K-State coach Dana Altman is looking to avenge the loss to the Hawks and to try and start some momentum for his own team.

Last year, the Cats upset the Jayhawks 74-67 in the second round of the Big Eight Tournament.

HUSKERS HOPE TO KEEP HOT STREAK ALIVE AND MAKE A NCAA BERTH

Nebraska is one of three Big Eight Conference schools that has never won the Big Eight Tournament. It is also one of the hottest teams in the conference going into Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., this weekend.

"We're playing hard right now," Coach Danny Nee said. "We won the three games at home and lost by one at Missouri."

Nebraska — 17-9 overall, 7-7 and the No. 4 seed for the tournament — seems assured of making the NCAA Tournament, but Nee said he isn't telling that to his players.

"I feel good about our team and our season," Nee said. "I feel we're playing at a high level, but I can't let my players think that. I tell them we've got to play our way in."

Piatkowski is one of the reasons for the Cornhuskers' late-season surge.

Piatkowski helped Nebraska's offense rank second in scoring per league game with 87 points and first in free-throw percentage at 78 percent.

"He may not be the biggest player or the most talented, but he is a winner and gets it done to give the team a win," Nee said.

Diamond Cats start strong early in season

The K-State baseball team had a 3-2 record in the first seven days of March, losing twice to nationally ranked Wichita State and sweeping Northeastern Illinois in three games.

The Wildcats (8-4) lost to the Shockers 14-2 on March 1 in Wichita and 7-3 last Wednesday in Manhattan.

K-State coach Mike Clark said he liked the team's improvement.

The Cats bounced back from the blowout in Wichita to play the Wednesday contest at a level that also impressed Shocker coach Gene Stephenson.

"I think that Kansas State made some really great plays tonight," he said. "They made three or four very good catches in the outfield, and the infielders made a couple of really good plays, and I actually think they hit the ball better tonight than we did (the night before)."

In the Wichita game K-State committed six errors on the frozen, artificial turf of Tyler Field.

Kevin Wicker, making his first appearance as a starting pitcher for the Cats, lasted just one inning as K-State tallied four errors, allowing seven Shocker runs to score on just two hits.

Wichita State starter Shane Dennis didn't fare much better, lasting just 2 1/3 innings while walking seven K-State batters. The Cats couldn't take advantage of Dennis' lackluster pitching performance, however, squeezing out just one run in the second inning with the bases loaded and one out.

A solid middle relief effort from the Cats' David Johnson held the Shockers scoreless until the fifth, when a three-run Richie Taylor homer capped a six-run scoring drive that put the Shockers up 13-1.

Wednesday night's game in Manhattan saw the Cats keep it close throughout the evening, as freshman right-hander Eric Yanz pitched five strong innings, allowing four runs on six hits. But the Cats' bats couldn't touch Shocker starter Mike Drumright, who lasted six innings and allowed just one run on three hits.

K-State remained within three runs until the seventh, when senior Rob Merriman (2-1) started the inning with a walk and consecutive singles that led to three Shocker runs, putting Wichita State up 7-1.

The Wildcats ended a three-game losing skid by sweeping three games from Northeastern Illinois last weekend at Frank Myers Field.

The Wildcats beat the Golden Eagles (1-4) 10-4 on Sunday and defeated the Eagles 11-6 in the first game and 14-2 in the second game on Saturday.

Clark said he was pleased with the sweep, but his team should have done better in the final game.

"Mentally, we weren't ready," Clark said. "Maybe it was the way we handled them the day before. We have to come ready to play. Our main concern is us."

"These were games we should have won and did, but we didn't do well fundamentally," he said. "We can't do those things and expect to win."

The Cats committed four errors as starting pitcher Merriman (3-1) struggled through five innings with six walks and gave up three earned runs, but he was able to get the win.

"Rob has been inconsistent, but he is a better pitcher than he is showing," Clark said.

Jon Albrecht (3-0) went 4 2/3 innings for the win in the first game, and Jon Oiseth (2-1) gave up the only hit to Northeastern Illinois in the second game.

K-State returns to action against Wichita State at 7 p.m. Wednesday at Frank Myers Field. The Cats will then travel to College Station, Texas, for the Texas A&M Classic on Friday.

Rob Merriman throws to his catcher during a game at home last weekend. The Cats take on Wichita State today at 7 p.m.

Teammates in last season together

Jones said her role during her freshman season at Colorado is different than what she had in high school.

"In high school, my job was to pass the ball off to my teammates," Jones said.

"Now all coach tells me to do is to shoot the ball. I've been working on my shot a lot, and I have been looking to shoot it."

At Washington High School, the two were all-state selections in their senior years and led the Wildcats to four Kansas City Kansas League Championships.

During Jones' freshman season at Washington, she played on the same team as Lang. That season, the Wildcats traveled all the way to the state finals, where they lost by five points.

Jones said she looked up to Lang during her freshman season in high school.

"She's the same now as she was in high school," Jones said. "Get it in her hands, and she's going to shoot."

Jones said she remembers a story her high-school coach, Wayne Lathrop, would tell her after she would get frustrated.

"I used to get upset when the ball wouldn't go in back in high school," Jones said. "Coach Lathrop then told me a story about Jamillah when she was a sophomore."

"He said when Jamillah was a sophomore, she didn't even know how to hold the ball, and that she didn't even know what a basketball was."

"That helped me realize back in high school, if she's that good now, then I can be just as good, Jones said."

Lang said she has tried to be a role model for Jones at Colorado and has tried to give her guidance to make her an even better player in the future.

"I just have tried to do the right things," Lang said.

"We especially need Tiesha to be an offensive threat and hopefully watching some of the things that I do will help her put the ball in the hole."

Jones also said Lang is helping her get accustomed to Division I basketball.

"She helps me look to score," Jones said.

"She gets on me all the time in practice when I have to guard her or even when we are on the same team. She's always on me saying, 'Tiesha, look to score.' It's helped me a lot."

Even though both Lang and Jones played together in high school, they don't show any favoritism over their teammates.

"My teammates are my friends and my sisters," Lang said.

"You can't single any one person over another — they're my teammates."

Former Wildcat pitcher dies of tumor at age 21

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

A former K-State student and Wildcat baseball player died Tuesday as a result of a brain tumor.

James Matson, 21, died at his home in Salina. Matson was a sophomore at K-State last year and a member of the K-State baseball team.

The funeral will be today at the First Covenant Church in Salina. The burial will be at Gypsum Hill Cemetery, Salina.

Matson was a fun-loving person, Mike Clark, K-State baseball coach, said.

"He was very well liked. If something was going on, he was usually in the middle of it. He had a world of potential as a left-handed pitcher. Baseball was very important to him."

Doctors discovered the brain tumor last May, and Matson underwent radical surgery, Clark said.

He was doing fairly well until a recent relapse, he said.

"He really was regressing last season. One of the gutsiest performances I'll never forget was when he threw a full bullpen (pitching practice) two days before they found out about the tumor," Clark said.

"His concentration was tremendous. He was busting his rear end trying to get through that practice."

"With that much pressure in his head, it was almost a superhuman feat."

"The doctor said there was no way anyone could pitch in his condition, but he did," Clark said. "I'll never forget that determination."

One of Matson's teammates, Kevin McMullin, junior in business management, said Matson was a good friend.

"He was one of a kind. He had a great personality," McMullin said.

Another teammate, Jay Kopriva, senior in social sciences, met Matson playing legion ball before coming to K-State. The two decided to be roommates.

Kopriva said no one moment could describe his friendship with Matson.

"It was just everything — the little things, like watching 'Cheers' every night or playing ball," Kopriva said.

Senate rejects Washburn bill

BRIEFLY

A bill that would have brought Washburn University into the Kansas Board of Regents system was voted down Wednesday.

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

TOPEKA — The Kansas Senate voted 13-23 Wednesday not to advance a bill that would have brought Washburn University in Topeka into the Kansas Board of Regents system in 1997.

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, was among the opponents of the bill.

She said the state needs to be sure it can fund the six state schools it has now before it brings Washburn into the system.

Oleen said the Washburn issue could not be canceled next year, but funding for the Partnership for Excellence could.

She proposed an amendment that would have delayed Washburn's entrance into the system until 2000, three years after the Partnership for Excellence was completed. The amendment failed.

The PFE was proposed by the regents to increase tuition and state funding in order to increase faculty salaries.

The partnership is a part of a bill allocating money to the six regents schools. The Washburn bill was a separate piece of legislation, but Gov. Joan Finney has threatened to veto the PFE if the Washburn bill does not pass.

Sen. Alicia Salisbury, R-Topeka, said the non-traditional students who are educated at Washburn stay in Kansas to work.

She said the number of students going to college in Kansas is expected to increase by 2002, and the state could use another university.

Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, said Washburn's physical facilities are in excellent condition, and the state should bring Washburn into the system now.

Bogina is the chairman of the Senate Ways and Means committee that favorably recommended the Washburn bill last week and the regents budget yesterday.

Sen. Paul Feleciano, D-Wichita, said the state should Lafene fee may decrease by $10 next year

TAWNYA ERNST

Treatment for your coughs, aches and pains may get a little cheaper next year.

The Student Senate passed a bill a few weeks ago that would decrease the student health-care fee by $10, from $80 to $70 per semester for full-time students. Part-time and summer students would see no change.

However, a decrease in the fee in fall could mean a large increase a few years from now.

If the decrease is approved by the Kansas Board of Regents, Lannie Zweimiller, student health director, said Lafene would have to approach Student Senate for a $9 increase in fees in 1996. Subsequent increases in the following years would be necessary to maintain the center's reserves.

If the fee is dropped now, it would have to be raised to as much as $90 in fall 1997, according to a Lafene financial forecast.

If the fee were to remain at $80, Lafene most likely wouldn't ask Student Senate for an increase until the year 2000, Zweimiller said.

Paul Bridges, arts and sciences senator on the finance committee, said he didn't like burdening future students with possible increases, but he wanted to help current students.

"I don't feel good about future students ending up paying more money," Bridges said. "But we'd be saving students money that are here now. Basically, the compromise of a $10 drop is a short-term fix for the next two years."

Originally, the student health-care committee had proposed a $20 decrease.

However, Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said a $20 decrease wasn't economically feasible if 25 percent of the operating costs were to remain in the reserves.

A drop in fees would mean more funds from Lafene's reserve account would be used for its operating budget.

Twenty-five percent of the operating costs in reserves is the minimum needed to maintain the level of health-care services, Zweimiller said.

More than $2.1 million is in the reserves, which is 60 percent of the $3.97 million operating costs for fiscal year 1994, Zweimiller said.

Not enough revenue comes in during the summer to pay for operating costs, Zweimiller said, and the reserve funds are used to compensate for that lack of revenue.

"The more we use that surplus, and we're using it quicker than we had planned, the more likely we'll have to approach Senate for an increase sooner than expected," Zweimiller said.

The reserves are used for medicine, sup-

LAFENE FEE MAY DECREASE

Student Senate recently passed a bill that would decrease the student health-care fee $10, dropping it to $70 per semester for full-time students. If the Kansas Board of Regents passes the fee decrease now, the fee would have to be increased later so that Lafene Health Center could maintain its cash reserves.

► 9TH BODY FOUND UNDER BASEMENT OF HOUSE

GLOUCESTER, England — Police found a ninth body Wednesday buried in the house of a man charged with murdering three women, including his 16-year-old daughter.

A police representative said the remains were found buried under the basement of the shabby three-story row house. Four other bodies have been found buried under the basement.

Frederick West, who owns the house, has been charged with killing three women whose remains were found buried in the garden of the house.

The 52-year-old builder was arrested Feb. 27 and charged with murdering his 16-year-old daughter, Heather, who was last seen alive in 1987; an 18-year-old pregnant lodger, Shirley Robinson; and an unidentified woman in her 20s.

Another body was found buried under the ground-floor bathroom. The sex of the ninth body was not known, but it is believed that the other remains were women. Police have not said how the victims died.

British press reports said most of the victims had been strangled.

Police representative Hilary Allison said identifying the remains would take some time.

► MENENDEZ PLEADS FOR COMPENSATION

LOS ANGELES — A judge Wednesday refused to pay Erik Menendez's private attorney to represent him in his second murder trial despite a plea from the defendant to allow him a lawyer he trusts.

"I am begging this court to compensate my attorney to represent me," Erik, 23, said as he stood before Superior Court Judge Cecil Mills. "There is no way I'd want to go to trial without her representation."

Mills ruled, however, that attorney Leslie Abramson had a contract to defend Erik and was bound by it even if it was "a bad business deal."

Erik and brother Lyle, 26, face retrial on charges of murdering their parents in a flurry of shotgun blasts at their Beverly Hills mansion on Aug. 20, 1989. The first prosecution ended in mistrials after the defense argued that the shootings were in self-defense after years of abuse.

► PICKUP TRUCK SLAMS INTO DITCH

BARSTOW, Calif. — A pickup truck jammed with 20 people went over an embankment and slammed into a 10-foot-deep drainage ditch Wednesday, killing 12 and injuring eight others, authorities said.

"There were bodies all over the place within a pretty small area," said Robert Silver, a motorist who said he was among the first on the scene.

The pickup drifted off Interstate 15 in the Mojave Desert south of Barstow and continued about 190 feet over rocky sand and dirt before slamming into the open ditch, California Highway Patrol officer Angie Britton, said.

► MOURNERS GATHER TO PAY TRIBUTE TO CANDY

LOS ANGELES — Huge floral displays with banners reading "Uncle," "True Friend" and "Gentleman John" ringed a church Wednesday where mourners bid farewell to comic actor John Candy.

Candy, the lovable, overweight star of "Uncle Buck," "Planes, Trains & Automobiles" and "Cool Runnings," died of a heart attack last week while filming a movie in Mexico. He was 43.

"It's terrible, just terrible," said Dan Aykroyd, who delivered a five-minute eulogy for his friend at a morning service at St. Martin of Tours Roman Catholic church in suburban Brentwood.

Among the 200 mourners at the church were Tom Hanks, Chevy Chase, Wayne Gretzky, Bill Murray, Rhea Perlman, Rick Moranis, Jim Belushi, Mariel Hemingway, Ed Harris and Los Angeles Kings owner Bruce McNall. Candy owned the Toronto Argonauts football team with McNall and Gretzky.

► REPORT FINDS ANTI-GAY VIOLENCE ON DECLINE

WASHINGTON — Anti-homosexual incidents declined in six major cities last year but "anti-gay violence still pervades the country."

That conclusion was reached by Martin Hira, who surveyed reports of such incidents and wrote a summary for the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force.

"Whether reports of anti-gay incidents are up or down, anti-gay violence remains an epidemic that is out of control," Hira said in releasing the report Tuesday.

The number of anti-gay incidents reported to gay and lesbian service agencies in Boston, Chicago, Denver, Minneapolis-St. Paul, New York City and San Francisco declined 14 percent, from 2,103 in 1992 to 1,813 last year, the report found.

Meanwhile, the number of reported anti-gay offenses — such as harassment and vandalism — rose 5 percent, from 3,316 to 3,484, in those cities, the report said. That includes 300 apparently orchestrated harassing phone calls over one weekend to a group in Minneapolis-St. Paul. That campaign was counted as 300 offenses but just one incident.

The number of offenses per incident, excluding the Minnesota phone campaign, rose 11 percent, from 1.6 to 1.8.

Many other incidents, including numerous anti-gay murders, occurred outside of the six cities and were not counted in the statistics but were cited separately as evidence of widespread anti-gay violence.

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax-bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

Benefits now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

CIA vet, wife fight seizure of assets

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Accused CIA turncoat Aldrich Ames and his wife raised a string of legal objections to government seizure of $2.2 million allegedly stashed overseas, even citing an obligation to support their 5-year-old son.

In documents filed Wednesday in U.S. District Court in suburban Alexandria, Va., lawyers for the couple said, "The government's interest in preserving available property cannot outweigh the Ames' interest in providing necessary living expenses for their son, Paul."

But, prosecutors told the court Wednesday the Ames child is well taken care of by family members and does not need support from the couple. They said all the money came from spying for the Soviets and then the Russians.

Ames, a 31-year CIA veteran, and his wife, Rosario, have been denied bail.

U.S. District Judge Claude Hilton is to hear arguments today on the government's motion to renew an expiring order barring the couple from using money in 11 bank and brokerage accounts here and abroad.

In an unusual move, prosecutors also have asked Hilton to order the couple to take $2,245,311 from foreign accounts and hand it over to the court. Prosecutors said that is the minimum amount of espionage proceeds that the defendants are charged with having earned by spying for Moscow since 1985. They said the total probably exceeds $2.5 million.

The government wants to seize control of the money now so it can be forfeited if the Ames are convicted.

The defense opposed the bid to repatriate assets. It also asked that the restraining order be denied or, at least, "this court should modify any restraining order to allow for the expenditure of reasonable living expenses for the support of the child," Ames' lawyer, Plato Cacheris, wrote.

Rosario Ames' attorney, William Cummings, filed a paper endorsing Cacheris' arguments. "The interests were the same so there was no point in filing two documents with the same arguments," Cummings said in an interview.

"It is likely that this case will take, at minimum, several months to resolve," Cacheris wrote. "The restraint of these funds will impose a financial hardship on the Ames' son who is already enduring the nightmare of having both of his parents incarcerated, potentially for the rest of their lives."

Neighbors argue feedlot industry endangers health

TOPEKA — Lawmakers could make a deadly mistake if they pass a bill that would ease feedlot regulations, opponents warned members of the House Agriculture Committee on Wednesday.

Angry rural Kansans who live near feedlots argued the industry threatens their health and needs more regulation, not less.

The bill would end the state regulation of feedlots with fewer than 1,000 head of slaughter and feeder cattle and 2,500 hogs and leave them only under federal regulation.

Opponents said the waste from feedlots of only 300 cattle can be deadly.

The bill really means deregulation of the cattle and swine industries, they added.

Phyllis Twietmeyer of Cheney said she and her husband have lived next to a feedlot for six years. At times, she said, "The stench was nauseating, and the air became so foul that it burned our eyes. And we could not even enjoy or endure being outside the house or have any window open."

When the Twietmeyers complained to KDHE officials, they ordered the feedlot owner to drain his waste runoff lagoon.

"He did drain the lagoon, right down the county road in front of our home, for two weeks," she said.

Twietmeyer wept as she told committee members: "This man has threatened our lives. My husband was born on that property 66 years ago. I'm sorry, there's just something wrong with the system."

Joe Cooper, the Twietmeyers' neighbor, complained of worsening conditions at the nearby feedlot.

"Mountains of manure appeared, and dead cattle were left to rot in the sun," he said. "The sick pen was located north of the Twietmeyers' pond. At times, dead cattle were left in this pen. The conditions were deplorable. Discarded medication containers and syringes were left lying on the ground."

Other rural Kansans who live near feedlots complained of contaminated well water. Susan Vaughn of Morris County tried to pass out samples of her polluted well water before the committee's chairman, Rep. Gene Shore, R-Johnson.

Vaughn and her neighbors near Dunlap in Morris County have complained the ranch is being used as a cattle feeding operation and is polluting groundwater and area streams, including the Neosho River, where there is runoff.

The ranch is owned by C.C. Hutchinson, a Council Grove and Topeka businessman, who was fined $3,750 last April by the Department of Health and Environment.

The ranch has no state permit to operate a feedlot, and Hutchinson was fined last year when KDHE investigators found about 2,000 head of cattle penned up on the ranch.

Health and Environment Secretary Robert C. Harder said after the hearing he will make preliminary conclusions within a week on what to do about the ranch.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Hey, wait a minute, Mr. Postman

Counting the 1-cent stamps is probably one of the stressors that drives postal workers to declare open season on fellow human beings.

First tuition, then bike permits, now postage stamps.

The U.S. Post Office has to raise the price of stamps again to help combat its $1.7 billion deficit. But only a little bit.

Not the little bit from 29 cents to 30 cents, of course. That would be just a drop in the big piggy bank.

The post office proposes instead a 32-cent first-class stamp, an increase of 3 cents, and a 21-cent stamp for postcards, an increase of a meager 2 cents.

That's still below the inflation rate, however, and the agency doesn't want to impose a bigger increase on consumers because, as Postmaster General Marvin Runyon said, "We're sensitive to the impact of our price increases on customers."

If he and members of the Postal Board were really sensitive to customers, they would just put us out of our misery and raise the price of first-class stamps to 35 cents.

They say they don't want to scare off customers, but people are using the postal system less anyway. Faxes and other electronic means of communication are steadily replacing written correspondence.

What is ridiculous is that officials would prefer to annoy customers who use stamp vending machines by taking their 35 cents and presenting them with a 32-cent stamp and a consolation prize, three 1-cent stamps.

What can you do with 1-cent stamps besides line kitchen shelves with them?

Yes, some thrifty people actually save them and will no doubt enjoy affixing all 32 stamps to their Visa bills.

Counting them is probably one of the stressors that drives postal workers to declare open season on fellow human beings.

Eliminating the printing of these worthless stamps would no doubt help the post office's staggering deficit.

Racism not a tradition for sports world; use of American-Indian names insulting Kudos (I just like that word) to the Atlanta Braves organization. It recently decided not to fly the Georgia state flag over Fulton County Stadium.

For those of you who don't pay attention to these things, the Georgia state flag displays the Confederate symbol on its face.

It is seen as reminiscent of slavery and, therefore, offensive to many in the African-American community. Some of you may remember the brouhaha raised at the Super Bowl when the decision was made to fly the flag.

The Braves have taken a good first step toward removing the symbols of racism from their team. The logical next step is changing their mascot.

I should preface this with a disclaimer. While I am an American Indian, I do not speak for all Indian people on this issue. Though many share my position, I am not a spokesperson for the Native community on campus or anywhere else. I do, however, feel the need to state that the use of American Indians as mascots is blatantly and inexcusably racist.

When I speak up on this issue, I constantly hear that I am being oversensitive. "Mascots are a show of respect. It proves that the Indians were seen as great warriors. I would be proud of that."

But people who feel that stereotyping and mocking a culture is a show of respect have fewer brain cells than coleslaw.

Indian mascots miss the mark on several counts. First, they are not an accurate depiction of Native culture. While there were certainly great warriors among the indigenous nations of North America, there were also great artists, politicians and spiritualists.

But you never see Braves fans showing up for games with the Constitution in hand chanting "We, the People ... We, the People."

What you do see everywhere from the Braves to the Chiefs to the Manhattan High Indians is a mass of people with painted faces wearing plastic feathers beating ridiculous drums and singing that damn war song they made up.

In this respect, Indian mascots are alone in the sports world. You never see people dressed up like the Pope at Saints games, performing the "Rosary Chop" and chanting "Hail Mary ... Hail Mary."

The problem is that people have been programmed to believe mascots are not a serious issue — that there are more important things to worry about.

While several important issues face the Native American community, the embarrassing mockery of our traditions is certainly one.

I would like to propose an analogy. Atlanta's main league rival is the Birmingham Zulus, a professional baseball team that moved from Green Bay days after the Braves left Milwaukee. Fans often show up for Zulus games in blackface, and some bring spears and shields. The cheerleaders lead the fans in "traditional" war dances.

The outcry would be deafening. David Duke would be the only season ticket holder and probably the only fan.

When black leaders asked for a change in the mascot, team owners would be crucified in the press if they failed to comply.

But American Indians don't get the same consideration. Teams use "tradition" to defend a practice that is blatantly racist, just as tradition was used to defend segregated schools. Names like Redskins (an equivalent to nigger) are commonplace and rarely questioned by any other than "sensitive" Indians.

Some cite the cost of changing a mascot as a reason to keep their tradition going. Assuming that saving money is a good excuse for racism (which it isn't), I would refer them to Marquette University, whose Warriors formerly bore an Indian symbol. School officials decided to change the mascot and have been able to do it at a low cost.

The Chop must go. And the Braves and Chiefs and Illini and Indians and Utes and Seminoles and all the others must go. If there is to be any semblance of justice in the world of sports, the use of offensive mascots must go.

Just understand the true definition of liberal, then it can be defeated

The world is a crazy place. It makes no sense to me. It especially makes no sense to me when people refuse to see the light of day.

Just when you think civilization might actually be getting somewhere, we do something like go to Vietnam or bring back bellbottoms or put a "liberal" in the White House.

Haven't we learned? The dictionary has five definitions for liberal.

I've met very few "liberals" who meet any of them.

1. Generous in amount or in giving. There is a certain truth to this concerning modern liberals, I suppose, but why are liberals never generous with their own money? Successful liberal politicians are living a lot better than the average taxpayer, so they're not being generous with their own money. Do you know what you call someone who is generous with someone else's money? A thief.

2. Approximate, loose. This definition seems to apply to recipe ingredients or something, and to apply it to liberals could turn ugly and underhanded very quickly. We'll just move on to the next one.

3. Of, or relating to the cultivation of general knowledge and the humanities. The more general knowledge a voting public accumulates, the less it votes liberal. So, I guess this definition doesn't fit either.

4. Broad-minded; tolerant. I'm not sure about this one. Why is it liberals are broad-minded and conservatives are narrow-minded strictly by definition? They are equally stubborn. If liberals were open-minded, they'd accept every idea, including the non-liberal kind. They wouldn't be liberal anymore. This is the flaw in the concept of blind open-mindedness.

Liberals are hardly tolerant. They only want everyone to think they are. They'll tolerate anything but intolerant conservatives. There's a certain hypocrisy in saying, "Intolerance will not be tolerated." This brings us to the kicker, the real liberal definition in the dictionary and my favorite example of how you can say absolutely nothing in fewer than 25 words.

5. Favoring civil liberties, democratic reforms and the use of public resources to promote social progress.

Four things need clarification here: what a civil liberty is, in reality as opposed to in a liberal's mind; what a democratic reform is; what a public resource is; and what is meant by social progress.

Civil liberties are not televisions and welfare checks and guaranteed jobs. When the American Civil Liberties Union rushed to the defense of Sirhan Sirhan, it would have liked for everyone to believe it was a civil liberty to assassinate a presidential candidate. Doesn't make it so.

Liberals in America live in a democratic society, the most democratic one in existence. It may be common practice to label those people fighting dictatorships liberals, but they bear little resemblance to Al Gore or Teddy Kennedy.

Public resources don't exist. That is a false concept. The public is just a bunch of people who pay taxes. Public resources consist of tax money. What else could it be? There is no big pot of money sitting in every own square belonging to 'the public,' although that sounds like something Karl Marx would have really liked.

Social progress. Progress — in whose eyes? By whose standards? Who is to define what is progress?

Why, liberals, of course. But liberals cannot prevail, not if rational people everywhere return to their tolerance argument. They have to tolerate us. "No one idea is better than any other." "What's right for one person might not be for another." "There is no right and no wrong." Sound familiar — sound liberal? They are hanging themselves.

As soon as liberals spit out one of the above phrases, they are powerless to pass judgment. People who stand for what they believe in, who have the conviction and confidence to believe they are right and to say so, are never powerless. And that is how liberalism can be defeated.

► HOMOPHOBIA

Gays everywhere — even if you don't think the numbers add up

Dear Editor,

I am writing in reference to John Hart's recent column on us self-righteous gay-rights activists. I am the conference organizer who stated that subtle discrimination can be even worse than the loud and hate-filled messages and activities of Fred Phelps.

I did not say that if people do not conform to our ideas, they are not OK. In fact, I do not care that the entire world will never accept the fact that homosexuality, heterosexuality and bisexuality are morally neutral.

I do care, however, that many homophobic people feel it's their moral duty to not hire qualified applicants or offer available housing or membership or anything else on the basis of sexuality. This is wrong, wrong, wrong. And when we are discriminated against and made to feel subhuman, we need to get together to affirm ourselves, to remind ourselves that we are not wrong. Thus, the conference.

I am sorry John Hart thinks that only a tiny few are homosexual. I hate to tell you this, John, but we are everywhere. We teach your classes, we serve you food, we check out your library books, we offer you career assistance, and we may some day even hire you. I hope you are not too surprised, given your obvious distaste for homosexuality, that people do not disclose their homosexuality to you.

Our conference succeeded in empowering and informing and communicating. I have had the opportunity to see once-frightened gay people hold their heads higher. I have witnessed, with a shocked and yet admiring eye, a very sincere Student Governing Association search itself and finally grant the Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society money for this past conference.

These events have helped to restore my faith in people and in hope. Men and women are now talking and thinking and rethinking. In this way, our conference has been a huge success.

► CALCULATE THIS: 10-PERCENT PRIDE

Hey, Travis, you're a wonderful mathematician, but who cares?

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the remarks of Travis Keller. I would like to comment on Mr. Keller's narrow-mindedness of "gay pride" and on his wonderful calculations of "10 percent."

This conference was the first of many to take place at K-State. Myself and others were really pleased with the turnout, even those from KU, Emporia, Topeka, Wichita and other communities.

I feel we need not rely on, nor be concerned with, a stated number of 130 attendees but that the conference was beneficial to those who share common interests.

I was educated quite definitely by this conference in many aspects. We all seem to learn more and more each day, whether it be from conferences like this one or from knowing that Mr. Keller has been adequately educated on the stated use of his calculator.

I would like to thank Mr. Keller for pointing this out to all the uninformed and to also invite him to our conference next year. We can all stand to learn from one another.

► GAYS AGAIN

Dinner dresses, ruby red slippers not my forte, but I'm still gay

Dear Editor,

I am a proud member of our local homosexual community. I am also a veteran of the U.S. Army (where I spent four wonderful years).

Throughout my enlistment, I understood the implications of being gay in the military. During those years, I functioned as everything from a simple squad member, to squad leader as well as a section fire direction control leader.

Interestingly enough, looking back, even though I tried to hide my orientation, the guys would always sort things out. It's not as if I had dinner dresses in my wall locker or ruby red slippers under my bunk. Instead, it always wound up being little things added up together like the times I would go away for the weekend by myself and be vague and ambiguous about what I had done.

The entire time I remembered how important it was to keep my professional and social lives separated.

As far as numbers go (Travis); I was amazed that you went through all that trouble only to ascertain that there weren't 1,791 homosexuals running around the K-State Union quoting old Bette Davis movie lines: "But you did, Blanche."

Instead, you could have simply attended the conference, which, by the way, wasn't only intended for us "fags" but was for the entire community to come together and learn a little more about the people you live beside, work with and are perhaps related to.

Delay means losing chance at pageant

TED ELLET

Miss Manhattan-K-State won't be walking down the runway at this year's Miss Kansas pageant.

The Miss Manhattan-K-State Pageant, slated for March 12, has been rescheduled for Oct. 1.

The change in pageant dates means no one will be crowned in time to represent Manhattan at the state pageant this June.

"We haven't heard anything negative about it. Everyone's been really receptive to the change," Susie

Stanfield, co-executive director of the Miss Manhattan-K-State Pageant, said.

Stanfield said the decision to cancel the pageant was made about two weeks ago.

"The Miss Manhattan-K-State Pageant is now under new directorship. There are two co-directors this year.

"We wanted to give a fresh face to the pageant and put our own stamp on it, which is one of the reasons why we moved it to October."

Stanfield said that it was unreasonable to ask sponsors to support two pageants in the same year, so the March pageant was canceled.

The 1992 Miss Manhattan-K-State, Lesley Moss, junior in journalism and mass communications, said she believes the change in dates will be beneficial to everyone.

"A lot of things go into planning a pageant like Miss Manhattan-K-State."

"It was a good decision to wait, so the new directors can get grounded and put on a good pageant in October," Moss said.

SOUTH AFRICAN ELECTIONS

De Klerk balks at action against Bophuthatswanans

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MESSINA, South Africa — President F.W. de Klerk balked on Wednesday at using force against the government of Bophuthatswana, where pro-election protesters were reported injured in clashes with the black homeland's police.

Bophuthatswana President Lucas Mangope opposes the April election, the first in South Africa to include the black majority.

Police in the homeland reportedly used live ammunition and tear gas to disperse protesters Wednesday. At least 32 people were injured in clashes, most in the economic center of Mafeking, 150 miles northwest of Johannesburg, the independent South African Press Association reported. The homeland government said a police officer was killed.

Bophuthatswana government radio and TV stations were closed Wednesday after striking workers were fired. Students at the University of Bophuthatswana staged a campus occupation, setting up trash-bin barricades at the gates.

The African National Congress, which is expected to sweep the April 26-28 vote, plans to reincor-porate Bophuthatswana and the other nine homelands created as part of an apartheid plan to separate blacks from whites.

The ANC openly supports strikes that have crippled the homeland, home to 2.5 million people and the Sun City golf-and-gambling resort. The strikes began over pay issues, but have become political.

ANC leader Nelson Mandela has made it clear he believes force may have to be used to rein in Mangope. But de Klerk said if military intervention were to be considered at all, it would be focused on safeguarding South African citizens.

Campaigning Wednesday, de Klerk added, "We think Bophuthatswana must become reincorporated. The whole situation has fundamentally changed."

Only South Africa recognizes Bophuthatswana's independence, and it supplies most of the homeland's budget. That could be a powerful weapon against Mangope.

Mangope had been allied with the conservative black government of another homeland, KwaZulu, and with pro-apartheid whites, all of whom say they cannot live under an ANC government without guarantees of strong central powers.

Representatives of the right-wing Freedom Front met with electoral officials Wednesday to secure more time to submit a list of candidates.

Retired army Gen. Constand Viljoen had been vilified by other right-wing leaders for registering the party, but Wednesday's meeting shows a right-wing faction thinks participating in the election is the best way to press demands for an independent white territory.

KwaZulu's Inkatha Freedom Party also appeared ready to take part in the vote, though it also failed to meet Wednesday's deadline for registering candidates. The deadline was likely to be extended, as both the government and the ANC say they want as many factions as possible to take part.

On the campaign trail Wednesday, police fired rubber bullets to disperse demonstrators protesting an appearance by de Klerk. Reporters were unable to determine if anyone was hurt.

DODGERS 8, ROYALS 5

Raul Mondesi hit a two-run triple to spark a six-run seventh inning, and the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Kansas City Royals 8-5 Wednesday. Los Angeles, which had lost three straight, was led by Mike Piazza with two hits, including his third home run of the spring, and two RBIs. Terry Shumpert led the Royals with three hits, including a pair of doubles.

Scott Poepard celebrates with his teammates after he scored a run against the Shockers. The Wildcats lost to the Shockers 6-5 after leading by three runs early in the game.

Cats within 1 of upsetting Shocks, lose 6-5

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

They came close. Coach Mike Clark's K-State Wildcats came very close to upsetting the nationally ranked Wichita State Shockers in this year's final games between the two teams. But close doesn't cut it in baseball as the Cats picked up two more losses to the Shockers, going 0-4 against Wichita State on the year. The Cats dropped the first one on the road in Wichita Tuesday night, 4-2, and fell 6-5 in Manhattan's Wednesday contest. K-State, now 8-6 on the year, was limited to just two runs as the Shocker's Mike Drumright went six solid innings Tuesday night to pick up his second win of the season. In his first starting appearance of the year, the Cats' Adam Novak pitched just three innings to get the loss. Offensively for K-State, it was senior third baseman Jay Kopriva leading the way. Kopriva went 3-for-4 in Tuesday's contest, boosting his batting average to .405. So far this season,

Kopriva has 17 hits in 42 at bats, including one homer, three doubles and 10 RBIs. During Wednesday night's action at Frank Myers Field, the Cats out-hit Wichita State, 9-8, and led throughout much of the game. Kevin Wicker, making just his second appearance on the mound for the Cats, pitched three perfect innings as K-State took a 3-0 lead into the fourth. The Shocker bats finally came to life in the top of the fourth, scoring three runs off three hits against K-State freshman Shane

Hicks to tie the game. K-State regained the lead in the bottom of the inning when a Tim Decker double scored Adam Green from third, putting the score at 4-3. Wichita State made it 5-4 in the fifth, but once again, K-State answered in the bottom half of the inning to tie it up at 5-5. It stayed that way until the eighth, when a Casey Davis homer with two outs put the Shocks up for good, 6-5. The Cats couldn't touch all-American Jaime Bluma, who fanned five K-State batters in two innings of relief. With the win, Wichita State improves to 6-3, while K-State will try to add some W's in this weekend's Aggie Continental Classic in College Station, Texas. While the Cats' recent outings against the Shocks were an improvement over last week, Clark said his squad should get used to playing at a higher level. "We're going to be seeing teams like Wichita State all through the season, so we'd better get used to playing this way and at this caliber."

FOOTBALL

Matsakis takes position as assistant coach

THEY JOHNSON
Collegian

The K-State football team has filled several assistant coaching positions that became vacant at the end of the 1993 season. Manny Matsakis is the new tight ends/special teams coordinator for the team. Matsakis comes to K-State from Hofstra University, located in Hempstead, N.Y. Matsakis recently accepted the K-State position after leaving the offensive coordinator position of Hofstra's football team. Hofstra is an independent, Division-I AA school. He worked at Hofstra for three years. The tight ends/special teams position became vacant when Nick Quartaro accepted the position of football coach at Fordham University. Quartaro had been at K-State for five years before moving to Fordham.

Mangino moves from recruiting to offensive line

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Mark Mangino, formerly a full-time recruiting coordinator for the K-State football team, has been moved to offensive line/running game coach for the Wildcats' 1994 season. The alteration stems from the NCAA's ruling last year eliminating the full-time recruiting coordinator position for all universities. John Latina, the former offensive-line coach who accepted a similar position at Clemson on Dec. 7, caused the vacancy at K-State. Mangino said a mixture of the NCAA ruling and Latina's departure led to his arrival as the new offensive-line coach. "Basically, there are two reasons why this happened," Mangino said. "No. 1 is because of the new legislature that eliminated the recruiting coordinator as a full-time position. No. 2 is because John Latina, who was the offensive-line coach, left for Clemson."

having a recruiting coordinator. "Essentially, I now have two full-time positions," Mangino said. "I'm busier now than I have been in my whole life. Personally, I'm excited to get back on the field. But as far as the team is concerned, there is not a person devoted to recruiting." The ruling set by CEOs of the NCAA is one that will hinder college football, Mangino said. "The rule is foolish," he said. "They're asking these coaches to do things they normally wouldn't have to do. It's ridiculous." "My personal opinion is, I think it hurts college football. Now we don't have a recruiting coordinator out there to set the ground work for new players, and it gives the other coaches more responsibilities. It just adds more to their day-to-day duties." Mangino said the ruling may be revoked in a few years, when the ramifications are experienced. "I wouldn't be surprised if they reinstated the position in the next couple of years," he said. "It's an important position. We'll find out in the next couple of years."

Mangino, who will enter his fourth year at K-State this fall, spent just one year as the recruiting coordinator. The new position for Mangino is a familiar one. He spent three seasons as the offensive coordinator at Geneva College in Pennsylvania. "I have coached the offense a good portion of my career," said Mangino, who has been coaching for 12 years. "Let's put it this way — I was in the right place at the right time." But Mangino's responsibilities will not lie solely on coaching the offensive line. He and the other coaches will have to inherit the duties left by the void of not eliminated? "I've been told it was cost-cutting measures enforced by the CEOs or presidents." Dismissing the recruiting coordinator position from college football cut the number of assistants at K-State from 10 to nine. "It's just loading up the other coaches with responsibilities," Mangino said. "It's going to be tough on coaching staffs. I'm not going to be able to put 100 percent into recruiting."

► BIG EIGHT SIGNS TV DEAL

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Big Eight, bolstered by the addition of the top Southwest Conference schools, on Wednesday signed five-year contracts totaling $100 million in what is believed to be the most lucrative college football TV deal any conference has received. Beginning in 1996, the contracts with ABC-TV and Liberty Sports, a family of regional cable entities under the Prime Network banner, will pay a total of $20 million annually. "From what we're able to tell, this is the largest football-only TV deal a conference has ever negotiated," Kansas athletic director Bob Frederick said.

Booker, Thames, Vaughn win awards

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Missouri Tigers, who made a clean sweep of 14 conference games this season, came within a whisker of sweeping the Associated Press Big Eight coach and player awards. Senior guard Melvin Booker, the heart of Coach Norm Stewart's eighth conference championship team, was a winner today for AP Big Eight player of the year.

His rapidly developing freshman teammate, Kelly Thames, was an easy winner — 11-1/2 to 4-1/2 points — over Kansas' Jacques Vaughn as freshman of the year. But in a crowded field for newcomer of the year, Vaughn collected five votes from a 16-member panel of sports writers and sportscasters while Thames, teammate Paul O'Liney and Oklahoma's John Ontjes each got three. The other two votes went to Oklahoma junior Calvin Curry. Curry, Ontjes and O'Liney are community-college transfers. "I'm very happy for Melvin and for Kelly both," said Stewart, who guided the Tigers to a 24-2 overall mark and the first 14-0 conference record since 1970-71. Booker drew 13 votes, while two went to Bryant Reeves, Oklahoma State's 7-0 junior center and last year's AP player of the year. Eric Piatkowski of Nebraska received the other vote.

Search for Hagemeyer replacement narrowed to just 5 or 6 finalists

JEREMY CRABTREE

The search for the new K-State volleyball coach has been narrowed from 50 applicants to five or six finalists. K-State senior associate athletic director Jim Epps said the decision will be made within the next couple of weeks. "The selection committee sifted through about 50 applications for the past couple of weeks," Epps said. "Then they came up with five or six finalists that we feel good about, and we will invite them to visit the campus next week." The position became available after Coach Patti Hagemeyer resigned Jan. 19 after three seasons at K-State. In her three-year stint with the Cats, Hagemeyer failed to have a winning season, and her team won only one Big Eight match. This year, K-State finished with a 7-25 record and a 16-match losing streak. Athletic Director Max Urlick said the type of coach K-State wants has to fit a certain mold. "The most important thing in hiring anyone in the athletic department is finding someone who is very emotionally stable," Urlick said. "They must have excellent communication skills. There are also six or seven other things that I look for. "I think that their technical knowledge is important, and their values and ethical conduct must reflect their own behavior. Their experience and background are important, along with organizational skills." Urlick said the most important thing the new coach must have is chemistry. "I call it the chemistry of the x-factor," Urlick said. "You can't really put your finger on what it is. If they have it, then it just seems like it would be the best way to go for everyone. You can just tell when someone has it." The candidates will begin to visit the K-State campus within the next two weeks. The candidates will have a chance to explore the campus environment and be interviewed for the final time. "When they are here on campus, we'll see how they perform and come across," Urlick said. "We'll then get the cross-section of opinions and see how they can direct our volleyball program in the future. "Then we will make the offer and get on with it." A problem K-State might face with the loss of Hagemeyer is whether the players she recruited will still want to go to K-State. However, Urlick said this shouldn't be a problem for the new coach. "Most of the recruiting was already done before Patti left," Urlick said. "We had a commitment from one young lady, and I talked with her family. "They were prepared to fulfill their commitment to Kansas State, and I told them that we would keep our word and indicated that the scholarship would be offered."

Ferrigno to pose at bodybuilding championship in McCain

The sixth annual Big Eight bodybuilding championship will take place Saturday in McCain Auditorium. The guest poser for this year's competition will be former Mr. Universe and Mr. Olympia Lou Ferrigno. Ferrigno is perhaps best known for his role in "The Incredible Hulk," the TV series that ran during the late 1970s and early '80s. The competition, which features bodybuilders from many different states and universities, has increased in popularity since its inception. Keith Corder, promoter for the event, said. "I'm expecting about 60 competitors for this year. That's pretty good when you consider there were about 20 to 30 when I first started doing this." To compete, the bodybuilders must pay an entry fee to the event and also join the National Physique Committee, the sanctioning body for most bodybuilding contests in the United States. "We have a number of categories. They include men's novice, men's open, men's masters (men older than 35 years old), women's open, women's masters (women older than 30 years old) and mixed pairs. "There's a prejudging event on the morning of the competition, which reduces each category to five people. Then, that evening there's the final judging, and each competitor gets to go through a full routine set to music," Corder said. Prejudging starts at 10 a.m., and the finals begin at 7 p.m. There are five judges for the event, each part of the NPC. They will judge each person based on muscularity, symmetry, definition and presentation. "Some of the proceeds from this year's competition will go to a new scholarship being established by the Kinesiology Student Association," said Corder, who said there are no kinesiology scholarships available. "Since the KSA is helping to produce the contest, we thought that it would be good for the students." Tickets for the competition are available at Moffett's Gym, Ironworks and Great Earth Vitamins, all of Kansas City, Mo.; Popeye's in Topeka; and Nautilus, Hardbodies and McCain Auditorium in Manhattan. Prices are $16 in advance and $20 at the door.

Report says US economy expanded

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economy is growing nicely with few signs of inflation, the Federal Reserve said Wednesday in an upbeat report that could ease concern about a new rise in interest rates.

"The economy expanded moderately in January and February despite unusually severe weather in the East and Midwest," the Federal Reserve said in a survey of regional activity.

Even the weather impact was not all gloomy, the report said. Ski resorts and other winter getaways got a boost.

Analysts said the jitters of financial markets should be calmed by the findings.

"The report said we have the best of both worlds — fairly solid economic growth with not much inflationary pressure," said Sung Won Sohn, chief economist for Norwest Corp. in Minneapolis.

"I think inflation is nowhere to be found — not in the tan book and not outside of it."

The periodic Federal Reserve report is known in some quarters as the tan book and in others as the beige book.

The softbound document often is published with plain white covers.

Sohn said the good news could head off another rise in interest rates at the March 22 meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee, the central bank's monetary policy-setting panel.

Analysts noted that Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan described a Feb. 4 boost as a pre-emptive strike against inflation they said could be in the offing.

Cynthia Latta, of DRI-McGraw-Hill in Lexington, Mass., said the report's analysis of inflationary pressure means the Fed governors are pleased with past performance.

"The only problem is the weather, and fiscal and monetary policy can't do a thing about that," she said.

The economy boomed in the final three months of 1993, expanding at a 7.5 percent rate.

Fearing inflation could be ahead, the Federal Reserve last month raised the federal funds rate — what banks charge each other for short-term loans — to 3.25 percent from 3 percent.

Many analysts expect it to rise to 4 percent this year, accompanied by a similar bump in the discount rate that the Fed charges for short-term loans to banks and other financial institutions.

The February interest rate boost touched off a nearly 100-point drop in the Dow Jones industrial average, left financial markets skittish and prompted congressional criticism of the Fed.

The latest Fed survey was concluded by Feb. 28 and was conducted by the board's 12 regional banks.

Harding's attorneys succeed in delaying trial

BRIEFLY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tonya Harding's hearing before the U.S. Figure Skating Association has been postponed.

PORTLAND, Ore. — A federal judge Wednesday postponed a hearing that could lead to Tonya Harding's banishment from figure skating, saying she did not have a fair chance to prepare her case.

At Harding's request, U.S. District Judge Owen Panner blocked a U.S. Figure Skating Association panel from conducting the hearing Thursday.

"The nature of the case makes it clear, without any doubt, that the plaintiff cannot present any kind of defense at a hearing tomorrow," he said. "I believe the association wants her to have a fair hearing, but I do not believe they understand the legal complications of the case."

Harding was on the ice at a local shopping mall rink when the ruling was issued and didn't comment immediately.

Harding wants to compete in the world championships March 22 in Chiba, Japan. The association wants a hearing on her role in the Jan. 6 clubbing of Nancy Kerrigan.

Harding has been implicated in the attack, in which her ex-husband, Jeff Gillooly, pleaded guilty to racketeering.

The judge asked attorneys to meet with him in his chambers in an effort to reach an agreement.

This is the second time Harding's legal team has succeeded in averting action against her. Her $25 million lawsuit against the U.S. Olympic Committee resulted in a settlement that allowed her to skate in the Winter Games.

"Really, Tonya does not like to come to court to do these things," her attorney Bob Weaver said. "But, there are issues of fairness here, and I think the court recognized them."

Panner said the evidence being relied upon by the figure skating panel includes hearsay, news clippings, an anonymous letter, forensic analysis and the statements of 12 witnesses. Because there are no rules of evidence in the association's proceeding, no attorney could adequately defend Harding, he said.

Panner said he had no doubt the panel would have found Harding to have violated the association's code of ethics.

That could result in stripping her national championship, banning her from this month's world championships and ousting her from the association, he said. Loss of her membership would effectively end her amateur skating career.

While Harding was impassive in court Tuesday, Kerrigan broke down in a national TV interview on "Dateline NBC," complaining tearfully about "living in a fishbowl."

"It's not fair that they put me up on that pedestal. I didn't want to be there, and I don't understand why the same people that put me there want to take me down so fast," the 24-year-old silver medalist from Stoneham, Mass., said.

Kerrigan was criticized for questioning the judges' decision to award the gold medal to Ukraine's Oksana Baiul and for several overheard gaffes.

At Disney World last week, with Mickey Mouse, a microphone picked up Kerrigan saying peevishly that it was the corniest thing she'd ever done.

At the Feb. 25 medal ceremonies, Kerrigan became impatient waiting for Baiul and was overheard saying, "Oh, come on. So she's going to get out here and cry again. What's the difference?"

Kerrigan said the comments were taken out of context.

"I'm an athlete," she said. "I'm not perfect, I'm not a Disney character. I'm a person."

Pope expected to visit UN, US in October

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — Pope John Paul II is expected to mark 1994's Year of the Family with a speech before the United Nations in October, the Denver Post reported Wednesday. The Vatican said the trip is likely but not confirmed.

Nenad Vasic, an aide in the U.N.'s Social Development-Human Rights offices, told the newspaper Tuesday that the trip is being arranged through the United Nations.

In a telephone interview today, Vasic said he believed the pope was planning to attend the U.N. gathering, but he did not know it for a fact.

"The date is not set as of yet, but he should be coming," Vasic said.

The Post said the papal trip to New York was confirmed by a secretary in the office of Archbishop Agostino Cacciavillan, the papal nuncio to the United States.

The woman requested anonymity and offered no specific dates, the newspaper said.

A receptionist in Cacciavillan's office who wouldn't give her name said Wednesday that the archbishop had no information and did not want to comment.

Henry Sokalski, coordinator of the U.N.'s International Year of the Family, told the Associated Press by telephone from his Vienna, Austria, office, said he was not aware of any plans for the pope to visit the U.N.

U.N. representative Joe Sills in New York said it was too early to know who will be coming for a fall conference on the family in New York or the General Assembly session starting in September.

Last month, the Vatican said it was looking into a possible visit by the pope to U.N. headquarters in October but said it was up to the pope to make the final decision.

The trip, which may also include stops in Newark, N.J., and Baltimore, would be the pope's second to the United States in 14 months.

Last August, the pope was in Denver for a weeklong celebration of World Youth Day.

The event drew 186,000 youths from around the world.

NUTRITION

Nutrition labeling enlightens consumers about food

LORI DAVIS

Collegian

If you have eaten your favorite food lately, you may have noticed something different. While the taste probably remains the same, the outside package may contain a new nutrition label.

New nutrition labels have been gradually appearing on food products during the past year.

The labels, a result of the Nutrition Labeling and Education Act of 1990, will become legally required in May.

By law, packaged foods will be required to have the new nutrition label; while nutritional information for fruits, vegetables, seafood and meat will be voluntary.

Previous labels, created 20 years ago, were based on daily allowances to prevent vitamin and mineral deficiencies, Karen Penner, Cooperative Extension Service specialist, said.

The change in labels, she said, is due to today's concern of over-consumption.

"It's a way of giving you an overview of what you eat," Penner said. "For some people, it will be real enlightening."

"It does make you aware. I would see that it would be useful to gain personal assessment." The new labels are designed with percentages of nutrients per serving based on a reference diet of 2,000 calories.

People can add those percentages of all the foods they eat to get an idea of their total dietary intake, she said.

Penner said there are several other changes.

The labels have been given a new look and new terms. The new label is named "Nutrition Facts," and the percentages are called "daily values."

The design of the label is uniform on food packages. Smaller packages of products, such as gum, have an abbreviated label, she said.

Standardized serving sizes are new additions to the labels.

"Sometimes, manufacturers used a very small serving size," Penner said.

By listing the smaller size, manufacturers hoped to make their products look healthier than they might have actually been, she said.

The mandatory listing of different types of fat, cholesterol, sodium, carbohydrates and fiber was another change, Penner said.

Previous labels listed more vitamins and minerals. The new labels are only required to list vitamins A, C, calcium and iron, Penner said.

Along with the new labels, guidelines for health and nutritional claims were created.

In the past, claims of less fat, low cholesterol and fewer calories were not always accurate, she said.

Products now have to meet certain criteria before manufacturers can put the claims on their labels.

K-State is helping with the nutrition labeling for Kansas food products.

Fadi Aramouni, Extension specialist, and Tami Clymer, Extension assistant, assist Kansas food producers in figuring the nutritional content of their products.

Clymer determines nutritional content for foods with the aid of a computer program.

"There is just about every type of ingredient known to man listed in the computer," she said.

Companies send recipes, preparation directions and contents to her, which are kept secret.

The information is then used by the company to print a final copy of the information on the product label, she said.

Aramouni and Clymer also make suggestions on what ingredients to alter if the company wants its product to fit a specific health claim.

"The service we provide to these companies is free of charge," Clymer said. Last year, about 120 companies sought assistance.

Food labels are being redesigned to clear up consumer confusion.

Although voluntary, the programs for raw produce and raw meat, fish, and poultry carry strong incentives for retailers to participate. The law states that if voluntary compliance is insufficient, nutrition information for such raw foods will become mandatory.

KEY CHANGES:

1. Nutrition labeling for almost all foods.
2. Percent of Daily Values can help consumers see how food fits into an overall daily diet.
3. Uniform terms, such as "light," "low-fat," and "high-fiber," to ensure that such terms mean the same for any product.
4. Claims about the relationship between a nutrient and a disease, such as fat and cancer.
5. Standardized serving sizes.

Conference to focus on cultural studies

AMY ZIEGLER

Collegian

A conference that will explore childhood and its relationship to culture will start today in the Union.

The third-annual cultural-studies symposium, "Childhood, Market and State," will feature 60 academic scholars and graduate students from the United States, Australia and England.

The speakers will give 15-minute presentations based on their research on topics such as the role of toys, racism, cartoons, clothing and films in the development of a child in American culture.

Don Hedrick, professor of English and director of cultural studies, said the speakers will give K-State the opportunity to see what today's scholars are doing.

"There will be something for everybody," Hedrick said. "We even have a speech on Beavis and Butt-head."

The three-day event was designed and organized by the cultural studies committee in the English department to create a forum for discussion.

"Cultural studies is a new field, and the symposium will put KSU on the map as a center of cultural studies," Naomi Wood, assistant professor of English, said. "We designed it to create discussion and dialogue and make K-State as the place where this happens."

Wood said the cultural studies committee selected the focus on childhood because it had an interest in how childhoods are constructed.

"Different cultures produce different kinds of children," Wood

said.

"The conference will examine how our culture produces children and criticize how it is being done."

Each year, the committee selects a creative writer and an academic scholar to speak at the conference.

Bruce Brooks, a noted children's author, will read from his works today and give a lecture Friday.

"He writes young-adult fiction and sports writing and questions the simplistic notion of what truth is and how it relates to the culture," Wood said.

Another speaker at the symposium, who is co-sponsored by the University's Humanities Lecture Series, is James Kincaid, a University of Southern California English professor.

Kincaid's lecture, "Manufacturing Erotic Children," on Friday, will be based on his research concerning people who are sexually attracted to children.

Girl switched at birth returns to biological parents

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEBRING, Fla. — Kimberly Mays, the girl who was switched at birth, moved in with her biological parents, the same couple she once persuaded a court to ban from her life.

She tearfully pleaded with a judge last year to allow her to stay with the only man she has known as her father, Robert Mays. The judge severed ties with her biological parents, Ernest and Regina Twigg.

But Tuesday, Kimberly left a Sarasota YMCA youth shelter for troubled teens and went with the Twiggs to their Sebring home, The Tampa Tribune reported. She had gone to the shelter last week for help with what her lawyer called typical adolescent problems.

"I know we're all disappointed," Mays' father, Robert Mays Sr., told The Associated Press Wednesday. "I don't know for sure what's going on, and that's why I can't say too much."

Mays' wife, Ruth, earlier told WNNZ of Orlando that Kimberly was moving in with the Twiggs with the permission of the younger Mays. Robert Sr. said he was reluctant to discuss such details because he didn't know what was going to happen next.

Kimberly, 15, is expected to enroll at Sebring High School, the newspaper quoted sources close to the Twiggs as saying. Amy Church, assistant principal at Sebring High, said Wednesday that school officials had no knowledge of such plans.

The baby switch came to light in 1988 when blood tests on the girl the Twiggs had raised as their own, Arlena, showed she wasn't their daughter. After Arlena died, the Twiggs tracked down Kimberly and determined she was their biological daughter. They spent the next five years battling for custody and visitation rights.

George Russ, the attorney who represented Kimberly, would not confirm if Kimberly was with the Twiggs on Tuesday night.

Judge Stephen Dakan, who allowed Kimberly to sever ties to the Twiggs, said Tuesday he had no knowledge of the situation.

In his ruling last August, Dakan affirmed that Robert Mays was Kimberly's legal father and said the Twiggs had no right to visit her. He sidestepped Kimberly's request for a "divorce" from the Twiggs, saying it was moot in light of his other rulings.

Russ said that when the teenager received permission from Mays to enter the shelter, her problems had nothing to do with the Twiggs or the court case.

Kimberly "is having a difficult time. Kimberly is having some personal problems of her own that have nothing to do with the Twiggs and have nothing to do with her

STUDENTS ELECTED TO SERVE STUDENTS

The April elections held by KSU Student Government will include six positions to the K-State Union Governing Board. Four of these positions are one-year terms and two are for two-year terms.

You should consider candidacy for one of these positions if you have talent and a few hours available each month to contribute to bettering the K-State Union operation.

The K-State Union Governing Board (UGB) is an organization of ten students, three faculty members, and one alumni appointee (usually a student). The purpose of UGB is to serve as the general governing and policy-making body of the K-State Union. The Board works with the K-State Union staff to help the K-State Union best serve the Kansas State University student and University community. Meetings are held 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. on the first Thursday of each month.

Filing information is available in the Office of Student Activities and Services or in the Union Director's Office.

An informational meeting is scheduled for Tuesday, March 15, 1994 at 7:00 p.m. in Union Room 203.

Label reading a must for patients

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — After watching two young patients with milk allergies react to dill pickle flavored potato chips, a doctor warns it's sometimes the hidden ingredients that get you.

Within 10 minutes of snacking on the chips, a 2-year-old girl developed facial swelling and hives; a 9-year-old boy developed those symptoms, plus an itchy, swollen throat.

The snack packages didn't list milk or milk products as ingredients, so Dr. Wade T.A. Watson took a closer look at what goes into "dill pickle seasonings" and "spices."

After inquiring into the ingredients in at least two manufacturers' products, he learned that one brand contained whey, while another contained lactose and casein. All three are milk products.

"We spend a lot of time educating our patients to read labels. In this case, the ingredients were not listed," Watson said. "Reactions can occur when patients are being conscientious. All packaging should list all foods."

Both children, who are Canadian, became sick after eating Old Dutch chips. Old Dutch Foods Inc. of Roseville, Minn., said its American product contains a complete ingredient list, including whey and lactose, to comply with U.S. labeling requirements. But in Canada, the laws are less stringent, and the product is labeled more vaguely.

Steve Aanenson, whose family owns Old Dutch Foods Inc., said he'd be happy to offer a more detailed ingredient list. But he said the problem was that the spice manufacturers fear competition and disclose to his company just enough to stay within the law.

"It's a food company's worst nightmare to have a problem, whether it's an allergic reaction or something else. But for the most part, that's out of our control, because we don't make those flavors ourselves," he said.

The Canadian company says it will modify its labels to exceed the requirements of Canadian food and drug laws and try to include ingredients known to set off allergies.

"We're making a change because we feel it's important that if people have those allergies, they be informed of the ingredients in the product," said Emily Smith, a purchasing manager for the company.

Watson advises his patients with milk allergies to avoid processed foods whose labels list such general ingredients as natural or artificial flavoring, spices and seasoning.

Allergic patients have long had to grapple with the fear of allergy triggers in their foods. For sufferers of a common allergy to peanuts, consumption can be near-fatal. It may cause not only tightening of the throat, but anaphylaxis, which sends the body into shock.

Last week, Keebler Co. announced it was recalling some of its Fudge Shoppe brand Fudge'n Caramel cookies because the ingredients failed to list peanut butter. Candy and ice cream makers have conducted similar recalls in the past few years to protect unsuspecting consumers allergic to peanuts.

Watson, an assistant professor at the University of Manitoba's pediatric department, discussed hidden ingredients Monday during the annual meeting of the American Academy of Allergy and Immunology.

Contest invites young Kansans to design ducks

BRENT BROWN
Collegian

Young Kansans are getting a chance to show their artistic ability in a nationwide contest.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is inviting young Kansas wildlife artists to enter the Federal Junior Duck Stamp Contest.

"Students K through 12 are eligible to participate," Jan Turner, Quivira Wildlife Refuge administrative support assistant, said.

Dave Hilley, refuge manager, said this is the third year Kansas has been involved, and the interest keeps increasing every year.

"We have had over 800 entries and hope to go over 1,000 this year," Hilley said.

Turner said there were just fewer than 400 entries from Kansas the first year, and this year, that number should almost triple.

"I am anticipating at least 1,200 entries," she said.

The contest started with entries involving only nine states, but now there are 25 states, and the number of states participating continues to grow, Turner said.

"In the future, they will try to bring on more and more states every year," Turner said.

The students' art work will be judged depending on their age group, and, because of the number of entries in each age group, several students will have the opportunity to win something, she said.

"There will be around 100 winners," Turner said.

The winning Kansas stamp will be entered in national competition to select the Federal Junior Duck Stamp Design.

The top three winners from Kansas will travel to Washington, D.C., for a three-day stay where their work will compete with those of other states, Turner said.

Hilley said he believes that this is a good way to get children thinking about two important issues at one time.

"Teachers are using not just art education but conservation education as well," he said.

Entries in the Kansas competition must be postmarked no later than March 15.

For more information, contact Jan Turner at the Quivira National Wildlife Refuge at (316) 486-2393.

Suspected murderer confessed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NAPERVILLE, Ill. — A suspected serial killer who died of AIDS on death row confessed to killing 21 young men in a methodical murder spree in which he lured victims with drugs, alcohol and money, his attorney said Tuesday.

The disclosure provided some answers to a decade of haunting questions about the convicted killer, Larry Eyler, who died Sunday. Authorities had long considered him the prime suspect in the string of murders across Illinois and Indiana in the early 1980s. However, he was convicted in only two killings.

"The reason I'm here is so that the families know, he did confess to the murders of your sons," attorney Kathleen Zellner said at a news conference attended by families of Eyler's alleged victims. "He told me that, and I hope that can bring you some peace of mind."

Zellner, who had handled Eyler's appeals, said he described the killings to her during the last three years and that she convinced him to let her release his confession after his death.

Mom convicted of hiring killers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BROWNSVILLE, Texas — A woman was sentenced Wednesday to life in prison for paying two men $3,000 to kill a teen-ager who jilted her daughter.

Dora Garcia Cisneros cried softly when the judge announced the jury's sentences, reached after less than two hours of deliberations.

Prosecutors had sought death by lethal injection for Cisneros, 56, and Daniel Garza, a middleman in the murder-for-hire. Garza also was sentenced Wednesday to life in prison.

Joey Fischer, 18, was shot in March

1993, a year after he broke up with Cisneros' 17-year-old daughter, Cristina.

Garza, 43, passed $3,000 from Cisneros to two Mexican gunmen to carry out the hit. Cisneros and Garza were convicted Tuesday; their lawyers said they would appeal.

During the penalty phase Wednesday, lawyer Tony Canales successfully argued that Cisneros posed no threat to society.

"She's going to die in prison," he said.

A life sentence means no chance for parole for 35 years.

In seeking the death penalty, prosecutors argued that Cisneros planned the killing for four months. Garza was portrayed as a willing participant who may have been with the gunmen when Fischer was killed.

The government's key witness, fortuneteller Maria Mercedes Martinez, testified that she acted as the intermediary between Cisneros and Garza. Martinez pleaded guilty to murder conspiracy in a plea bargain and is awaiting sentencing.

Authorities say there is little hope the two alleged gunmen will be extradited from Mexico to face U.S. charges. One is in custody on an unrelated charge, and the other is at large.

Breakfasts vary from Coke, candy bars to toast, juice

ALIE BRESADOLA

Collegian

Yeah, yeah, yeah — we've heard it all before. Breakfast is the most important meal of the day.

So why is it that people rarely sit down and eat before they start their day?

In the past, breakfast was the biggest meal. People would load up on eggs, sausage, bacon, toast, pancakes — whatever they could get their hands on — before they began the day.

Today, it's a different story.

Unless people have time, they usually don't eat breakfast. Sure, they might stuff a banana in their mouth on their way out the door, but that's not exactly a sit-down, prepare-for-your-day breakfast.

"Breakfast is very important," Paula Peters, assistant professor of nutrition, said. "The main thing is that it's the longest time you go without getting nourishment."

Many people on this campus are not morning people. Waking up and going to class is hard enough, let alone waking up early enough to eat and make it to class on time.

D.J. Schneider, junior in mechanical engineering, said he never eats breakfast.

"I usually don't get up in time. I don't like food in the morning," he said.

Some people, on the other hand, do like food in the morning, and they find it difficult to make it until lunch if they don't eat.

"You need energy at that time of the day, and most people are likely to run down before lunch," Peters said.

Cara Petree, freshman in pre-medicine, usually goes to Derby Food Center for breakfast. Since everything is already there and prepared, it's convenient to go down and eat, she said.

Even if someone does wake up in time for class and breakfast, that doesn't mean he or she is a breakfast person.

"I have toast and drink some orange juice and read the paper every morning. I don't eat a whole lot. I'm not a breakfast person," Bryce Palmgren, sophomore in pre-medicine, said.

Other people are not quite as nutritious as Palmgren in their eating habits. On any given day, walk through the K-State Union in the morning, and you'll see people eating everything from bacon and eggs to candy bars and Coke.

Look around you in your morning classes, and you'll see the same thing.

Bethany Young, senior in elementary education, doesn't let nutritional value interfere in her breakfast habits.

"I have 7:30s on Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and I don't wake up in time for breakfast. I just drink Coke and get chips out of the machine," she said.

In addition to needing energy in the morning, eating breakfast also helps your cholesterol level, Peters said.

"Studies have been done that show people have higher cholesterol when they skip breakfast. There are a lot of different reasons for this, but there isn't one definitive reason for it," she said.

So next time you're running out the door, grab a Pop Tart or some toast.

"Strawberry Pop Tarts are the best. I've got to have it with the frosting and sprinkles," Jim Lorenz, senior in park resource management, said.

Authorities retract murder charges

BRIEFLY

A 12-year-old girl, who confessed to killing her toddler cousin, was mistakenly charged with murder.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Authorities made a terrible mistake in filing a murder charge against a 12-year-old girl who confessed to killing her toddler cousin in 1984, a prosecutor said Wednesday.

Hamilton County Prosecutor Joseph Deters said his office would not pursue the charge of juvenile delinquency for committing murder.

He expected a Juvenile Court judge to dismiss the charge at a hearing Friday.

The girl was 3 when her

10-month-old cousin drowned in a bucket of bleach and water in their Cincinnati apartment. The death had been ruled accidental.

Last month, the girl told police she killed the boy.

"I consider it a terrible mistake to have charged her," Deters said. "We could not proceed criminally, on any basis, against somebody who was 3 years old at the time. It was a stupid thing to do."

The girl's lawyer, Terry Weber, said a 3-year-old cannot form criminal intent to commit murder.

Deters said his assistant prosecutors should not have advised police to file the charge on Feb. 26.

Steve Martin, the prosecutor's representative, had said the girl was charged because prosecutors wanted to put her under court jurisdiction so she could get psychological help.

The girl already has been counseled for at least three years through the county's department of youth services, Weber said.

Authorities refused to identify the girl, who lives with her foster mother. They did not discuss a motive for the killing.

Most insurance covers abortion

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A health-reform plan that paid for abortions would not be a radical change, a new study claims. Most private insurers already cover it.

Anti-abortion groups vehemently disagreed with the conclusions.

The report released Wednesday by the Alan Guttmacher Institute found that two-thirds of the health plans surveyed — from health maintenance organizations to large plans that allow patients to choose their doctors — routinely cover abortion.

"Even as we extend to people coverage they do not have, we must not take away coverage ... that is already widespread," Jeannie I. Rosoff, president of the institute, said at a hearing on health reform and women's health, conducted by the Senate Labor and Human Resources aging subcommittee.

The Guttmacher Institute, a Planned Parenthood affiliate that describes itself as a non-profit corporation for reproductive health research, policy analysis and public education, surveyed the 100 largest commercial insurance companies, all 73 Blue Cross-Blue Shield plans, all 106 HMOs with 100,000 or more enrollees and 107 smaller HMOs. Seventy percent of the HMOs and 66 percent of the large plans cover abortion.

The findings, part of a larger study to be released later, came from 189 responses and have a margin of error of 10 percentage points, Rosoff said.

"Whatever private abortion coverage currently exists is the result of free decisions in the marketplace by insurers, employers, and-or consumers of insurance — not of any federal mandate," the National Right to Life Committee said in a statement. "Moreover, there is considerable evidence that private abortion coverage is spotty, and in some states, it is very uncommon."

"The fact is, the for-profit insurance industry's current practices are not very relevant to the question of what Congress should do in national health-care reform," Gail Quinn, director of the Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said.

The Clinton plan would cover pregnancy-related services, which the president has made clear would include abortion.

At the hearing, several senators criticized the Clinton plan for failing to cover mammography exams to screen for breast cancer for women younger than 50.

"I had my own first one at 40," said Sen. Barbara A. Mikulski, D-Md., chairwoman of the subcommittee.

The Clinton plan would cover mammograms every two years for women older than 50, but it would not automatically cover them for women younger than 50.

Dr. Samuel Broder, director of the National Cancer Institute, said the question of whether mammograms are useful for women under 50 is hotly debated.

"There is extreme polarization in the scientific community," he said.

The House Ways and Means health subcommittee continued its work on a health bill drafted by its chairman, Rep. Pete Stark, D-Calif., which staff members said also would cover abortion.

Hillary Rodham Clinton also went to Capitol Hill for a private strategy session on health reform with Democratic allies.

Afterward, several Democratic senators went to bat at a news conference for requiring all employers to help pay for health insurance. Both the Clinton and Stark plans would require employers to pay 80 percent of premiums.

But, Sen. Tom Daschle, D-S.D., stressed that the 80 percent was flexible.

"I don't think anybody is bound to that number," he said.

The senators released a letter signed by 110 national health, business, labor and consumer groups, including the Chrysler Corp., the AFL-CIO and the American Association of Retired Persons, endorsing an employer mandate as a fair, effective and practical means for achieving universal coverage.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Extra nipple causes awkwardness

Dear Cassandra,
 About a year ago, I started dating a girl, and after a while, we became fairly close. While we were intimate, I discovered she had a third nipple. She was nervous but explained it is not that uncommon of a birth defect. She said mammals form a 'nipple ridge' while in the womb and this one was simply left over.

I tried through our entire relationship to ignore it, but our lovemaking was always a little awkward. For other reasons, we eventually broke up about six months ago. I have not been intimate with another woman until recently.

Everything was going great until I realized I was scared to take off her shirt. We made love, but I never once touched her bra or lifted up her top. What does this mean? I like this girl, but she has to be wondering what is wrong.

Sincerely,
Nipple-pierced

Dear Nipple-pierced,

You still have trouble dealing with your ex-girlfriend's birth defect. Imagine how difficult it was for her to reveal this part of herself. She is probably very sensitive about showing it to those close to her because she will receive a negative reaction. She also probably has to be careful about what kind of clothing she wears, including two-piece bathing suits. I think once you become more sensitive to this defect, you will get over your nipple phobia.

DIVERSIONS

Classic opera's plot taken from true incident

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Collegian

Giacomo Puccini's masterpiece opera, "Madama Butterfly," takes place amid cherry blossoms, delicate paper homes and ornate gardens.

"Butterfly" is a timeless tale of love existing beyond cultural boundaries. Or more specifically, the love that exists apart from reality.

The libretto revolves around Butterfly, a delicate Japanese geisha girl who falls in love with an American Navy lieutenant, Pinkerton. Butterfly shuns her native religion and her family in order to take up her new husband's American ways.

However, Butterfly does not realize Pinkerton only married her out of fun, simply living for the moment. Pinkerton leaves Butterfly for three years, yet she still holds him dear to her heart. She has supposedly given birth to his child while he was away.

When Pinkerton returns, he brings his new American wife. He plans to take in his child and raise it with his new wife. Having found this to be true, Butterfly gives up the child and then commits hara-kiri (traditional Japanese suicide).

Where did this theme originate? The story itself is actually based on a true account. John Luther Long, writing in Century Magazine in 1898, detailed a real incident of a geisha girl in Nagasaki. The true Butterfly was Tsuru Yamamura (1851-88). She had a child by a wealthy Englishman, but when he deserted her, she tried to commit hara-kiri. She failed, and her son was later taken by his father to an American missionary school in Nagasaki.

In 1900, Puccini, fresh from the successful opening of his opera "Tosca," was looking for a new story to build around. He went to see a popular new play in London by David Belasco. It was called "Madam Butterfly" and was based on Long's account. Europe was experiencing a sort of exotic enchantment. New technologies had opened up the undiscovered Far East, and the Europeans became obsessed with all things Oriental.

In 1901, Puccini began writing the opera. Puccini immersed himself in learning everything about the Japanese culture. He was a perfectionist. He wanted everything in his opera to be accurate, and most of it is. The names of the characters in "Butterfly," however, are not traditionally Japanese. In Japan, your name should be suggestive of what sex you are.

Problems aside, Puccini finished the opera in 1903. He felt "Madama Butterfly" was his finest work. He said it was the "most heartfelt and most expressive opera" he had written. He was so taken by his own work that he invited his entire family to the opening, something he never did before.

The opera debuted in Italy at La Scala on Feb. 17, 1904. It was a disaster. The audience booed, hissed and ignored Puccini's opera. Two months later, having revised the opera and shortened it immensely, it reopened to rave reviews.

The New York City Opera National Company production was first presented in 1987. The show is sung in Italian with English supertitles.

The New York City Opera National Company will present Puccini's "Madama Butterfly" at 8 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium. Ticket prices: $30/28/22 public, $28/26/20 senior citizen and $15/14/11 student/child.

FAST FOOD GOES TO THE DOGS

Pooches in Toledo, Ohio can turn down meals served in dog bowls for a chance to dine out. Shiela Mullan and Jackie Zajac opened the Puppy Hut two years ago. The restaurant serves pet food similar to dog biscuits in the shape of steak, burgers and ribs.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Extra nipple causes awkwardness

Dear Cassandra,
About a year ago, I started dating a girl, and after a while, we became fairly close. While we were intimate, I discovered she had a third nipple. She was nervous but explained it is not that uncommon of a birth defect. She said mammals form a 'nipple ridge' while in the womb and this one was simply left over. I tried through our entire relationship to ignore it, but our lovemaking was always a little awkward. For other reasons, we eventually broke up about six months ago. I have not been intimate with another woman until recently. Everything was going great until I realized I was scared to take off her shirt. We made love, but I never once touched her bra or lifted up her top. What does this mean? I like this girl, but she has to be wondering what is wrong.

Sincerely,
Nipple-pierced

Dear Nipple-pierced,

You still have trouble dealing with your ex-girlfriend's birth defect. Imagine how difficult it was for her to reveal this part of herself. She is probably very sensitive about showing it to those close to her because she will receive a negative reaction. She also probably has to be careful about what kind of clothing she wears, including two-piece bathing suits. I think once you become more sensitive to this defect, you will get over your nipple phobia.

Classic opera's plot taken from true incident

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Giacomo Puccini's masterpiece opera, "Madama Butterfly," takes place amid cherry blossoms, delicate paper homes and ornate gardens.

"Butterfly" is a timeless tale of love existing beyond cultural boundaries. Or more specifically, the love that exists apart from reality.

The libretto revolves around Butterfly, a delicate Japanese geisha girl who falls in love with an American Navy lieutenant, Pinkerton. Butterfly shuns her native religion and her family in order to take up her new husband's American ways.

However, Butterfly does not realize Pinkerton only married her out of fun, simply living for the moment. Pinkerton leaves Butterfly for three years, yet she still holds him dear to her heart. She has supposedly given birth to his child while he was away.

When Pinkerton returns, he brings his new American wife. He plans to take in his child and raise it with his new wife. Having found this to be true, Butterfly gives up the child and then commits hara-kiri (traditional Japanese suicide).

Where did this theme originate? The story itself is actually based on a true account. John Luther Long, writing in Century Magazine in 1898, detailed a real incident of a geisha girl in Nagasaki. The true Butterfly was Tsuru Yamamura (1851-88). She had a child by a wealthy Englishman, but when he deserted her, she tried to commit hara-kiri. She failed, and her son was later taken by his father to an American missionary school in Nagasaki.

In 1900, Puccini, fresh from the successful opening of his opera "Tosca," was looking for a new story to build around. He went to see a popular new play in London by David Belasco. It was called "Madam Butterfly" and was based on Long's account. Europe was experiencing a sort of exotic enchantment. New technologies had opened up the undiscovered Far East, and the Europeans became obsessed with all things Oriental.

In 1901, Puccini began writing the opera. Puccini immersed himself in learning everything about the Japanese culture. He was a perfectionist. He wanted everything in his opera to be accurate, and most of it is. The names of the characters in "Butterfly," however, are not traditionally Japanese. In Japan, your name should be suggestive of what sex you are.

Problems aside, Puccini finished the opera in 1903. He felt "Madama Butterfly" was his finest work. He said it was the "most heartfelt and most expressive opera" he had written. He was so taken by his own work that he invited his entire family to the opening, something he never did before.

The opera debuted in Italy at La Scala on Feb. 17, 1904. It was a disaster. The audience booed, hissed and ignored Puccini's opera. Two months later, having revised the opera and shortened it immensely, it reopened to rave reviews.

The New York City Opera National Company production was first presented in 1987. The show is sung in Italian with English supertitles.

The New York City Opera National Company will present Puccini's "Madama Butterfly" at 8 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium. Ticket prices: $30/28/22 public, $28/26/20 senior citizen and $15/14/11 student/child.

Guards let gunman by

ASSOCIATED PRESS

"We are asking to bring the truth to light for the sake of two peoples, so they can learn a lesson."

SHEIK SALEH NATSHEH
Hebron's chief Muslim official

HEBRON, Occupied West Bank — An Israeli inquiry commission, retracing gunman Baruch Goldstein's steps, heard Wednesday that army guards let him enter the Hebron mosque even though he wore a marksman's protective headset and carried a bag of ammunition.

The major in charge of the guard detail greeted Goldstein at the entrance and asked why he was wearing an army uniform.

"I'm doing reserve duty," the Jewish settler answered, then walked unhindered into the Tomb of the Patriarchs where he opened fire, killing at least 30 Muslims kneeling in prayer.

The new details confirmed earlier testimony by army commanders who said security was lax before the Feb. 25 massacre, with only half of the 10 guards reporting for duty.

Hundreds of troops patrolled outside while the five-member commission spent four hours Wednesday reconstructing the shooting spree inside the fortress-like shrine in central Hebron.

The site, holy to both Muslims and Jews, has been closed since the massacre that disrupted the Israel-PLO peace talks.

Tensions remain high between the city's 80,000 Palestinians and 450 Jewish settlers living in six enclaves.

The Palestinians have been confined to their homes under an army-imposed curfew since the massacre, while armed Jewish settlers walked around freely.

In the Tomb, the commission met with Hebron's chief Muslim official, Sheik Saleh Natsheh.

"We are asking you to bring the truth to light for the sake of our two peoples, so they can learn a lesson," Natsheh told the commission head, Supreme Court Chief Justice Meir Shamgar, according to a pool transcript.

Natsheh complained to Shamgar that Israeli authorities had destroyed important evidence by cleaning up the massacre site, including washing blood-soaked prayer carpets.

The clergyman told Shamgar he would testify before the commission in Jerusalem after the weekend holiday marking the end of the Muslim fasting month of Ramadan.

Army investigator Yoav Gallant, citing testimony by two guards, said Goldstein was dropped off at the Tomb by a white car.

He wore an anti-noise headset of the type used at shooting ranges and carried a purple bag with seven ammunition clips inside.

The major in charge of the guards, identified only by his last name, Rotem, said he didn't see Goldstein wearing a headset.

He said that after his brief exchange with Goldstein about the uniform, he lost sight of the settler.

Rotem, deployed at a point where Muslims turn left and Jews right to their respective prayer halls, insisted Goldstein didn't get past him and must have entered through a side door in the Jewish section.

But army investigators said they believed Goldstein entered the mosque at the main entrance.

Commission member Abdel Rahman Zoabi, an Israeli Arab judge, took Rotem aside and prodded him: "The only one who can tell us if Goldstein entered from here is you. Nobody else saw him." Rotem hesitated, but he did not respond.

Commission members were also told that an Israeli officer was monitoring the mosque via closed-circuit television upstairs.

The two monitors didn't have sound, and only falling bodies on the screens alerted the officer. He didn't see Goldstein on the monitors.

Palestinians will cooperate with the Israeli inquiry even though they are distrustful because of previous leniency shown to rampaging settlers, said lawyer Abdul Ghani Ewaiye, a member of a separate 11-member PLO committee investigating the massacre.

The question of whether the army ignored the growing friction and possible warnings of an attack by Jewish extremists is a key issue.

Palestinians said they face continued harassment since the bloody incident.

Nabil Halabi, a Palestinian merchant living opposite the Jewish enclave of Beit Hadassah, said settlers stoned his three-story house Tuesday night, smashing several windows.

Yehuda Burdman, 36, an immigrant from Long Island, N.Y., who studies at the Jewish yeshiva next to the Tomb area, conceded some settlers harassed Arabs.

"They feel it maintains a balance of power," he said. "If the Arabs feel they might get a punch, they are less likely to do anything."

Maj. Gen. Danny Yatom, head of Central Command that oversees the West Bank, told the panel Tuesday that the possibility of a Jewish extremist attack against Palestinians had never been discussed at top army levels.

The army officer in charge of the Tomb compound said scores of complaints of Jews causing trouble were ignored.

White House cooperates in Whitewater inquiry

As part of that probe, Fiske is examining a series of meetings between White House officials and federal regulators looking into Whitewater, contacts that raised questions about whether the investigation could have been compromised.

As part of that effort, he has subpoenaed 10 administration officials to testify before a grand jury beginning Thursday.

Asked Wednesday what advice he'd give to subpoenaed aides, Clinton said: "Just the same advice I've given everybody — just tell them what happened. Answer the questions and go on. Be very open."

The debate in Congress about the hearings is largely along partisan lines. Republicans are demanding a congressional investigation and promising not to interfere with Fiske's work.

The opposition is led by Democrats, who say it was Republicans who demanded a special counsel in the first place and now should let him do his job.

"It's a political circus, and all they want to do is to throw up a lot of dust and embarrass the president," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said today.

But Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas said Wednesday that hearings were necessary and rejected criticism that Republicans are playing politics.

"Let's stop the finger-pointing, and let's get on with the hearings," he said. "Congress has a clear right to ask questions."

Clinton, meanwhile, was struggling to pull his administration out from under the Whitewater cloud with another broad denial of wrongdoing.

"I am very relaxed about this," Clinton said Tuesday as his second news conference in as many days was swallowed up by questions about Whitewater. "I did not do anything wrong. There is nothing here."

Clinton said the White House would be inclined to cooperate if the hearing does occur.

Trying to polish his administration's image on ethics, Clinton on Tuesday replaced Nussbaum on an interim basis with what he called the firm, uncompromising and steady hand of respected Washington lawyer Lloyd Cutler.

Fee changes will benefit students plies and salaries that are needed to keep Lafene running, Zweimiller said.

The reserves would not be severely affected for a while, Dr. Guy Smith, medical director at Lafene, said.

"It would not affect us in the short term. But we would have to replan how we're going to operate past that first year's time," Smith said.

Increases will be necessary in the future to keep Lafene operating through the summer months and to preserve staff quality, Krause said.

"I don't think you can recruit quality physicians on a nine-month basis," Krause said.

Recruiting quality physicians is only one of the concerns raised since the fee decrease was proposed.

There have been concerns involving the possibility of fees charged for services such as office visits, Krause said.

"I don't think they'd be charging for services," Krause said. "It defeats the whole purpose of Lafene as a student health center."

Even if an initial $10-$15 charge were made for office visits, Bridges said Lafene would still be cheaper than local hospitals.

"With the $10 decrease as a compromise, instead of the $20 decrease, there probably won't be a fee for services," Bridges said. "Everything at Lafene is so cheap, there is no way outside businesses could compete. It's not going to affect reserves drastically enough for a charge for services."

The bill to decrease the health-care fee will be on the Kansas Board of Regents April agenda, Krause said.

Passage by the regents shouldn't be a problem, Bridges said. He said this was a chance for Student Senate to do something that would directly benefit students.

"It shows we're trying to do something and that we responded to what they wanted," Bridges said.

Regents hurt if Washburn not included take the same leap of faith with Washburn it did with Wichita State 30 years ago.

He said the whole regents system would be hurt if Washburn does not enter the system.

Sen. Anthony Hensley, D-Topeka, said the state needs to look into having better coordination of higher education in the state.

"We need to make sure all the players are in the system," he said. "Washburn is one of the those players."

Hensley said Washburn would become a part of the system eventually, but not this year.

"Washburn is the San Andreas fault issue in the Legislature," he said. "It's going to happen. We just don't know when."

Officials begin to testify

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The first of six subpoenaed White House officials testified for two hours Thursday before a federal grand jury investigating the tangled Whitewater affair. President Clinton's aides also were ready to deliver a stack of documents to the grand jury.

Clinton's advice to aides was "Tell them what happened."

Margaret Williams, chief of staff for Hillary Rodham Clinton, was the first to arrive at the U.S. District Courthouse and spent two hours in the third floor grand jury room.

Hillary Clinton's press secretary, Lisa Caputo, also went to the courthouse to testify, but the grand jury broke for lunch before questioning her.

A throng of reporters, cameramen and photographers was camped out at the courthouse entrances. On her way out, Williams stopped briefly before the press.

"You can't come out of anything like this and not have a fairly healthy respect for the process," Williams said. "I'm really encouraged to be participating in something where the finding of fact is important, as opposed to innuendo and rumormongering and gossip and sensationalism."

"I'm going back to work," she said, ignoring shouted questions.

Ten officials were subpoenaed to testify, but most were given permission to appear later. Aside from Williams and Caputo, the only other official expected to testify Thursday was Mark Gearan, the White House communications chief.

A stack of documents several inches thick was being turned over by White House lawyers this afternoon to comply with a subpoena. The documents include notes, telephone logs, memos and news clippings involving private White House briefings with Treasury Department officials.

Apparently after delivering opening remarks to the grand jury, Robert Fiske, the Whitewater special prosecutor, left the courthouse shortly after Williams went into the grand jury room.

"I'm not going to comment on anything except that the sun's come out," Fiske said as he hailed a cab. It had been overcast and raining earlier.

Caputo, accompanied by her attorney, arrived at the courthouse shortly after noon and went to a waiting area outside the grand jury room.

One of the subpoenaed officials, Bruce Lindsey, a close confidant of the president's, accompanied Clinton on a speechmaking trip to New York. Clinton has denied any wrongdoing by him or his staff.

The courthouse scene was enlivened by the presence of about a dozen demonstrators who described themselves as members of conservative groups carried banners and placards with slogans such as "Please, All Documents," "It's rejection," she said.

Twenty-eight student callers worked March 3 and 6 to collect the pledges.

"We made 1,032 calls," Amy Renz, Alumni Association vice president, said.

"Fifty-seven percent of those who we called either made a pledge or are considering making a pledge," she said.

"We know that there are some people who wait for the phone call from the students to make their pledge for the year," she said.

"The Student Alumni Board did a tremendous job. We were so pleased that they surpassed the goal of $20,000."

him what advice he had for her. He gave her ideas on what classes to take. She said she would never have thought of taking some of the classes he mentioned.

Many people said they had already given, but the Alumni Association records didn't show that.

Activity fee hike axed after debate

Student Senate rejected a bill Thursday that would increase the student activity fee for the 1994-95 school year.

The bill would have increased the fee 50 cents per semester for full-time students and 25 cents per semester for part-time students. It would have been the first increase in the activity fee in the last five years.

After heated discussion, the bill was axed in two separate votes.

A motion to suspend the rules had moved the bill up to the front of the agenda. It was rejected.

During the allocations for the Black Student Union, Circle

STUDENT SENATE

K International and College Republicans, concerns about funding for next year brought up the question on the activity fee bill once again, where it was killed the second time.

The allocations that passed last night will leave Student Senate with roughly $18,300 for next year's allocations. With the fee increase, an additional $17,000 in revenue would have come in, Bryndon Meinhardt, agriculture senator, said.

Some senators argued that, without the increase, Student Senate will not have the finances to allocate money to student groups.

"Without it, we can't fund allocations. We don't have enough revenue for expenses," Paul Bridges, arts and sciences senator, said. "The allocations committee will have a tough enough time as it is next year. If it doesn't go through, groups are going to suffer."

Others said it was a simple case of tax and spend and that it was unfair to raise fees because of a lack of planning by this year's Student Senate.

"It was Student Senate's responsibility to spend the money this year. We screwed up," Derek Kreifels, business senator, said. "When next year

WASHBURN UNIVERSITY

Finney will veto salary-increase bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — An aide to Gov. Joan Finney said Thursday the governor will veto a bill to increase faculty salaries at state universities after the Senate's near fatal blow to a bill that would take Washburn University into the state system.

Gary Reser, an aide to Finney, said the Partnership for Excellence plan will be vetoed if it reaches the governor's desk.

The Senate, on a 23-13 unrecorded vote, declined Wednesday to advance a bill that would have brought the nation's last municipal university into the Kansas Board of Regents system in 1997.

The bill was then struck from the debate calendar, which means this bill is dead, and it will take some other measure to resurrect the issue this session.

The move could cost professors at the six state universities bigger salary raises in the next three weeks if Finney vetoes the Partnership for Excellence plan.

Washburn officials were critical of the vote, saying the Senate sanctioned treating Kansas citizens differently.

"It's the responsibility of the state, not the city, to provide higher education," said David Monical, special assistant to Washburn President Hugh Thompson.

Opponents said the Legislature has problems funding the six universities now in the system.

"It really doesn't make sense when we're having trouble meeting the needs of the six universities we have on line to make the line longer," said Sen. Robert Vancrum, R-Overland Park.

"We have a package where the true long-range costs have been seriously understated."

The bill would phase in Washburn's funding under the entry into the state system during a three-year period.

As a provision of the proposal, Shawnee County taxpayers would continue to pay an 18-mill property tax levy.

There also would be a freeze on tuition at Washburn until the tuition at other regents schools are at a comparable level.

The tuition at Washburn is considerably higher than it is at even the major regents schools, the University of Kansas and K-State.

The state currently provides about $6.3 million in aid to Washburn.

Pickers add to post-abortion stress

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Pro-life protesters have a negative effect on the psychological state of women who enter abortion clinics, a researcher told a group of K-State students Tuesday.

Catherine Cozzarelli, assistant professor of social psychology, said women are more depressed and upset after abortions when they encounter protesters at abortion clinics.

But, when pro-choice escorts help a woman safely into the clinic, the psychological effects are more positive.

Cozzarelli and a group of researchers gathered this information after conducting a study at an abortion clinic in Buffalo, N.Y., in 1990.

"The clinic where I collected this data was picketed every working day for the past five or six years," Cozzarelli said.

"We chose this particular one because it does about 40 first-trimester (abortions) a week. The clinics in Wichita or Kansas City don't do that many."

The goal of the study was to see if the picketing of pro-life protesters cause post-abortion depression and stress and to see if clinic escorts have a positive effect on the women.

To collect the information for the study, Cozzarelli and the other researchers camped outside the clinic in Buffalo and gathered data both outside and inside the clinic.

Of the total number of women asked to participate in the study, 89 percent agreed to answer the questions.

Cozzarelli discussed some of the tactics pro-life protesters use to influence the women entering clinics. Along with praying aloud, chanting, singing, carrying signs, and shouting things such as, "You're murdering your baby," protesters constantly call the clinics to tie up the phone lines.

"At a clinic where I worked for about six months, many Calling alumni for the KSU Alumni Association Tradition Founders Telefund gave some students opportunities to ask former students for career advice.

It also raised $20,865 in pledges.

"I like to try to get personal with who I'm talking with," Mary Rousch, junior in elementary education and telefund volunteer, said.

One of her calls was to an elementary school teacher.

Rousch said when she saw that the alumnus was in elementary education, she asked him what advice he had for her. He gave her ideas on what classes to take. She said she would never have thought of taking some of the classes he mentioned.

► UNREST PROMPTS PLO TO DEMAND EVACUATION

HEBRON, Occupied West Bank — Hundreds of Palestinians stoned a Jewish enclave in the heart of this Arab city Thursday, clashing with soldiers when a two-week curfew imposed after the mosque massacre was lifted briefly.

Soldiers protecting the Beit Hadassah compound fired tear gas and rubber bullets at Palestinians who hurled stones with slingshots. Protesters, some shouting "settlers out," set tires alight and rolled them at army positions.

Beit Hadassah is one of a half-dozen settlements that the PLO has demanded be evacuated to reduce tensions and clear the way for the resumption of Israel-PLO peace talks.

The unrest began after the army lifted the curfew for two hours to allow Palestinians to shop for food.

Tensions have remained high between the city's 80,000 Palestinians and 450 Jewish settlers living in six enclaves. The Palestinians have been confined to their homes as a provision of an army-imposed curfew since the massacre, while armed Jewish settlers walked around freely.

The rioting in Hebron came as an inquiry commission held its third session, taking testimony from soldiers present at the Tomb of the Patriarchs when the massacre took place. A New York-born doctor, Baruch Goldstein, gunned down 30 Muslims as they knelt in prayer at the tomb.

► N. KOREA REFUSES ENVOY EXCHANGE

SEOUL, South Korea — South Korea will resume joint military exercises with the United States if the South's talks with North Korea fail to produce significant progress, Prime Minister Lee Hoi-chang said Thursday.

His remarks reflected disappointment in Seoul concerning the North's refusal to exchange high level envoys to discuss a nuclear free Korean peninsula.

Under the deal with Washington, the North allowed inspections to begin at its seven declared nuclear facilities last week. But it has refused to exchange envoys with its southern capitalist rival.

Lee said the North's intentions would become clearer at the next round of talks at the border, scheduled for Saturday.

► CONSEQUENCES NOT IN LAB REPORT

WASHINGTON — Designers of the Navy's most powerful nuclear warhead knew before it was put aboard submarines four years ago it could undergo an accidental chain reaction in abnormal situations, according to a classified federal weapons laboratory report.

The report did not describe possible consequences of such a reaction. Private weapons experts told The Associated Press it would cause radioactive contamination and possibly an explosion but not a bomb like detonation.

Navy officials said Thursday the potential hazard was judged to be too slight to justify redesigning the warhead, which remains in the Navy's arsenal.

► PROSECUTORS FAIL TO HAVE CASE AGAINST GIRL

CINCINNATI — A judge Thursday dismissed a murder charge against a 12-year-old girl who confessed to drowning her baby cousin a decade ago.

Juvenile Court Judge Sylvia Hendon approved a request by Hamilton County prosecutors and the girl's lawyer to dismiss the charge.

Prosecutor Joseph Deters said Wednesday his office made a terrible mistake in advising police to file the charge Feb. 26. Prosecutors had no legal basis to prove that a 3-year-old could form criminal intent to commit murder, he said.

The girl, whom authorities have declined to identify, will continue to live with her foster mother in Cincinnati and will undergo three years of psychological counseling, said Terry Weber, the girl's lawyer.

The girl was 3 when her 10-month-old cousin drowned July 22, 1984, in a bucket of bleach and water.

Police charged the girl after she told her foster mother that she drowned the boy. The prosecutor's office initially said the girl was charged because it wanted to get her under court jurisdiction so she could get help.

► AIDS CASES INCREASE DRAMATICALLY SINCE 1992

ATLANTA — The number of new AIDS cases unexpectedly more than doubled last year under a broader definition of the disease and boosted by a sharp increase in the number of infections among heterosexuals.

The federal Centers for Disease Control projected 1993 AIDS cases would jump 75 percent in the first year of the new definition. It actually increased by 111 percent, from 49,016 in 1992 to 103,500, the agency reported Thursday.

Last year, the CDC expanded its definition to include those infected with HIV who also have a severely suppressed immune system, tuberculosis, recurrent pneumonia or invasive cervical cancer.

Most of the AIDS cases under the new definition were reported in the first three months of the year. The surge dropped off by the end of 1993. The CDC expects the number of 1994 cases to drop below last year's figure.

The groups most affected by the expanded definition were women, blacks, heterosexual intravenous drug users and hemophiliacs.

"At Commerce Bank, we know it's tough to do your best in school if you're hassled by money problems. So we offer Money 101 — a package of banking services especially for college students. Use any or all of them.

Money 101 is a Student Loan Program with a difference. All student loans are the same — same rates, same terms. Only the banks are different. And Commerce Bank can save you interest. While other banks capitalize interest as many as 16 times while you're in school, Commerce doesn't until you graduate — meaning real interest savings.

Money 101 includes a Student VISA or MasterCard to help you get the things you need — and cash advances, too.

The low-cost Money 101 Checking Account helps you keep track of expenses with a complete monthly statement.

And for maximum convenience, sign up for Money 101's Connection 24 Card. It gives you access to your checking and savings accounts 24 hours a day at any Connection 24 ATM (Automated Teller Machine) in Kansas — and other CIRRUS and BankMate ATMs nationwide.

Researchers studying CO₂ level

Increased levels of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere may change the Flint Hills' tallgrass prairie, and K-State scientists want to find out how.

"We are interested in understanding the mechanisms of the changes that may occur," Clenton Owensby, director of the research project and professor of range management, said. "We have to know the mechanisms involved to better predict the future."

Accurate predictions are important because carbon dioxide significantly affects climate and vegetation, according to a fact sheet published by NASA. Significant changes in these factors could alter life as it exists now.

To complicate matters, researchers are unsure to what extent and in what direction the increasing levels of carbon dioxide will change the climate and vegetation, Owensby said.

Grasslands are being studied because they are an important type of vegetation.

Rangelands in the United States occupy 47 percent of land, or terrestrial, ecosystems, Chuck Rice, associate professor of agronomy, said.

"We want to find out if the prairie sequesters carbon, whether it is neutral or if it loses carbon," Owensby said. "This is important because we need to know if terrestrial ecosystems will be able to buffer against further increases in carbon dioxide."

The question K-State researchers are asking includes how the increased levels of carbon dioxide will affect the amount of vegetation the prairie will produce, Owensby said.

Data for experiments is collected in plastic huts north of Kimball Avenue on Denison Avenue. They are called open-topped fumigation chambers.

The information collected since the experiments started in 1989 shows that in dry years, plants growing in the chambers with artificially higher levels of carbon dioxide grow better than those grown in the existing atmosphere outside the chambers.

A possible explanation for this phenomenon is that the plants inside the chambers are under less water stress at higher levels of carbon dioxide, Alan Knapp, associate professor of biology, said.

Stomates, the tiny openings on leaves that allow plants to take in carbon dioxide so they can convert the carbon into food through the process of photosynthesis, are less open when carbon dioxide is at higher levels, Knapp said.

When stomates are wide open, water escapes, causing water stress. That reduces photosynthesis and in turn reduces growth.

Even though the plants grow better in higher levels of carbon dioxide, this doesn't necessarily mean this is best for animals that graze the prairies, Owensby said.

The plants make poor-quality feed because they have a reduced concentration of nitrogen, which makes it less nutritious for the animal, Owensby said.

"If I eat a lower quality diet, then I will consume more to compensate for the reduced quality," Owensby said.

But ruminants, which include sheep, cattle and deer, can't compensate the way humans do.

"As forage quality decreases, intake also decreases," Owensby said.

ENGINEERING

Conference begins Saturday

A conference to help engineering students learn about non-technical issues is being sponsored by the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers.

PHIL SPIKER
Collegian

To help future engineers deal with life after college, K-State's student chapter of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers is playing host to a conference of speakers.

The Student Professional Awareness Conference will be at 1 p.m. Saturday in the Union Forum Hall.

SPAC will have four featured speakers who will cover topics ranging from consulting, to engineering and public policy, to habits of successful engineers.

After the conference there will be a banquet in the Flint Hills room with a live jazz band.

Most of the time speakers will talk to engineering students about very technical subjects, Hoa

Nguyen, senior in electrical engineering, said.

"These speakers are going to be totally opposite. They're going to be very broad-based and very general," he said.

"They are going to talk about topics that are going to make you more well-rounded, and this is something which is always emphasized at any college."

Engineering students learn so much technically that they don't get to focus on non-technical issues, Michelle Munson, IEEE coordinator and junior in electrical engineering and physics, said.

"One of the things that are very important and exciting is the fact that it (SPAC) focuses on non-technical issues that we don't have time to spend on in our regular classes," she said.

KSU ENGINEERING CONFERENCE

K-State's Student Chapter of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers is hosting the Student Professional Awareness Conference (SPAC) at 1 p.m. Saturday in Forum Hall in the K-State Union.

1 p.m. — Welcome and opening address: Dean of Engineering, Donald Rathbone.

1:15 p.m. — Kansas Representative George Dean

"Engineering, Public Policy and State Government."

2 p.m. — Wade Graves, Kansas Power and Light, "Habits of a Successful Engineer."

2:45 p.m. — Refreshments and Brain Teasers.

3:15 p.m. — Joe Knopp, attorney, "Engineering, Ethics and Law."

4 p.m. — Gary Blank, president, Engineering Update Institute in Plato Center, Ill.

"Consulting: An Exciting Way to Practice Engineering."

4:45 p.m. — Closing remarks by SPAC Coordinators.

7 p.m. — Banquet, Flint Hills Room in the K-State Union.

MMABATHO, South Africa

— Thousands of people went on a looting spree in the Bophuthatswana capital on Thursday to celebrate the apparent collapse of a government that opposed taking part in South Africa's all-race elections.

Police and soldiers joined in the celebratory crowds, but there were reports that forces loyal to the homeland's president had opened fire on crowds, leaving an unknown number of casualties.

The whereabouts of President Lucas Mangope and other homeland leaders were unknown, but Johannesburg's Radio 702 said presidential palace guards claimed Mangope had fled.

South Africa's ambassador in Mmabatho, Tjaart Van der Walt, said Mangope told him he was going to his country residence outside Mmabatho.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Job's over — get out of Somalia

Let's keep our promise of leaving Somalia before we're in too deep.

It's time to come home.

As the deadline for U.S. forces to leave Somalia fast approaches, we need to hold President Clinton to his promise to leave the war- and famine-torn country March 31.

About 3,200 American military personnel remain in Somalia after more than a year of U.S. presence there. U.S. forces entered the country Dec. 9, 1992, to try to give the people of Somalia a chance to solve their problems and restore order to the country.

Clinton announced the U.S. troops would be out of Somalia by March 31 after a battle with Somali gunners in Mogadishu last Oct. 3-4 that killed 18 American soldiers.

The United States has been more than generous with its money and support and has sacrificed many young lives in an attempt to help Somalia. Our country has given the Somali people and their leaders the chance for a better future. Now it's up to them to decide their fate.

Our country has done all it can to help. Let's keep to our promise of leaving Somalia before we're in too deep.

We've done our job.

Political correctness the McCarthy hunt of our generation

Many scathing incidents have occurred in our country throughout its short history. Segregation of schools, public facilities, etc. The McCarthy communist witch hunts. The list could go on and on.

There seems to be an infamous incident for each generation, including mine.

The special event that will forever make a black mark on my generation is the terror of political correctness.

It is something that grew right before our noses, and many did not even realize it was happening. Now, political correctness has infested our society so deeply that a day does not pass without a PC-related incident.

Political correctness has taken a toll on everything from our children's education to public street signs.

I was watching the Denver news while I was in Colorado during winter break. In Denver, there was a motion being made by PCers to change all the signs that said "Dead End" to the more preferable and less emotionally overwhelming "No Outlet."

The reasoning was a term such as "Dead End" makes a person feel as though there is nothing to look forward to in life. I heard someone say this during the news report.

Travis Brooks, employee of the Federal Highway Department, said homeowners living on "Dead End" streets may not like the sign because they may feel it relates to their lives.

I only pray most people don't live their lives according to the signs they see on their streets.

Whoa, sorry folks. I just made another great blunder. I said "pray." Praying would involve God. God involves religion.

We cannot talk about something as evil as religion without being attacked by the PC police. It may hurt those people who are not religious.

An example of this was a case in Wisconsin that cost Beverly Schnell $8,000. Schnell ran the following ad in a Milwaukee paper — "Apartment for rent, one bedroom, electric included; mature Christian handyman."

The case not only included the fact that Schnell was discriminating against non-Christians, she was also discriminating against women because she asked for a handy "man."

All Schnell was looking for was someone to rent her apartment who could also help her remodel her home.

According to my count, by these standards, five of the eight "roommate-wanted" ads in Thursday's paper would be grounds for a PC-driven lawsuit.

The one area I have not included, but that I believe is the most important, is the education of our children.

Before the term political correctness came into vogue, what had been occurring would have been called censorship or, in some cases, lying.

Most people are familiar with Mark Twain's "Huckleberry Finn." Most PCers wish we wouldn't be, at least not with the original version. The original version contains the word "nigger."

I read the book when I was 14 years old. To this day, I have always understood the word was part of the lexicon of the period.

The terms African American or African in America didn't exist. Mark Twain was not a racist because he used this word. It was the word people used. Nor did I become a racist upon reading the word. What it did do was help me better understand that part of history.

PCers would like to negate this word from history, but we cannot. When we read the novel, we must understand it was the period. It was a fact of life back then.

History is probably the most tragic victim of PC. PC doesn't understand history. PC basically denies history existed or wants to turn it into something it never was.

PC took what was at one time considered to be American education's best history book, "Triumph of the American Nation," and destroyed it. The title was even changed to "The American Nation."

Actually, it wasn't destroyed. It was diluted and distorted until it was no longer the true history of the "triumph" of a nation. All life was taken out of the book, as it was turned into a sanitized version of history that gives a little something for everyone no matter how insignificant the moment was. It detracts from the more noteworthy moments in our nation while intensifying the less significant.

It was turned into bits and pieces of trivia no longer explaining the significant factors that made America the great nation it is today. It is basically fast food in a book.

PC is destructive. It is as false a dream as Utopia. It robs us of the truth and the ability to express ourselves freely.

PC comes from that section of politics that believes government is there to protect the people.

For those familiar with George Orwell's "1984," it was called Big Brother. Well, I guess I should be PC. Nowadays, it would be called Overdeveloped Sibling.

LIBERALISM

Takes more than a dictionary to define a complex ideology

Dear Editor,

Ms. Smith, you never cease to amaze me. Early last semester, you wrote an equally weak column typical of bubble-gum politicians.

Your juvenile approach to a serious and complex ideology is evidenced by your attempt to define liberal with a dictionary. Some things simply cannot be illustrated and defined in nice, neat little packages. The breadth of the term transcends your tabloid style, as does the term conservative.

If you had truly researched this topic, you would have found much more pertinent fodder with which to sling when attempting to degrade a term of which you know nothing.

Your columns so frustrate me with their lack of subject knowledge that I feel obliged to urge you to enlighten yourself so that at least your columns will have a destination.

GAY CONFERENCE

Not all Christians condemn homosexual lifestyle

Dear Editor,

I am writing to express my outrage at the column by John Hart concerning the Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society conference last weekend. I was a workshop leader and am a local member of the clergy.

What I experienced was people finding community and affirmation, as well as mutual support. I take exception with Mr. Hart's statement that "most (Christians) regard homosexuality as a sin." How many is most, Mr. Hart? I don't.

I find I am such a sinner, I don't have time to tell other people what's wrong with them. I only have time to tell people God's love is unconditional.

Anyone who wants to worship at First Presbyterian Church in Manhattan is welcome, especially members of the gay, lesbian and bisexual community. However, be forewarned. There are sinners in every pew, and every week a sinner will be in the pulpit. Sorry, Mr. Hart, we cannot all be as perfect as you.

Oh baby: Little One, remember what matters — like Dr. Seuss, leaving the seat down

Dear Mr. Garrison Kadau,

It seems a bit strange to me, writing a letter to a two-week-old infant and addressing it "Mr.," but since we've not been formally introduced, I thought we should start off polite.

Ever since I heard you'd been born, I've been trying to think of what I could do for you, or get for you, to mark the occasion. I mean, what does one get a newcomer to the planet? Directions to the White House? A six-pack of Miller's Genuine Draft?

How about, I thought to myself, a little inside information about being human? Yeah. How about some advice about what to do in this place that you've come to?

I'm sure your parents will teach you the major stuff you'll need to know. Like how to tie your shoes, not to play with matches and the art of wearing clean underwear. But I thought a few words should be spoken on behalf of the other team that will be raising you: the world.

Little One, it's a hard place. We're all selfish brutes when it comes right down to it, especially grown-ups. We forget important stuff like how to make snow angels and set that extra place at the dining table for our invisible friends. Yet, we remember insults made a 100 years past. We never forget how to destroy things: ourselves, others and even the planet, inch by inch.

Sometimes, we even forget we're all human. We forget to connect the dots to each other, seeing only the differences in our designs.

There are a few things that kind of even out all the suffering we feel and inflict. Small, yet endearing things like crayons, ice cream and Dr. Seuss that you'll discover in the next handful of years and then spend the rest of your life forgetting, like the rest of us.

There are other things, habits I've acquired that help me reconcile when I forget the better part of my humanity or when I see others forgetting theirs. I will now pass them on to you.

Learn to fall in love often. Not only with yourself and others, but with ideas and truths you discover.

Collect small, squishy things and large, hairy things. Keep them in your pocket or underneath your bed, depending on where your mother tends to check first.

Read Mother Goose.

Celebrate every national holiday like Arbor Day, Groundhog Day and Armistice Day. Always, always celebrate Flag Day.

Never leave bread or potatoes on top of the refrigerator. If you do, though, put them in a plastic bag and watch the pretty colors come out.

Learn a lot of Latin and use it in everyday conversation.

Flush and LEAVE THE SEAT DOWN!

Watch the movies made from classic books and then read the comic book version.

Habla español.

Check the oil.

If you see something weird, look twice. Then research it. You might not think it's so weird once you learn something about it.

Watch public television and the Discovery channel, especially at 3 in the morning when Bob Ross is on.

Have a pet from the animal shelter when you can pay to feed it yourself.

Save the elephants.

Make Superman capes out of dishtowels and tablecloths.

Don't kill ants.

Secrets eat holes. Don't keep them.

If you want to see blood, don't watch horror movies, watch the nightly news. That's bad enough.

Never be afraid to tell people they have something green hanging from one of their nostrils. Never, ever, be afraid to tell people you love them.

Gain weight.

Don't join a tape club. Records? CD's? What do you have in your day, anyway?

Be spontaneous. Immediately.

Keep a journal. That way, your kids will know what you were like when you were their age. They'll also know what their grandparents were like when they still had all their own teeth.

Most importantly, never, ever, keep your eyes closed for long. There's so much to see and do. See it. Do it.

These are just a few things that, like not coloring in the lines, you'll just have to discover the fun for yourself. To go against the grain of what the world tells you and explore, in the very depths of you, what you're made of — that is what it means to live well in this crazy, mixed-up existence.

Right now, you are only two weeks old. It would probably be an accomplishment to be able to keep from puking up half your dinner all over your dad's shoulder.

The funny part is, I doubt you will even pay attention to this letter when you're older. It is the nature of humans, you will discover, to ignore good advice.

May you be, Little One, a human being the world can aspire to be worthy of.

NETTERS FACE TWO TEAMS

K-State's women's tennis team will try to halt its two-game losing skid this weekend when it faces Michigan on Saturday and South Alabama on Sunday. The Wildcats lost to Arkansas (2-7) and Baylor (3-6) last weekend. The two matches will be played at the Wood Valley Country Club in Topeka. Competition gets underway at 1 p.m. on Saturday and 9 a.m. on Sunday.

Deryl Cunningham slam dunks against Kansas' Greg Ostertag and Sean Pearson during the K-State-Kansas game Feb. 12. The Cats lost to the Jayhawks, 65-56. K-State hopes to revenge that loss tonight during the first round of the Big Eight Tournament.

3 wins in 3 days = NCAA tourney

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Three wins in three days. In all likelihood, that is what separates K-State from a NCAA Tournament berth and a possible NIT bid.

"Everyone's goal is to be one of the 64 teams that goes to the tournament," said K-State coach Dana Altman, whose Wildcats posted a 17-11 overall and 4-10 mark in the league. "Now, we realize the only way we can get there is to win three games in three days."

That's a sizable task for a team that has fumbled seven of its last eight conference games.

"We haven't played that well defensively in the last two or three weeks in particular," Altman said. "That (the defense) was one of the reasons we were able to win some ballgames."

In the first six conference games of the season, the Cats averaged 66 points per game, while allowing 70 points a contest. Since then, K-State has given up 75.4 points to its competitors per game, while scoring 65.9 points an outing.

"We've still got a chance," he said. "We've still got to go to the conference tournament and swing away. It's not over yet."

The Cats, which drew a No. 6 seed in the Big Eight Tournament, will go against No. 3 Kansas at 8:20 p.m. today in Kemper Arena at Kansas City, Mo.

The Jayhawks have lost three of their last six Big Eight games but closed the regular season with three-straight wins, finishing 24-6 overall, 9-5 in the league.

If K-State drops its opening-round game to Kansas, an NIT bid is sure to follow. But Altman said the Cats are going to Kansas City prepared for a three-day stay.

"If the NIT happens, it happens," he said. "But our goal is to still go and play the conference tournament with a purpose, and that is to win three games."

The Cats have beaten the Jayhawks in two of their past three meetings. In K-State's drive to the Big Eight Tournament title game last year, the Cats knocked off the Jayhawks 74-67 in the semifinals. Missouri then upended K-State in the championship game, 68-56.

Altman said both K-State and Kansas should be inspired considering the intrastate rivalry.

"Any time we play Kansas, we hope there is some emotion," he said. "We don't match up that well with Kansas, but our players and our fans will get excited."

"I'm sure Kansas will get excited since we beat them last year. They are on a three-game winning streak and want to continue that going into their NCAA bid."

Kansas coach Roy Williams said the Hawks will have to contain senior Deryl Cunningham, who averages 10.8 points and 10.4 rebounds per conference game.

"For size, he is the best rebounder in the league," Williams said. "You need a plan to stop him. He gets a lot of second shots."

Altman faces a comparable problem in KU's Greg Ostertag, who averaged 12.5 points and 8.4 rebounds in the league this year.

"The glaring difference is their inside strength," Altman said. "When Greg Ostertag played so well the second time we played them, that made a big difference from the first game."

"I think they will really try to pound it inside."

Friday's contest will mark the 11th meeting between K-State and Kansas in the tournament, with the Cats capturing seven of those.

"We've got to re-group here quick and try to get a little run going in the tournament," Altman said. "We did it last year, and hopefully, this team will find a way to do the same thing."

"It's going to be a battle, we know that — an uphill battle."

INDOOR TRACK

3 athletes compete in NCAA meet

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Track coach Cliff Rovelto will take three athletes with him to Indianapolis for the NCAA Track and Field Championships.

Nicole Green, Ed Broxterman and Francis O'Neill all qualified to participate in the meet, which takes place in the Hoosier Dome this weekend.

"I feel if these athletes duplicate the performances which earned them a place in this meet, they all have a good chance of placing well," Rovelto said.

Green, who qualified in the 200-meter and the 400-meter races, has elected to participate only in the 400 meter because it would be too physically demanding to compete in both.

Rovelto said Green would have to run preliminaries of both races on Friday and the finals of the 200 meter — a total of three races in a single day.

The 400 meter appears to give

Green the best chance for all-American status. She goes into the race ranked third with a time of 53.79.

Competing in his first NCAA Championships in the high jump is sophomore Ed Broxterman. Broxterman cleared 7 feet or better in all but two meets this season.

"I'll be excited because it is such a big meet," Broxterman said. "I don't think I'll be any more nervous than a normal meet."

With a leap of 7' 3" inches at the Huskers Invitational, Broxterman placed ninth in the nation.

Francis O'Neill, a senior who qualified in the 3,000 meter, is accustomed to the pressure of the NCAA championships.

"I'm going into this race expecting to make it into the finals," O'Neill said.

O'Neill was the last competitor to make the field with his season-best time of 8:06.

FOOTBALL

Matsakis, Latimore return to alma mater as coaches

TREY JOHNSON
Collegian

K-State's newest assistant coach was not so much concerned about what title his new job would have than with who he would be working with.

Manny Matsakis, the Wildcats' special teams/tight ends coach, is returning to K-State to work with football coach Bill Snyder.

"The position I will be at is not the big thing for me," Matsakis said. "Working at Kansas State with Snyder was the deciding factor."

"You don't always get a chance to coach with somebody like Coach Snyder," Matsakis said. "So, the opportunity to come back here and work with Snyder was the reason I made the switch."

Matsakis had worked at K-State for three years prior to moving to Hofstra University in Hempstead, N.Y. Hofstra is an independent, Division-I AA school.

As the offensive coordinator for the Hofstra Flying Dutchmen, Matsakis ran an offense that averaged 400 yards in total offense and 26 points per game. He worked at Hofstra for three years.

Prior to his time at Hofstra, in 1988 he served as the special teams coordinator, at K-State. During the 1989 season, he was the assistant to the offensive coordinator.

During the 1990 season, Matsakis directed the receiving unit.

The move back to K-State allows Matsakis new opportunities to advance his career.

"This was an opportunity to get back into a 1-A school," Matsakis said. "I had done as much as could be done at the level of Hofstra."

The tight ends/special teams position became vacant when Nick Quartaro accepted the position of football coach at Fordham University.

"When Nick Quartaro got the job with Fordham, or just after he did, Coach Snyder gave me a call," Matsakis said.

"I had a tremendous job at Hofstra, but working with Snyder at Kansas State was a great opportunity," Matsakis said.

Also new to the K-State assistant coaching staff is Mo Latimore as the defensive line coach.

Latimore spent five years at Missouri before returning to K-State.

Latimore graduated from K-State in 1976 as a two-year letterman. While with the Wildcats as a player, Latimore was a first-team all-Big Eight and third-team all-America selection.

After playing with the New York Jets and the Canadian Football League's Calgary, Saskatchewan and Hamilton teams, he returned to K-State to coach.

Beginning as a graduate assistant in 1976-77, he progressed to offensive tackles and tight ends, outside linebacker coach and then assistant head coach in 1983.

In 1986, Latimore moved to Texas-El Paso where he coached with Bob Stull.

He moved with Stull to Missouri in 1989.

Latimore was the defensive tackles coach for Missouri.

Latimore replaces Nelson Barnes as defensive line coach. Barnes left K-State after the 1993 season to accept a position with Texas.

BATTLE FOR THE CROWN

Listed below is the bracket for the 1994 men's Big Eight Tournament, which is March 11-13 at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo. The K-State-Kansas game is the most-played series in the tournament, with the Wildcats winning seven out of 10.

SNIPPETS FOLLOW THAT BEE

Just like people who turn road maps to match the direction they're driving, bees appear to make sure their mental maps line up with the scene ahead. A new study says honey bees consistently face the same compass direction when they memorize locations of food and when they look for it later. Why? So that the view they see while searching will match the scene they memorized.

Bands combine heavy guitars, rap attitude

ANDREW TOMS
Collegian

Two Midwestern products of the fusion between rock and rap will play Saturday night at the Warehouse.

Recently relocated to Lawrence, headliners Billy Goat combine tribal rhythms with metal guitar licks and comedic, funky raps. The band's shows are very eclectic. Vocalist Kim Pruitt often breaks into native dance routines during the shows, and keyboardist Zac Baird adds a collection of fun samples.

Billy Goat's debut album from last year, "Bush Roaming Mammals," was produced by Talking Heads' Jerry Harrison.

The combination of unlikely bedfellows, rock and rap, dates back to when Run-DMC and Aerosmith got together on "Walk This Way" and the Beastie Boys released the multi-platinum "Licensed to Ill." The success of these combinations has led to a harder rap mainstream, as well as a host of regional acts exploring the same style.

In the same tradition of the Beasties comes opening band Slugworth, of Springfield, Mo. Slugworth adds a horn section to the punk-rap mix, giving some songs a ska feel. Slugworth is influenced by the heavy rap of House of Pain and Rage Against the Machine, as well as hard-rock guitar à la Soundgarden and Firehose.

Slugworth continues to be very popular in the Springfield scene, and the band epitomizes the affluent white-rap attitude found in the Beastie Boys.

Both bands feature extended lineups with horns or auxiliary percussion, so there should be something for everyone.

Ramones unleash cover compilation

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

Eighteen years ago, the Ramones released their first album, thereby liberating rock 'n' roll from the clutches of disco and glam.

Ever since "Let's Dance" appeared on that self-titled album, the Ramones have taken countless '50s and '60s songs and remade them in their own jackhammer-fast style.

Now, the band has released "Acid Eaters," an album made up solely of cover tunes paying homage to the artists who inspired the founding fathers of punk.

"Acid Eaters" kicks off with "Journey to the Center of the Mind," by Ted Nugent and the Amboy Dukes. From there on, things only get better.

The Ramones supply amped-up versions of the Stones' "Out of Time," Bob Dylan's "My Back Pages" and Creedence Clearwater Revival's "Have You Ever Seen the Rain." They even produce a surprisingly faithful remake of the Animals' "When I Was Young."

Pete Townshend took time to sit in and sing background vocals on "Substitute," although former porn queen Traci Lords' backing vocals on Jefferson Airplane's "Somebody to Love" steal the show.

The fun continues right on through the final track, Jan and Dean's "Surf City" — done in the tradition of "California Sun" and "Surfing Bird."

DEAR CASSIE,

Duveaux

Reader awe-struck by waterbed woman

Dear Cassandra,

I'm smitten — the golden-haired object of my nocturnal emissions is an older, but albeit not more mature, woman of celluloid persuasion. Persuasion of the commercial kind, that is. For this beauty is nothing more than a vision on my TV screen every night. I speak of course of the American Waterbed commercial queen. Her mesmerizing hair flip and her intoxicating, velvety voice create warm waves of passion in my heating coil.

What should I do?

Sincerely yours,
Water-wed

Dear Water-wed,

I know the woman of whom you speak. It's funny, but I never knew that was a waterbed commercial. I am in such awe when she floats across the screen that I never noticed what she is advertising. I thought it was a public-service message for those of us women who do not believe we can have beautiful, golden-blond hair.

I think it is pretty clear what you need to do — seek her out. She is not simply a vision of yours but of most of northeastern Kansas. You could bring her back to Manhattan for us all to see. We could give her a parade. The diseased and the sick could touch her hair and be healed.

Or you could throw a brick through your television and pick up a good book and start reading more. Try "Sleeping Beauty."

We just couldn't do it

If we really wanted to, we could run another damaged-penis story here, but we're really getting kind of sick of printing these things.

Think about it. If you count the story that turned up this week, that's five stories about detached genitals in only two months. And those are only the ones we hear about.

From now on, we are not going to mention anything of these disturbing matters. Perhaps the culprits of this trend are feeding on the publicity we give them, sort of like Fred Phelps.

So, you will have to go forever without knowing what happens when 16 beers, a pair of scissors and a pair of testicles get together for a night of fun.

Take your pick: weak gun-control laws or a lunatic with a guillotine

A Bridgeport, Conn., man who cut off his trigger finger in front of the state capitol says he'd like to see the state do the same thing to criminals who use guns.

But Joel Gonzalez says he's not crazy.

"A lot of people are using the term 'crazy,'" Gonzalez said Wednesday. "But the people who are crazy are those ... who don't do anything and just let people be killed."

Gonzalez, 29, used a homemade guillotine and a hammer to slice off his left index finger Tuesday in a protest against what he says is ineffective gun-control legislation.

He was taken to a hospital but refused to allow doctors to reattach his finger.

"Why would I cut it off if I was going to reattach it?" he said.

Wasn't there a Stephen King movie about this?

When Mary Bratcher of Artesia, N.M., ran over her dog, the consensus in the family was that Brownie was dead. So, they buried him in a field.

But Bratcher's 3-year-old son, Toby, refused to believe it.

"Brownie not dead," the boy said. Brownie didn't believe it either.

The following afternoon, when the family returned from a trip, Brownie was on the porch, covered in dirt.

The mixed-breed dog had lost an eye and broken a shoulder in the accident, but he was very much alive.

"He was real cold, and he wasn't breathing real good — it freaked me out big-time," Mary Bratcher said. "I didn't want my kids to see him."

The Bratchers have since renamed the dog Lazarus.

It must have been one hell of a walk to the TV

That silly little remote control sure can arouse some strong emotions in people.

A 65-year-old woman in Newark, N.J., was convicted of reckless manslaughter Monday for fatally shooting her husband during a fight over the location of their television's remote control.

Ellen Gartland could face up to 10 years in prison for the shooting.

Gartland testified during the trial that she and her 64-year-old husband, John, had been drinking at a bar before the shooting. The two went home to discover the remote control was missing.

"Her husband demanded to know where the remote was, and apparently they couldn't locate it," Edward Gordon, county prosecutor, said.

Then he reached down and touched my ... zzzzz

... oh, where was I?

A Cincinnati woman who faints when she hears sex-related words passed out repeatedly in court Tuesday.

She was trying to describe how she allegedly was sexually assaulted by a man who knew of her disability.

The woman claims her assailant uttered the word "sex" and then molested her while she was unconscious.

As she described the alleged assault, she fainted four times.

WEEKEND MIXING IT UP

Shaken or stirred?

That is just one of the questions facing a bartender on the average evening at the workplace.

The job does not simply consist of throwing drinks around while flirting with the customers.

A class sponsored by Association of Collegiate Entrepreneurs and Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon tried to teach the fine and not-so-fine arts of working as a bartender.

"I've been a bartender for five years," Marvin Peck, bartender and class instructor, said. "I worked at Kite's for a year and then moved here to Rusty's."

"I've taught this class three times, and the last time was a year ago. Last time I had so many people in the class, I had to run three sessions a day."

A bartender has to set up the bar prior to opening, keep it properly stocked, serve the drinks and then clean it all up at the end of the night as the drunks are staggering home.

The best way to actually improve as a bartender is to work as one in an operating bar, but a class structure can help get a person started, Peck said.

"I could give you a book, and you could look at it for weeks, and you still won't know the stuff until you use it," Peck said.

As part of the class, students were able to practice making drinks. Those who were 21 and over were able to get hands-on experience pouring drinks.

"Just sitting in a classroom and having recipes told to you would be boring," Peck said. "So, I figure putting people behind the bar is a lot more interesting, and they'll learn a lot more."

Peck's class was aimed at a person aspiring to work in a bar targeted toward college students, but he also gave tips for other watering holes.

"If you pour a beer at a 45-degree angle, you won't get as much head on the top," Peck said. "If you put head on the beer, people figure they are getting cheated out of beer. Especially college students. You know how college students are."

The three class sessions, March 1, 8 and 10, ranged in topic from how to cut fruit to make flags, the piece that goes on the rim of a glass, and wedges, the pieces put into the bottle, to making shots and how to deal with people. People taking the class received a bartending guide, a T-shirt, a certificate of completion and experience.

Most class instruction was delivered in short anecdotes by Peck. Facts and formulas were tempered with stories about working in a bar and dealing with people.

One problem facing a bartender is a customer complaining a drink is too weak or too strong.

"Make your drinks consistent. That way both bartenders in a bar will serve similar drinks. If one guy is serving all liquor and a little mix, and the other is all mixer and a splash of liquor — it'll really piss off your customers."

One reason some drinks may be stronger than others is because some bartenders free pour. A free pour is simply pouring the liquor into the glass or shaker without using a shot glass as a measuring device.

"A lot of places use free pour,

and bosses

like that,"

Peck

said.

"If I use a shot glass, people

know

I am being honest to my boss,

and they know

my customers aren't being cheated."

Customer service is important in a bar because if the customers are unhappy with the drink or the service they can go elsewhere.

"When you work behind the bar, don't just stand there watching the beer coming out of the tap while other customers are waiting," Peck said.

"Pour the beer and at the same time take the customer's money and then get the next order while you handing the beer out," he said.

"If you make a bad drink, there is a chance that customer may tell a bunch of other people," Peck said. "But if you make a good drink, most likely they won't tell anyone. That's just how it goes."

Sometimes a lack of knowledge on how to make every drink in the world can be offset by the ability to interact well with the customers.

"Service is just as important as the drinks," Peck said. "Half the reason I'm still here is I'm good with the people. You need to be able to put on a face and deal with bad customers."

Making the customer happy is important, but so is the bottom line. Bars are not philanthropies operating out of the goodness of their hearts for the college crowd. Bars are also businesses.

"The name of the game is to pour as little as you can and make as much money as you can," Peck said.

"Every bar has what they call 'well liquors.' These are the cheaper ones. If a person asks for a rum and Coke™, I'm not going to give them Bacardi unless they ask for it. I'll give them a cheaper rum that will work just as well, but that cost us a lot less."

"That is how the business works. It doesn't matter, because the end effect for the customer is the same.

"You need to order what you want."

A well liquor costs less, so it is used more often by bars. Call drinks are a higher level of liquor (Jack Daniels, Wild Turkey), followed by premiums (Tanqueray) and finally super premiums (Crown Royal).

Part of the class was spent learning how to make shots and other more exotic drinks.

"To layer drinks you just have to tilt the glass and pour in the liquor," Peck said. "The heavier liquors will sink to the bottom, and the lighter liquor will sit on top. If you pour the liquid against something like a spoon or a cherry, it won't splash down and get mixed up."

Shots are a main component of the drink selection at a college bar, so Peck spent a great deal of time on their preparation.

"First off, use a well liquor — not a good one," Peck said. "In a shot you can't tell the difference. Make your shots just like you would a mixed drink because most shots can be drinks also."

"Shots are done over ice and then shaken or turned over. Then they are strained into a shot glass to get the ice out," he said.

Response to the teaching was positive by class members.

"I'm already waitressing and working behind a bar at times," Sheila Horinek, sophomore undecided, said. "This will help me out when I get behind the bar next time, so I don't have to ask so many questions."

"I didn't learn as much as I thought I would, but it has been a lot of fun," she said.

Pam Smith, junior in interior design and an ACE member, said the class has been done in the past as a fund-raising event for ACE.

"I think we'll offer this again in the fall and spring next year," Smith said. "We may do the class again this semester if the response is there. We would like to do it if we can."

"Doing this class is legal, even if the students are under 21. If Rusty (Wilson) doesn't have a problem with this, and Marvin doesn't have a problem with this, then people don't need to be worried about the ABC (Alcoholic Beverage Control)," she said.

Peck seemed more interested in the chance of conducting another bartending class this semester.

"I might do this on my own before it gets too busy here at Rusty's in April," Peck said. "That way I can do my own stuff in the class and at my own pace."

"If you make a bad drink, there is a chance that a customer may tell a bunch of other people."

Project to be put to a vote comes, Student Senate will be forced to become fiscally responsible, and that's good in the long run."

Student Senate also looked into other student fee issues.

Senate passed a bill that will place a question concerning the establishment of a Union Expansion student fee on the regular student government elections ballot in April.

Students are asked if they would support a Union enhancement fee that would be set at $25 per semester for full-time students and $12.50 per semester for part-time students for the next 26 years.

Because this fee deals with construction, Dave Frese, student body vice president, said it has to be approved by 60 percent of the students who vote before taking effect.

The project would cost $9.2 million with the current plans, Frese said. The Union probably needs about $30 million, but the $9.2 million finances one-third of it, he said.

"Times are tough, and they're only going to get tougher. The situation in the Union is bad," Frese said. "There is not only an opportunity but also a need for enhancement."

Matt Schweer, agriculture senator, said while he is in favor of the union expansion, he wants students to be aware of and educated about the fee increase.

"I'm for the student vote," Schweer said. "I hope that students are fully informed of the fact that they're looking at a $25 increase. It's their decision."

Republicans wait on grand jury

Ethics, Stupid." "Shred No More" and "Fess Up."

Administration officials were drawn into the Whitewater investigation last week by the disclosure that Clinton's aides were briefed on the probe by federal regulators, raising questions about whether it could have been compromised.

On Capitol Hill, Senate Republicans demanding a separate congressional investigation said they were willing to let the grand jury hear evidence for several months before they would insist on their public hearings.

The disclosure of the White House contacts with regulators came in congressional testimony by Deputy Treasury Secretary Roger

C. Altman, one of the four Treasury officials under subpoena, responded to a question by saying he had had one substantive discussion with White House officials about the Whitewater matter.

The New York Times reported in Thursday's editions that there were at least two additional contacts, including one last month in which Altman spoke with a senior White House official about whether he should excuse himself from the Whitewater case.

The Times did not identify its sources, or the senior official. It quoted Howard Schloss, a Treasury Department representative, as saying Altman told the Senate Banking Committee he had only one substantive conversation.

pro-life people would call in to jam the phone lines and make appointments preventing other people from getting in," Cozzarelli said.

"We would have about 80 percent of the women not show up."

While most demonstrations were not violent, sometimes the protesters get destructive on the clinic grounds, she said.

Many clinics hire security guards and install security systems with surveillance cameras to keep the picketers out of the facilities.

Cozzarelli's study also showed the more intense the protest was, the less effect the escorts had on the patients.

One student, who went to the speech for her Womens' Studies class, said she didn't realize the specifics of abortion protests.

"That was a very interesting study," Amy Miley, sophomore undecided, said. "I didn't even realize there were escorts provided at the clinics or the psychological effects the protesters caused on the women."

GOP pushes Clinton for Whitewater explanation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Following the first lady's lead in damage control, White House counsel Lloyd Cutler predicted Sunday the Whitewater affair will turn out to be nothing at all.

Republicans pushed harder for hearings, with a GOP senator questioning the president's truthfulness.

And the former owner of a failed Arkansas thrift at the center of the federal investigation said President Clinton is guilty of committing no crime.

James McDougal, who co-owned the Whitewater Development Corp. with the Clintons, said Hillary Rodham Clinton is guilty of nothing, other than "poor bookkeeping."

Cutler was named special counsel last week to temporarily replace Bernard Nussbaum, who resigned under pressure after revelations of private White House briefings with Treasury Department officials. The White House was told about a confidential investigation into McDougal's thrift, Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, and its ties to Whitewater.

Hitting three network talk shows, Cutler made his debut as the point man for the White House Whitewater strategy: Concede to mistakes that gave the appearance of a cover up, argue that the Clintons were actually totally forthcoming and resist congressional hearings.

"At least as far as even a breath of criminal activity by either the president and the first lady, it will turn out to be nothing at all," Cutler said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Hillary Clinton sounded the new theme Saturday, telling news magazines that she made the mistake of trying to withhold details about Whitewater to protect her family's privacy. The interviews with Time and Newsweek were designed to boost her popularity, which dropped while she remained silent about the affair.

"I really have been pulled kicking and screaming to the conclusion that if you choose to run for public office, you give up any zone of privacy at all," she told Newsweek.

Republicans were unbending in their demand for congressional hearings. Taking the most extreme line, Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., mocked Clinton for saying he did not know who tipped him to the confidential federal inquiry.

"I find it difficult to understand how it is if you're mentioned in a criminal referral that you wouldn't remember who told you and when they told you," he told NBC. "Are we to believe that Mr. and Mrs. Clinton weren't advised?"

At first saying he had no idea who told him, Clinton told reporters last week that adviser Bruce Lindsey probably informed him about the probe. Aides insist Lindsey passed on only what It's that hand-pressing, baby-kissing time of year.

The student body presidential race kicked off Friday in Union Station when Stacy Dalton, junior in marketing, and her running mate, Dale Silvius, senior in management, declared their candidacy.

Dalton and Silvius said they want students to create their platform.

"We don't want to make up issues to run on," Silvius said. "We want to follow up on issues students want."

The candidates said they would like more emphasis placed on teacher evaluations, including making the results of evaluations available to students.

"Faculty have not been responsive to the ideas of students," Dalton said.

The University should move to merit pay for teachers, she said.

Dalton said she was upset at the proposed increases in parking fines for next semester.

Silvius said he would like a separate parking sticker made available for students who like to drive to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex but don't park on campus.

"We think it would cut down on a lot of parking tickets," Dalton said.

Dalton, who was a member of the Union traveling team that visited area unions, said she would appoint a special cabinet member to deal with the Union renovation.

►EMPORIA STATE STUDENT DIES IN DIVING ACCIDENT

PALM BEACH, Fla. — A 23-year-old Kansas college student drowned during a weekend scuba diving trip about a half-mile offshore.

After a two-hour search in choppy waters Friday, authorities retrieved the body of Timothy J. Steadman, an Emporia State University student who was working for Walt Disney World in Orlando.

Steadman, of Cottonwood Falls, was reported missing from the Aquatic Diver, a commercial diving boat, about 2:15 p.m. Friday. He was with a group of 20 who were diving in 65 feet of water near a reef, Palm Beach County Sheriff Sgt. Craig Wiles said.

Some of the divers, including Steadman, were beginners, but there were also instructors with the group, Wiles said. At least six of the divers were paramedics.

►NAACP WANTS ACTION OVER WICHITA SHOOTING

WICHITA — The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People wants the Justice Department to investigate the death of a 24-year-old man in a shoot-out with Wichita police.

James Crump, president of the Wichita branch of the NAACP, said Saturday an investigation by the organization determined that Officer Terry Fetteke violated the civil rights of Franchot C. Mitchell.

Crump said the group also believes the officer used unnecessary and excessive force when he shot Mitchell 16 times after a traffic stop on Feb. 1.

Chinese dissidents retained during visit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — As Secretary of State Warren Christopher discussed human rights with Chinese leaders on Sunday, police kept up close surveillance of dissidents.

At least 17 dissidents have been picked up by police over the past two weeks, and some remain in custody. Four foreign reporters who met with dissidents were detained for up to six hours.

In Shanghai, dissident Yang Zhou was held for two nights by police and released Sunday morning. Yang said about 10 police came to his home and took him and a friend to the local police station. The friend was released after six hours.

"They are afraid I will have contacts" with other people, Yang said. "This is a silent warning."

In Beijing, police released activist Xin Hong on Sunday, but told her she would have to report all her activities to the police.

Xin was taken from her home by about eight police officers Saturday after she wrote a letter to the national legislature supporting direct elections and human rights.

Bill would give bars defense against illegitimate IDs

MIKE HIND
Collegian

A bill being considered in the House Federal State Affairs Committee may take some of the heat off bar owners for underage-drinking violations.

It also will increase the minimum fine for minor-in-possession violators from $100 to $200 dollars.

The bill passed the Senate earlier in the session with a 39-1 vote.

It was introduced by Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, along with other state senators from college towns.

Right now if a person is 19 and has a good fake ID that shows the person is 21, the bar owner has no defense, Oleen said.

"No bar owner has ever had a fine lifted," Oleen said. "Until now, bars have not had a defense."

Under the bill, consideration is given to a bar owner who allowed a minor to drink after the minor presented an apparently legitimate identification card that showed the minor was at least 21 years old.

Jim Conant, chief administrative officer of the Alcoholic Beverage Control, said bars will in some way have to show the ID was checked.

The bill doesn't say or recommend how IDs should be checked, but some bars have begun videotaping IDs, and others have taken them at the door, Conant said.

"We hope this will cause some creative procedures to be put in place to validate ID checks," Conant said.

Jef Mindrup, owner of Berlin in Aggieville, said he is in favor of the new bill, and his bar takes minors' IDs at the door.

"I'm responsible for everyone in here," Mindrup said. "We want minors to come here — they add a lot of energy to the dance floor, but we can't allow them to drink. All minors should be responsible for their actions. If we had a hundred minors, the only way we could keep track of them is if we had a hundred employees."

"I really think the law is unfair right now," Mindrup said. "All the responsibility is on us. I've worked in about 15 different states, and Kansas is the toughest on bar owners."

"In most cases when we catch a minor in the bar with a drink, we take the drink and report them to the police," Mindrup said. "There are some exceptions. In some cases, they might be holding their friend's drink who is in the bathroom or something like that."

Bob Leetch, owner of Lucky BrewGrille, agreed the bill is a good idea.

"We'll take any leniency we can get," Leetch said.

Leetch said it seemed as if a large portion of MIPs handed out in the state were in Aggieville. He added that in all likelihood the large number of MIPs was due to Aggieville's high bar concentration.

"In one respect, it seems unfair that we are hit hard, but at the same time, some responsibility should fall on the bar owner," Leetch said.

"We run a tight bar," Leetch said. "Sometimes, we will pick up 20 fake IDs a night."

3RD ATTACK ON HEATHROW DESPITE SECURITY

LONDON — Mortar explosions shook Heathrow Airport on Sunday. It was the third attack at the airport in less than a week.

Police said no planes were landing or taking off at the time of the explosions, and there were no reports of injuries or damage.

The attack came despite a dramatic increase in security at the airport, including armed police patrols ordered after two similar attacks. The Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility for one of the earlier attacks.

Initial investigations showed four mortars were fired from an undeveloped area southwest of the airport, and one struck a corner of Terminal Four, the BBC reported.

Police would only confirm finding two metal cylinders near the terminal.

Terminal 4 was evacuated and the southern runway closed, an airport official said.

The British Airways catering center was evacuated before the explosion, after its security office received a telephone call warning that a bomb would go off in 30 minutes. Workers dressed in white coats and hats shivered in a parking lot.

News organizations and police also received warnings shortly before the explosions.

David Tucker, commander of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist branch, announced Friday that patrols had been stepped up around Heathrow following the first attack last Wednesday, but he said keeping tabs on the entire area was a mammoth task.

85-YEAR-OLD DIES IN CAR CHASE

SAN JOSE, Ill. — An 85-year-old man who died in a car crash after leading police on a high speed chase was carrying his life savings of more than $100,000 in the car, authorities said.

Patey E. Simmons of Carthage was seen speeding through San Jose, and when police tried to stop him he fled at speeds of up to 100 mph, authorities said.

The chase ended at 12:17 a.m. Friday when Simmons' car flipped over and landed on its roof.

He died from head injuries several hours later at St. Francis Medical Center in Peoria.

It was not known where Simmons was going or where he had just been. He had his life savings with him — $7,500 in his wallet and $102,000 in a locked box in his car.

FIGHT OVER RIVER STILL GOING

GARDEN CITY — The dispute between Kansas and Colorado over Arkansas River water continues, despite a special master's ruling last month that Kansas is owed millions in damages because of water loss.

At stake for water-poor farms and towns in southwestern Kansas which have depended on the Arkansas is nothing less than survival.

"Winning this deal means everything to us," Henry Gillan Jr., a Garden City area farmer said. "I've been watching that river dry up for 40 years, knowing something was wrong. Now that it looks like the courts are going to back us up. We've got hope for the future."

Kerrigan's troubles with her public image began after her performance in the Winter Games.

VETS CANCEL PARADE BECAUSE OF HOMOSEXUALS

BOSTON — Organizers of the city's annual St. Patrick's Day parade made it official Saturday that they will cancel next week's parade to protest a court order allowing gays and lesbians to march.

"They're not going to shove something down our face that's not our traditional values," John "Wacko" Hurley, president of the South Boston Allied War Veterans Council, said.

Gay marchers would also be excluded when the parade resumes next year, he said.

But Mayor Thomas M. Menino has said the city will sponsor the Madama Butterfly, played by Geraldine McMillian, and her maid Suzuki, played by Helen Yu, are excited about the arrival of Butterfly's husband's ship after her husband's three-year absence. The New York Opera National Company performed the opera Friday night in McCain Auditorium.

'Madama Butterfly' touches audience

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

A sell-out crowd at McCain Auditorium gave a long, well-deserved standing ovation for the New York City Opera Company's powerful performance of "Madama Butterfly" Friday night.

A sell-out crowd at McCain Auditorium gave a long, well-deserved standing ovation for the New York City Opera Company's powerful performance of "Madama Butterfly" Friday night.

Giacomo Puccini's extraordinary, tragic opera is about a Japanese geisha girl who marries a U.S. Navy lieutenant, only to see him desert her. It had a heart-wrenching effect on the audience. The show ends with the poor, used Butterfly giving up her child and killing herself.

Geraldine McMillian, playing the title role, was quite impressive. Her voice was gripping, and she was every inch the sweet, innocent Butterfly. The transition from innocence to the tragic figure at the end was convincing.

Butterfly may well be one of the hardest roles in opera. She must stay on stage throughout the entire performance — that alone commands great attention. Butterfly also experiences both great joy and great sorrow, so her vocal range is extremely difficult.

By the curtain's last fall, it was hard not to be sympathetic to Butterfly. Her death was an expected, but unwanted moment.

Michael Hayes played the role of Butterfly's suitor, B.F. Pinkerton. Hayes was wonderful, bringing heart to the heartless character.

The love scene between the two at the close of Act I was entrancing. The music Puccini composed to express the love between Pinkerton and Butterfly is probably some of his best material. The strings overpowered the scene at first, and then the orchestra worked itself into a rapture to mirror the love and affection on stage.

Helen Yu gave a substantial performance as Suzuki, Butterfly's housemaid. Most of the time, however, her subtle voice was drowned out by the powerful orchestra.

Robert Perry played Sharpless, the American consul in Nagasaki, Japan. Perry's voice carried throughout McCain — it was by far the surest voice in the cast.

The music was integral to the evening. Joseph Colaneri conducted the orchestra excellently. At times, it was easy to close your eyes and drift off into the music.

It is no coincidence that some of the music recalls Japan. Puccini purposely loaded the show with hints of the Orient. Traditional Japanese melodies are used to bring authenticity the show, but these tunes are not merely thrown in under a thin veneer. Puccini adapted them into his own, very western style.

The opera company was thorough in everything it accomplished. The sets were creatively perfect. The large Japanese pavilion was so life-like it did not appear flimsy, as most touring companies' sets do.

In the height of the flu season, the audience maintained relative composure throughout the three-act, three-hour opera. It wasn't hard. The show pulls the audience into its melodic, emotional world — time was of no importance.

One hundred years after Puccini composed "Madama Butterfly," it is still touching fresh audiences. It definitely touched Manhattan.

K-State graduate returns as vet dean

TED ELLET
Collegian

A K-State alumnus has been named the new dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Dr. Ronald Marler, who received his bachelor's, doctor of veterinary medicine and doctoral degrees from K-State, will begin his new duties July 1.

"I'm tremendously excited. It's a great opportunity, both personally and professionally," Marler said.

"I hope we'll be able to take the college to the next level," he said.

Marler succeeds Dr. Michael Lorenz, who announced last year that he will resign this summer.

Marler has been vice president of global drug safety with Marion Merrell Dow Inc. since April 1993.

"He understands the culture and how to leverage its strengths. He relates to the people and understands how the high-plains region works," Jim Coffman, K-State provost, said.

Marler said his pride in being a K-State graduate makes his appointment even more rewarding.

After receiving his doctorate of veterinary medicine in 1973, Marler was an instructor in the Department of Surgery and Medicine, now called the Department of Clinical Sciences. Following two years of Army service, he returned to K-State as an instructor of pathology until 1978.

"I've been away from K-State since 1978. It's like coming home," Marler said.

There are three goals he said he hopes to accomplish as the dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Marler said he plans on looking at the quality of teaching in the college.

He also said he wants to focus on research as well as the diagnostic lab.

"Everything is good now, but I think my ideas will bring the college to an even higher level," Marler said.

"I also hope to teach. I realize that my primary focus will be to provide leadership, but I hope academia will also be a part of my position," Marler said.

Jewish extremists banned to protect Palestinians

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — The Israeli Cabinet voted Sunday to ban two Jewish extremist groups, using anti-terrorist laws that since 1960 have been used only against Palestinians.

The Cabinet declared the groups Kach and Kahane Lives, both inspired by the anti-Arab fervor of the late Rabbi Meir Kahane, to be terrorist organizations.

The Jewish settler who gunned down at least 30 Muslim worshippers in a Hebron mosque on Feb. 25 was a Kahane disciple.

Sunday's vote was an attempt to meet Palestinian demands for protection of the 1.8 million Palestinians in the occupied territories from settler attacks.

The PLO has insisted on better protection before talks on implementing Palestinian autonomy in the territories can resume.

The ban makes belonging to the organizations or raising money for them punishable by jail, according to a statement by Attorney General Michael Ben-Yair.

"Any organization carrying the goals of those organizations, which includes the establishment of a theocracy in the biblical land of Israel and the violent expulsion of Arabs from that land will also be considered a terror organization," the statement said.

The organizations are expected to appeal the ban to the Supreme Court.

Activist Baruch Marzel, who is in hiding after the government issued detention orders against him and four other Kach members, told Israel army radio that Kach would continue its activities under a different name if it was banned.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

No vote on Partnership unfair to students

A neutral stance on the Partnership for Excellence is not in your best interest as a K-State student.

Student senators were elected to serve the students of K-State and be representatives for students throughout the state. They aren't living up to that obligation regarding the Partnership for Excellence proposal.

In a nutshell, the partnership would increase tuition at Kansas Board of Regents' schools by 29 percent over three years. A percentage of the tuition increase would be used to increase lagging faculty salaries.

Student governing bodies at Fort Hays State University, Pittsburg State University, Emporia State University and Wichita State University have all voted to oppose the proposed partnership. The University of Kansas has voted to support the proposal.

What has the Student Senate at K-State done? Nothing. Officially, the students of K-State have no opinion on a 29-percent increase in tuition to increase faculty salaries.

Student senators have had ample opportunity to vote to support or oppose the partnership since the issue came up last summer. Each time, they took no action on the issue.

They also have attempted to put it to a student vote. A plebiscite vote proposal was rejected, and a proposal to put the issue to referendum was taken off the agenda.

You voted for these student senators to represent you. A neutral stance is not in your best interest as a student at K-State. State legislators also are elected to serve you, their constituents.

We urge you to contact your state legislators and let them know how you feel about the Partnership for Excellence. Unless you make that call, you, as a K-State student, have no voice.

Call state legislators and let them know your opinion on the Partnership for Excellence.

Discipline hardly around anymore

Decades ago, conductor Arturo Toscanini brought beautiful music performed by the NBC Orchestra into the homes of listeners across America.

He was so concerned about noise from the studio audience that he insisted concert programs be printed on cloth so that the sounds of turning pages would not defile the broadcasts.

When Leopold Stokowski, the legendary Philadelphia Symphony conductor featured in the Disney film "Fantasia," premiered a new work, he would often make the orchestra repeat the piece until he was satisfied with audience response. One irate conductor stopped in the middle of a performance at New York's Carnegie Hall to ask one rude concert-goer, "Would you mind if we held a concert during your conversation?"

A recent event at a K-State orchestra concert brings these events to mind. Conductors have long had to deal with the uncouth listener and the noises caused by audiences. The fact that maestro David Littrell only turned around to remind the guardian of the noisy baby to be considerate seems extremely tasteful on his part. Conducting batons are terrific projectiles, and I, as a musician, often fantasized in the middle of a performance about the baton hurling directly toward the baby with whom my performing group was competing.

Knee-jerk reactions aside, it becomes clear with little sober thought that the problem is not the child but is, of course, the adult with the child. After all, those little bundles of id we call children know no better. Those who do must be reminded by adults to act the way they are expected to act. At concerts, movies, weddings and other social gatherings, I have noticed a sharp increase, in my 23 years of life, in how often we are expected to put up with squalling kids while the parents just wait it out.

I remember being a child and having my mother put her hand over my mouth as I cried or talked out loud to myself in church. If I cried, she took me to the nursery. If I talked, she reminded me what would happen to me after church if I kept talking, which was very effective. This technique, oh negligent parents, is often called discipline. (I feel the need to explain discipline because our world has so little of it.)

My wife teaches music at Manhattan Middle School. During her concerts, I have heard parents talking out loud to each other during songs while other children walk around from seat to seat to talk to friends. These parents apparently know nothing about concert etiquette which is only a variation of what should happen at any formal public gathering: SHUT UP when the person or people on stage are talking, dancing, playing or singing and SIT STILL. That seems too much for some people.

It seems the baby-boomer generation wants to have its cake and eat it too. Some people in this generation expect to be able to have as many kids as they want, expect the government to pay for their health care, expect their employers to pay for their daycare and expect you and me to deal with their temperaments in every public setting imaginable.

In New York, that city whose government is determined to prove progressiveness and pragmatism are mutually exclusive, it's now illegal to bar a child, accompanied or not, from any public exhibition. While I'm sure exceptions are made for places where R- and X-rated movies and materials are shown, children now are allowed to wander about among priceless works of art, in retail stores and anywhere else, without adult supervision.

It's considered ageism to treat these children as children. Again, though, it was the adults who fought for the passage of this ordinance.

Adults must realize no one legally forces women to have children (men know it is up to the woman to decide whether to have a child they fathered and have no abortion or adoption "choices" because those decisions are made by mothers.) We live where you are free to have as many children as you wish, but you must be responsible for them.

We can't be expected to parent other people's children. Schools are often unfortunately doing just that these days, with parents often caring but unable to raise their own children. Parents don't seem to understand that when they don't take care of their children, it burdens the rest of us.

I, for one, take it upon myself to correct both rude parents and unruly children when the quality of my experiences are diminished. I simply tell the children what is appropriate. The parents are the ones who deserve the scolding because they should know better.

MARLETT'S WORLD

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said Monday he had been unaware of two White House meetings in which his advisers discussed the Whitewater investigation with Treasury Department officials involved in the case. Clinton forcefully defended himself, saying he was sure she had done nothing wrong.

At a White House news conference dominated by the Whitewater investigation, Clinton said the White House was cooperating fully with investigators and scoffed at Republican comparisons with Watergate.

"There will not be a cover-up. There will not be an abuse of office in this White House," Clinton said, defending his conduct both as president and as Arkansas governor, when most of the episodes under investigation took place. "We're

Kerrigan clubbing just example of society's obsession with success

By the time this column goes to press, another chapter will have been written, another episode unfolded in the perplexing, real-life soap opera of Nancy Kerrigan and Tonya Harding.

Minutely investigated and zealously reported by an over-enthusiastic media to a country that seems to relish and revel in every detail of this bizarre story, the entire drama has now captured the attention of novelists and moviemakers, too.

Surely, this is not the last one will read or hear about this incident, and as each chapter is written with more actors appearing on this real-life stage, the twists and turns in this story are certain to put many a TV soap to shame.

It is quite surprising that one 3-foot-long club, a partly damaged knee and the sordid details that followed created greater earth-shattering news and occupied more air time than the 6.6 earthquake that literally rocked Los Angeles.

Well, in this case the knee belonged to a famous figure skater on her way to national and Olympic glory, and the club was allegedly remote controlled by the not-so-famous competitor who believed only she could be the first lady of figure skating.

This is not merely the saga of two individuals — one, a beautiful damsel in distress with the girl-next-door image whom everybody now loves, and the other, the already convicted witch with more than just skating to write about, whom everybody loves to hate.

This drama has more to do with the society in which we live, its underlying principles and the moral and ethical values we gather from it. It has to do with a society that is obsessed with success and will go any length to achieve it. It has to do with a society that recognizes only one position — the top.

We, unfortunately, live in a media-hyped and media-controlled age that makes it clear all that matters is the No. 1 spot — who cares for runners-up?

In today's society, success has become an issue of such vital importance that one seeks short cuts to reach the top. Sadly, our culture has become synonymous with violence and brutality — both on the street and in the house, and no crime seems too big if one can personally gain from it.

How else can one explain the manner in which a single blow could change not merely the world of ice skating, but the world of sports — and that, too, for the worse?

And though, without the semblance of a doubt, this shocking incident is deplorable and warrants the harshest criticism, it has merely become a way of life.

Whether it is in the classroom or the sports arena, profession or business, one is always under pressure to perform. From teachers to coaches, parents to bosses, the emphasis is to win, and win big.

One wrong move, a moment's lapse of concentration, a solitary mistake, and everything is lost.

As one car maker puts it — you either lead, follow or get out of the way. Well, in this TV- and tabloid-ruled society, in the age of networks and cable, if you want to be in business, you'd better lead (even if it means getting others out of the way) because the world only recognizes a winner.

In this crazy and senseless rush to the top, somewhere along the path, we have forgotten the values and virtues that govern human life and maintain human sanity. We have become so dependent on the media and what they tell us, it seems, we have lost our most important quality — the ability to think straight and decide with responsibility.

We have uncaringly thrown sportsmanship and fair play out the window. Thus, this remote-controlled club did not nearly shatter the Olympic dream, everlasting glory and a place under the sun for an athlete, it merely represented the lengths one would go to achieve success. This entire unfinished drama has definitely proven it is not only the survival of the fittest but of the craftiest.

What message this incident has sent to youngsters and teen-agers in various fields is something only time will answer.

What message society is sending to these future leaders, sports personalities, policy makers and others, we can only surmise. It seems to be telling them: Go out and win, and do it at any cost — though silver and bronze may be good, it is only gold that glitters.

U.N. calls off Serb raid order

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — U.S. aerial gunships prepared to strike at Bosnian Serbs firing at French troops, but the raid was called off Sunday after the Serb guns fell silent and bad weather obscured the target.

The attack order, coming less than two weeks after NATO planes shot down four Bosnian Serb fighter-bombers, demonstrated U.N. resolve to protect U.N. ground troops.

The decision to rescind the strike after the Serbs stopped firing also showed NATO sought to avoid confrontation.

In Vienna, Austria, the Muslim-led Bosnian government and Bosnian Croats agreed on a draft constitution for a future federation between their peoples in Bosnia.

"Let us hope this is the first major step toward an overall peace agreement," Bosnian Premier Haris Silajdzic said.

U.N. special envoy Yasushi Akashi ordered NATO planes to attack Serb positions near Bihac in northwestern Bosnia on Saturday night following a series of attacks on French positions, U.N. representative Maj. Rob Annink said.

A French soldier was killed in the same area Friday.

Bihac, as well as the desperate Muslim enclave of Maglaj in central Bosnia, was rocked anew by Serb artillery fire early Sunday.

Bosnian radio said the barracks stopped when NATO planes swooped low over the two besieged areas.

U.N. officials later reported the arrival of U.N. observers at Maglaj, where 19,000 people have been under Serb attack since June.

No aid convoy has gotten through since Oct. 25, forcing the enclave to depend on air drops for food and other vital aid.
